2. This is probably the most vital factor: Approximately $4,000 would have to be put up in escrow before February 12 in order to stop the property being advertised for sale.

Approximately $5,000 should be raised in the very near future to get rid of the back taxes. There is a probability that if the money for the same could be made available at once, a deal could be worked out with the tax department by which the penalties could be waived and the taxes cleared for $3,500; an approximate saving of $1,500.

Over the period of a year Al should have approximately $3,000 to $6,000 as working capital and for his expenses. In other words, I am estimating a total of $15,000 to be secured by a first mortgage on the entire property which will represent only one-third of today's value of same.

3. I would suggest formation of a corporation which would acquire title to the property absolutely free and clear except for the T. V. A.'s lease and for this mortgage of $15,000. Al as your representative to hold approximately two-thirds of the stock of such corporation, the present owner of the property one-third. The corporation in my opinion, should be capable of paying off this mortgage within a year's time and make for itself a profit of $30,000 (not necessarily cash profit but a liquid profit). My estimates in this regard are subject to further investigation before anything is done in connection with the matter.

4. The lease which I negotiate will only involve approximately 3 acres of the property and the royalties therefrom would be payable to the corporation. This lease provides for 30 days' exploratory period for us to decide whether the expense of taking slate out would be justifiable, but if we do go ahead at the end of that period, the royalties will not amount to more than $1,000, probably only about $500. (I said I was proud of this deal.) However, the slate to be taken out will be used for roofing the houses in the town we are building at the dam, and of course it means, if the slate is satisfactory, that the advertising alone with the actual opening of the quarry and putting it in such condition that it can be used in the future for this purpose, should considerably enhance the value of the property. Furthermore there is marble on the property which may, in itself, offer profitable opportunities.

5. I should like to discuss this matter with the board of directors of the Authority before proceeding with it and have no doubt that they will approve, but I desire to put myself in a position to avoid any possible criticism.

6. My suggested set-up for the corporation gives the owner much more than he would receive if I really desired to bargain with him, but in my opinion it is fair and is not taking advantage of him, incidentally I have not discussed this with him but I can make the deal.

7. Al would have to promote this proposition on his own initiative, as I could not concentrate on it, and the owner would be useless to him.

8. If the foregoing interests you, I would suggest you wire me to that effect at once, and I shall have the property more than conservatively appraised immediately by our board of appraisal and review, which consists of three men who are the most competent and have had the most experience regarding property in this area that we could find. I shall also have the timber cruise made at once and investigate the offers for purchase of this timber. I shall also obtain maps of the property and a copy of the survey thereof, and the expense of doing these things I can guarantee will not exceed $100. This you will have to pay, as the moving will have me so broke that I will be picking up the pieces for some time to come.

9. If you desire to go into this venture and it should be successful, my remuneration for all and every bit of help I can give to Al in connection therewith and for suggesting it, may be charged off as an attempt to show appreciation for some of the things you have done for me and your forgiveness of Margaret for being such a damn fool as to pick me for a husband.

I realize that the foregoing is not set forth in sufficient detail or accurately enough to permit any final decision. All I am endeavoring to do is to find out whether it would be financially possible and also whether Al would like to tackle it.

Furthermore, any final figures or estimates I give you can be relied on as being the result of conservative and careful investigation, because if you decided to go ahead with this and it flopped I would never dare show my face in your vicinity again.

Sincerely,

J. I. SNYDER.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I asked to have that letter read, as a letter which was alleged to have been written by this man Snyder, and which, in testimony given before the joint congressional committee, he admitted writing, to show the Senate some of the manipulating and finagling which is going on in the T. V. A. by T. V. A. officials, of which some United States Senators must be very proud.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is that an original letter or a copy?

Mr. BRIDGES. It is a copy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator ever seen the original?

Mr. BRIDGES. I have not, but I checked up on it. It was admitted to have been written by Mr. Snyder before the investigating committee.

I ask that a very short letter written by Mr. W. E. Hamilton, of the William E. Hamilton Engineering Co., of Knoxville, Tenn., be read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

WM. E. HAMILTON ENGINEERING CO.,

Knoxville, Tenn., December 2, 1938.

Congressional Investigating Committee for the Tennessee Valley Authority.

GENTLEMEN: The writer has a grievance against the T. V. A. on account of the shameful and illegal treatment he suffered at the hands of a Mr. John I. Snyder, who while on a bountiful salary from the T. V. A. and ostensibly working in the interest of the T. V. A., struck out for himself and attempted to acquire my property by forcing me into the hands of a receiver and then to purchase the property through his father-in-law, for his own account and benefit. He confessed to all this before your committee, a dastardly conceived program which was exposed by his letter to his father-in-law, Mr. Connally, published in the Knoxville Journal on September 3, 1938, a copy of which is herewith enclosed.

This man, Snyder, is still on the pay roll of the T. V. A. at a salary of $8,000. He has no knowledge whatever of slate or slate quarrying and knows nothing about my property. I had never had 10 minutes' conversation and no negotiation with him in regard to my slate property, although he states that he had been negotiating for months to acquire this property and told a number of lies, finally succeeded in putting the property in the hands of a receiver from whom he expected to buy it for the small payment of $4,000 down. He had the stupidity to think that he could purchase this property, which is worth $150,000, and mortgage it for the balance of the purchase price, and made efforts to do this.

I have written a statement of my grievances against this John I. Snyder, representing the T. V. A., and I am preparing a suit against Snyder and the T. V. A. for operating this quarry without any contract and for several other things Snyder was guilty of, together with damages to the property resulting from the ignorance of the employees who were paid $700 by the T. V. A. Along with this there are heavy damages, as Snyder stopped all my business and forced the sale of my property at a price far below its value.

Your investigating committee did not uncover any episode in the multitudinous affairs of the T. V. A. which will hold a candle to this nefarious scheme which this young New York attorney tried to put over, to enable him to acquire for himself this valuable property, ignoring the fact that he was involving the T. V. A. in an unnecessary scandal.

There is an impression here in Knoxville that your committee is attempting to "whitewash" this man Snyder, which I think is not the case. I have been expecting, however, to be called on to reply to him before the committee, and I must protest against this unfair delay and would like to be heard.

Will you please advise me when?

Yours truly,

W. E. HAMILTON.

(Enclosure: Copy of letter published in Knoxville Journal, September 3, 1938.)

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I have before me a schedule of the budget-control account expenditures projected by the T. V. A. for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, amounting to $51,634,500, which, less estimated power sales of $5,000,000, and less other estimated income of $1,000,000, or a total of $6,000,000, gives a total of net projected expenditures or obligations of $45,634,500. Rather than take up too much of the time of the Senate, I ask to have this statement incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the statement may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have before me a letter written to Mr. WOODRUM, chairman of the House Appropriations Subcommittee, by Mr. J. D. Battle, executive secretary of the National Coal Association, which very clearly indicates the inadvisability of going ahead with these dams, both from the point of view of economy and the point of view of the effect that they may have on a great industry, the coal industry of this country. Rather than to burden the Senate with reading this letter, I ask that it may be incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter may be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

JANUARY 26, 1939.

Hon. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM,
Chairman, House Appropriations Subcommittee,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Re T. V. A. appropriation.

MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO FURTHER FUNDS FOR ADDITIONAL HYDRO-POWER DAMS

The bituminous-coal industry and those dependent upon it for their livelihood have strongly opposed the hydroelectric power program of the Tennessee Valley Authority ever since its inception. This opposition rests upon the simple fact that the large increments of electric power that T. V. A. has undertaken to generate and market must inevitably destroy many existing outlets for coal as well as preempt large future markets for coal in the T. V. A. area—being the coal employed in the steam generation of electric power that T. V. A. electric power will supersede.

The loss of these outlets for coal and the resulting closing of mines and the permanent large-scale elimination of jobs in the production and transport of coal is unfortunate and, indeed, disastrous under any circumstances. It is doubly hard to bear when, as is the case here, it comes about through Government action with the aid of subsidies out of the Federal Treasury and when in reality coal offers a more economical medium today for the generation of additional increments of electric power in the Tennessee Valley than the T. V. A. substitute, if the cost of the latter were to be computed at its true total.

The extent of this displacement of coal by T. V. A. hydro-power and the resulting loss in jobs and in wages is a matter of very simple arithmetic. The coal equivalent of 1,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity is 710 tons. That is, the quantity of bituminous coal (at the rate of 1.42 pounds per kilowatt-hour) required to generate that quantity of electricity. T. V. A. reports that it sold 806,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy in the last 6 months of 1938. But that is only a starter. It projects its annual output upon the completion of what it describes as its 10-dam system at 8,100,000,000 kilowatt-hours. Simple multiplication, 8,100 times 710 is 5,751,000 tons of coal prospectively displaced by T. V. A. hydro power.

It has been estimated—and the estimate never challenged—that 1 ton of bituminous coal by the time it reaches its final destination represents 1 day's work and wages for one man. At that rate T. V. A.'s complete electric output in terms of coal will destroy 5,751,000 man-days of employment annually.

At all events we know for a certainty that the coal tonnage as above stated represents more than $11,000,000 to the producers of which 60 percent is labor pay rolls and almost $13,000,000 in railroad freight revenues of which 44 percent is labor pay rolls. So what we are dealing with in this situation is a potential direct wage loss of more than $12,000,000 annually in the mines and on the railroads.

The T. V. A. has now passed from the realm of theory into the realm of fact. It is too late now to undo the mischief already done. The immediate question now before the Congress and the country is simply how far T. V. A. shall be permitted to extend and to expand its hydro power facilities and to what extent its prospective annihilation of coal markets may be checked and limited by appropriate action of the Congress.

This question is concretely presented in the request of T. V. A. for funds to finance the construction of additional hydro-power dams. The purpose of this memorandum is to register the opposition of our industry, and of the half million wage earners engaged in the industry and their families and all of the others whose support is dependent on the mining and transport of coal, to the appropriation of any funds for that purpose.

The appropriation for the T. V. A. now to be made by Congress will determine whether the projected dams at Gilbertsville, Watts bar, and Coulter Shoals shall be constructed and whether the additional hydro power of these three shall be added to the torrent of T. V. A. electricity, which is washing away millions of tons of coal.

These three dams, according to T. V. A.'s own estimates, will have an over-all cost of $166,000,000 and an aggregate installed capacity of 300,000 kilowatts, which means, on the basis of a 60-percent load factor, an annual output of 1,576,800,000 kilowatt-hours.

It is true that in the case of the Gilbertsville project Congress, at the last session, was induced to include in the T. V. A. appropriation a small initial installment for this dam, and T. V. A. reports expenditures already made or contracted on this account of upward of $4,000,000, but we are informed that the money so spent will not constitute a total loss even were the Gilbertsville Dam now to be abandoned, and none of it would be lost if the dam were confined to a navigation project.

It is true that the amount of money sought by T. V. A. in the present appropriation for Gilbertsville, Watts bar, and Coulter Shoals is but $17,000,000—only about 10 percent of the total cost of $166,000,000. But it is hardly necessary to point out that if Congress votes this present appropriation, it is virtually a commitment to provide $150,000,000 additional for these particular dams in the years to come.

This committee and the Congress may very properly consider the question from the economy angle and consider whether this does not present an opportunity to reduce Government spending and the Treasury deficit by the sizable sum of $166,000,000 without the slightest curtailment of what the President has referred to as essential Government services. But we are not arguing that point or resting our objections on that ground.

This committee and the Congress may very properly consider the question of whether these particular T. V. A. hydroelectric power dams are feasible and prudent from the practical standpoint of economical hydro power generation or whether, on the contrary, they are excessively costly. But that is an engineering question and a realm of controversy which we see no need for our industry to enter at this time. We do not rest our objections on that ground.

We are confining our presentation and the reasons why we believe these particular T. V. A. projects should not be sanctioned by the Congress to the single and simple proposition that their construction will further cripple the coal industry in the Tennessee Valley area and add to unemployment in very substantial amounts and aggravate the very conditions in that respect which the Congress and the country are now ostensibly seeking to remedy.

There are four large coal-burning steam plants for the generation of electric power within a hundred-mile radius of two of these proposed T. V. A. dams, Watts bar and Coulter Shoals. These four plants in 1937 generated 337,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity. The figures as to the exact coal tonnage consumed in these four plants in 1937 are not at hand, but taking it on a minimum basis, that is, on the assumption that the power was produced at the present national average of efficiency in steam plants, namely, 1.42 pounds per kilowatt-hour, these four plants absorbed 239,773 tons of coal.

There are six more large steam plants within a 150-mile radius of these projected T. V. A. dams. These six plants generated 648,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity in 1937. Applying the same reckoning to them, this accounted for 460,453 tons of coal.

Taking them together, we find within this 150-mile circle 10 plants, an output of 986,000,000 kilowatt-hours in 1937, upward of 700,000 tons of coal consumed.

These plants by name, electric output, and coal consumption are shown on the photostatic copies of a map which is hereto attached.

With respect to the proposed Gilbertsville Dam, there are more than 25 coal-burning steam plants, large and small, for the generation of electric power (additional to those referred to above) located within 150-mile radius of this new T. V. A. project. These plants had an aggregate output in 1937 of upward of 2,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity. Some of these plants served cities and towns in west Tennessee which are in process of switching to T. V. A. hydro power in any event. The others are in peril but are not yet gone.

It is easy to foresee what will happen to these steam plants and to the coal which they consume each year if and when T. V. A.'s hydro power from these new dams engulfs them. It is hard to see how they can survive in competition with hydro power distributed and sold at a rate which covers no more than one-half of its true cost.

In the light of these facts and for the reasons hereinbefore set forth we most respectfully and earnestly urge that in whatever appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the ensuing fiscal year, your committee may recommend and the Congress may subsequently vote, no funds be included for the Gilbertsville Dam project and for the other two dams above named, and that T. V. A. be enjoined from expending any further moneys on these projects.

Respectfully submitted.

NATIONAL COAL ASSOCIATION.
By J. D. BATTLE, Executive Secretary.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should now like very briefly to call the attention of the Senate to an analysis, based upon the T. V. A.'s own allocation for power, of the cost of production of power per kilowatt. This analysis shows that at Coulter Shoals the cost per installed kilowatt is $184.60; at Watts bar, $158.19; at Norris Dam, $137.34; at Hiwassee Dam, $100.36; at Chickamauga Dam, $215.77; at Guntersville Dam, $249.63; at Wheeler Dam, $123.39; at Wilson Dam, $61.95; at Pickwick Landing Dam, $133.01; at Gilbertsville Dam, $277.05, or an average for the 10 dams of $137.60. Without Gilbertsville, Watts bar, or Coulter Shoals, the average cost per kilowatts would be $116.66. The cost at Gilbertsville, Watts bar, and Coulter Shoals would average $214.49.

It is very plain, and it is well known that the cost per kilowatt for the development of electric power from steam is about $75 per kilowatt, and in rare instances does it exceed $80. We are building up a huge overhead, and each dam we add to the program increases the fundamental cost per kilowatt of production. As I said in the beginning, this analysis is based upon the T. V. A.'s own allocation of power, as revealed in the House hearings. Also, in relation to the coal industry, the annual loss to the coal industry as a result of the complete T. V. A. output will amount to 5,751,000 man-days. I do not happen to come from a coal State, but I know that the coal industry is one of the great sick industries of this country. I know that from time to time this legislative body has had measures before it for the benefit and aid of the coal industry. Yet we are going ahead in a headlong rush to do something which will further hurt and hinder a sick industry.

Rather than take the time to read it, I should like to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a statement

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I think that the groundwork for the T. V. A. situation has been very thoroughly discussed. I believe that we have in the Tennessee Valley a great experiment, which was set up originally along certain definite lines, for flood control, navigation, and power. I think that it is probably a fine objective to have this project as a yardstick. I am not opposed to it as a yardstick, but I want it to be an honest yardstick rather than a deceptive yardstick.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

showing the tax losses by local, State, and Federal Governments by Tennessee Valley Authority purchases of privately-owned electric utilities, utilities which have been purchased or are in the process of purchase. The annual loss to the Federal Government will amount to $1,204,346, and to the State of Tennessee, $3,480,706.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the statement may be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

TAX LOSSES BY LOCAL, STATE, AND FEDERAL GOVERNMENTS BY TENNESSEE

VALLEY AUTHORITY PURCHASES OF PRIVATELY OWNED ELECTRIC UTILITIES

The attached table shows the estimate tax revenues in the State of Tennessee of some six corporations whose electric utility properties have been or are about to be purchased by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The figures are taken from the sworn testimony admitted without challenge as to accuracy by the Federal courts in recent litigation.

The Federal Government will lose $1,204,346 annually, as follows:

Income tax.....	$653,524
Capital-stock tax.....	54,722
3 percent gross energy tax.....	385,850
Social-security tax.....	78,719
All other taxes.....	31,531

The State of Tennessee will lose $3,480,706 annually, as follows:

Real and personal property tax.....	$2,541,497
All other State and local taxes.....	939,209

Thus the total tax loss to State and Nation in this one State amounts to $4,685,000 annually. This figure is essentially correct but from it must be deducted approximately 10 percent allowance for certain bus and streetcar lines and one gas system not included in T. V. A. purchases.

In addition T. V. A. has announced plans for the ultimate purchase of 1,000,000 acres of land for reservoir and other purposes. The price will average about $50 per acre. Additional hundreds of thousands of tax dollars will be lost from this source.

Compensating for the tax losses it creates, T. V. A., under its enabling act, must make a "contribution" of 5 percent of its gross sales to the States in which such sales are made. In 1937 the electric utilities involved here paid to the Federal Government on the excise tax of 3 percent on gross energy a total of $385,850 (estimated). On the basis of the same rates as are now charged by these companies (although T. V. A. rates are about one-third lower) a 5-percent tax return on the same volume would yield to the State of Tennessee $643,000—as against $3,480,000 paid by private utilities.

Mr. McKELLAR. In reference to the Snyder letter, does the Senator know that just a few days—probably within a week—after the letter was written, Mr. Snyder sent his father-in-law a telegram canceling the letter and telling him not to consider it at all?

Mr. BRIDGES. No; I do not know that. However, I presume that he was found out, and took the easy way out.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a fact that he sent a telegram. He knew that the letter was indiscreet, and within 2 or 3 days, or within a week, at all events, a telegram was sent asking his father-in-law not to consider the letter. Does the Senator know that the letter does not refer to any dam on the Tennessee River? It refers to a place on one of the tributaries, and nothing has ever been done with the project.

Mr. BRIDGES. I know that it must hurt the distinguished Senator from Tennessee to have to come to the defense of this man.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not hurt me in the least. I hope the Senator will fill the Record with such claptrap as that. It does not hurt at all. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to have the Senator put such things in the Record.

Mr. BRIDGES. I admit it is claptrap. I put it in the Record merely to show what is passing through the minds of some of the chief officials of the T. V. A. and what they are engaged in. I am glad to have the Senator defend Mr. Snyder.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will again yield, the committee had that question before it and went into it fully. It obtained all the facts. Does the Senator mean to impeach the joint committee of the Senate and the House which has already passed upon this question? The Senator brings in only the letter. He does not bring in the telegram, which is in the Record. All the facts are in the Record. The Senator brings in only one side, and that is the landowner's side.

Mr. BRIDGES. I know, of course, that the Senator from Tennessee is very anxious, eager, and competent to present the other side.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall try to do it.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think the Senator always does it very well.

So long as the Senator is talking about the investigation conducted by a joint committee I will say to the Senator that I think the counsel for the committee, who certainly conducted himself in the T. V. A. investigation in a very one-sided way from my point of view, has been very amply rewarded by the President of the United States in his appointment as a United States judge. I am glad to see that the New Deal stands by its friends, which is very evident as the result of this appointment.

Mr. President, I leave this issue with the statement that I favor the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. I should go a step further than the Senator from Colorado in that I should eliminate Gilbertsville Dam from the bill. The House has indicated, by very strong evidence, its feeling on this matter, and I believe the Senate could very properly follow the action of the House. I realize that the T. V. A. has very ardent champions in this body, and I am not quarreling with the project from the standpoint of flood control, navigation, or as a yardstick, when figures are produced which are accurate and not confusing. However, when we need economy in America, and when the integrity and the solvency of our Nation may be involved as a result of the spending spree through which we are going today in going forward with the authorization of three dams which are absolutely not needed, I am opposed to their construction, and I do not believe any evidence has been introduced which proves conclusively that they are needed.

Therefore, Mr. President, I shall support the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to discuss this matter very briefly from a somewhat different point of view. This bill and this particular item in the bill invite a few general observations regarding the fiscal and economic state of the Union.

Regardless of the intrinsic merits of new Federal enterprises and expenditures, it is my view that, unless something happens to arrest our spending trend, we may be headed pell-mell either for suicidal inflation or for bankruptcy. I do not propose to have any part in that responsibility if I can help it.

I welcome the suggestion that the new Secretary of Commerce has undertaken a program of "appeasement" in respect to private business, so that, at last, there may be effective cooperation to give private business a decent chance to live and to substitute private spending for public spending; but, Mr. President, neither the efforts of the Secretary of Commerce nor the admonitions of the President nor any other efforts of this nature and character can hope to succeed so long as the public credit itself is endangered. You cannot build a sound superstructure upon a sinking base.

This bill is the first of 10 or a dozen general annual supply bills. It appropriates for just a small sector of the swollen Federal machine a total of nearly $1,700,000,000. That is 50 percent more in this one bill than all the Federal income taxes paid by every income in the land in excess of $5,000. As if to present indisputable evidence that the spending spree is not abating—and that is the new administration formula outlined in the latest annual Presidential message of January 4, 1939—to prove that the spree is not abating, this one supply bill is $206,000,000 larger than the same bill last year.

Of course, there will be other appropriation bills, regular and special. It was announced by the Treasury last Friday that it had paid out in the first 7½ months of the present fiscal year $90,000,000 more than the estimated Treasury receipts for the whole 12 months.

In other words, every Federal penny spent from February 15 to June 30 is deficit spending. It is money we have not got and cannot get; it is added to the public debt, which already is soaring past $40,000,000,000. If expenditures for the fiscal year reach $9,500,000,000 by June 30, as estimated by the Treasury—and they will probably be much more—the annual deficit will then be $4,000,000,000.

In spite of all the wishful thinking, modeled after the Presidential message of January 4, 1939, wherein, for the first time in 6 years, the Chief Executive frankly abandoned his previous annual but always sterile promise of a balanced Budget "just around the corner," in spite of all the comforting Pollyanna nonsense that we can spend ourselves out of debt and into prosperity, the nagging voice of common sense whispers a sinister warning in the other ear that Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt was right upon a different occasion when he said on July 30, 1932:

Any government, like any family, can for a year spend a little more than it earns; but you and I know that a continuation of that habit means the poorhouse.

We have had the habit for about 10 years; and that which once was condemned by Mr. Roosevelt as Governor as a vice is now embraced by him at present as a virtuous course of action; that which was once to be avoided as "the road to bankruptcy"—and those are his words, not mine—is now to be pursued as the essence of statesmanship and solvency.

Yes; and we are hearing a great deal about the new need these days for tremendously strengthened national defense. The greatest element, the most indispensable factor in national defense is a sound public credit. You can fool yourself all you please about the soundness of our public credit as tested by the cheap interest rates for money which flows into Government bonds simply because there is no other place for it to flow, but the public credit is not sound if a nation is "on the road to bankruptcy." Those were Mr. Roosevelt's words 6 years ago to describe deficit spending which involved only pin money as compared with deficit spending today.

On the eve of his departure last week for the Caribbean, the President assured business and industry—I quote from the Associated Press—

They have nothing to fear in the way of new and heavier taxes.

God knows they need that assurance, but they need it with something more than pleasant phrases which "keep the word of promise to the ear and break it to the hope." They need to know that such a promise can be kept. How can it be kept if deficit spending, at the rate of $4,000,000,000 a year, shall continue? How can it be kept if the spending tempo carries on? How can it be kept except at the expense of an ultimate inflation which will be worse in its effects? As a matter of fact, in at least one specific instance, it cannot be kept at all unless the administration abandons its refusal to rewrite title II of the Social Security Act, under which payroll taxes will automatically increase 50 percent next year.

It is the sum total of all taxes, which is one of the major burdens now retarding reemployment and crushing down both industry and agriculture. Every appropriation finally means a tax, and the time to remember it is when the appropriations are made. Mr. Roosevelt was eternally right when he said at Pittsburgh, on October 19, 1932:

Taxes are paid in the sweat of every man who labors, because they are a burden on production and are paid through production. If those taxes are excessive, they are reflected in idle factories, in tax-sold farms, and in hordes of hungry people, tramping the streets and seeking jobs in vain.

Are taxes any less excessive than they were when Mr. Roosevelt was condemning them in 1932? Mr. President, the contemplation in the Nation as a whole is nothing short of appalling. The total cost of government—National, State, and local—in 1937—and it is greater now than it was then—was seventeen and a half billion dollars. How much is seventeen and a half billion dollars? It is the total annual income enjoyed that same year by all the people in the States of Washington, Oregon, California, Idaho, Nevada, Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, and Arkansas. The total income of that great group of States is required to build the treasuries of National, State, and local governments merely to pay the bill of government for 1 year.

How much longer can that enormous nonproductive absorption of the national income continue? Every dollar of the wealth produced in the area which I have described, which is the largest geographical half of the United States, would be insufficient at this time to pay just the cost of government. Yet the cost rolls merrily on into ever-larger figures and ever-increasing jeopardy.

In 1913 the cost of all government in the United States was $34 per family. Now it is $540 per family. The cost of all government is more than the year's yield from soil and earth—crops, livestock, metals, coal, oil, and lumber. It is more than we spend for food, clothing, and rent. And Washington sets the pace. If we were to confiscate every dollar of every American income in excess of $5,000, as shown by the income-tax returns, it would not pay the bill for the Federal Government this year alone.

Now, let me quote Mr. Roosevelt again in—what shall I say?—his "horse and buggy" days. This is what Governor Roosevelt said in 1932:

I know something of taxes. For 3 long years I have been going up and down the country preaching that government—Federal, State, and local—costs too much. I shall not stop that preaching. I propose to you, my friends, and through you, that government of all kinds, big and little, be made solvent and that the example be set by the President of the United States and his Cabinet. This, I pledge to you, and nothing in this campaign transcends in importance this covenant with the taxpayers of this country.

I do not quote this to chide him for a broken promise. I quote it as the key to his Presidential policy for perhaps 4 months after his inauguration—4 months which saw him courageously pursuing these economies—4 months which found a well-nigh united Congress and country behind him in these efforts—and, what is more important and desperately significance, 4 months which probably registered the greatest economic recovery in the United States ever known to any people in any like period in the history of the world.

Solvency and confidence. Those were the keys to recovery then. They are still the keys to recovery today. The tragedy of it is that the keys seem to have been deliberately thrown away. The necessity is to find and use them once again.

The spending that is necessary in this country in order to put 12,000,000 unemployed back to work is private spending, not public spending. From 1919 to 1929 there was spent in this country for producers' durable goods and privately financed construction alone a total of $210,000,000,000, or an average of $19,000,000,000 a year. But in the 4 years from 1932 to 1935 this amount has dropped drastically to four and one-half billion dollars a year. We are still in that category. There is the primary and major loss. It is nearly fifteen billions a year. Deficit spending, even at the alarming pace of four billions a year, cannot possibly be a substitute. There is no substitute. Furthermore, the Government's deficit spending is pretty generally conceded to discourage private investment. Our net deficit from 1931 to 1938 actually totaled more than all the deficits of all the other nations of all the world combined for the same period; but it did not bring back the private spending of the Nation's enterprisers, the Nation's investors, the Nation's plant managers. That requires, first of all, confidence—real confidence—and confidence is not induced by the spectacle of an improvident government. That is the great stake which the unemployed themselves have in every effort to bring Federal income and outgo at least within speaking distance of each other.

A recent well-established clinic upon this subject in Fortune magazine came to these conclusions, in part:

- (1) That the fiscal policy of the administration has brought with it a failure in business confidence.
- (2) That the spirit of enterprise languishes largely because of the belief that the administration does not really care about the system of private enterprise.
- (3) That these intangible concomitants of the spending program should be at once corrected.
- (4) That public spending should indeed be used to counterbalance the business cycle.
- (5) But that this should be done within the framework of a periodically balanced Budget and a dependable debt-retirement plan.

Oh, but they say, "You cannot balance the Budget today. It is impossible. Where and how would you do it?"

Let us be entirely frank about that. I do not believe we can actually balance the Federal Budget this year or next. We have created too many new instrumentalities of Government in recent years, many of which are sound in principle and which the people would not permit to be abandoned. But we can stop the creation of new instrumentalities where we are; we can quit making new ones until we have caught up with the bills for those now existing; we can postpone every new governmental enterprise not immediately essential and provably indispensable; and we can clean house, wherever possible, in respect to existing undertakings. An evidence of a real will to thrift, an evidence of a dependable conservation purpose, will go far toward anticipating the solvency and stimulating the confidence which this national crisis so badly needs.

I think there is something to the theory that we must have an $80,000,000,000 country in terms of annual income in order to sustain the Government structure and the Government services now demanded by the people, because it is not easy to see how we can close the unavoidable portion of the budgetary gap without increased revenue from increased wealth rather than from increased taxes. But, in my humble opinion, it never will be done on the present formula of trying to stretch sixty billions into eighty billions by spending the difference; and even on the present spending formula, if we ever thus became an $80,000,000,000 country we should then discover that our new debts had piled up a burden which required a $100,000,000,000 country to carry. In other words, it would always be a fruitless stern chase—just one jump ahead of the sheriff.

So whatever theory any of us may adopt—whether Roosevelt-Ecclesiastes, or the simple arithmeticians who still think 2 and 2 make 4, whichever school we join—I submit that there is a common need to put on the brakes. Otherwise we are headed for a crash. The very least we can do is to reject or postpone all new subsidies and to withhold, at least for the time being, all new social services and new governmental enterprises until we have found a way to pay for those already in existence which merit continuation.

There would be no advantage for anybody from any of these increased facilities if we should destroy a solvent society and a sound economy in which to enjoy them. There can be no compensation for tax burdens that kill industry and agriculture, or for interminable deficits that kill confidence and recovery. As President Roosevelt, with high courage and intelligence, said once upon a time:

Most liberal governments are wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policy; we must avoid this danger.

And I mean to avoid it in every vote that I cast.

Therefore, though the pending items are relatively small—for what are a few million dollars, more or less, in this weltering debt—I shall vote against them under the rule which I have announced for myself.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I desire to make a few observations in relation to this debate.

For several days I have listened to the arguments pro and con. As I understand the situation, under House bill 3743 the amount fixed by the House was $21,797,000, and now the Senate committee has raised the amount for the T. V. A. to $39,003,000. Of this $39,003,000, the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has moved to strike out the item of $4,252,000 allotted for starting work on the new Watts bar dam.

I understand from the remarks of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] that the cost of the Gilbertsville Dam likewise should be removed; and we have just heard the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] give an exposition as to why we should not vote these items.

It is practically conceded that the whole project is camouflaged under the theory that it is to improve navigation and provide flood control; that it is, in fact and in deed, a power project; and the recent purchase by the Government of the Willkie interests confirms that conclusion.

I think, in the first place, it was a mistake for the Government to get into the power business. But we are in the business now, as the clothing merchant told the bank, after the bank had financed him, that the bank was in the clothing business. The real issue, as I see it now, is this: Is there a need for these two additional dams, Gilbertsville and Watts bar? If there is such a need, is it an immediate need? If it is not an immediate need, then should we, under the present circumstances, go ahead, keep piling debt on debt, and putting the people more and more into a hole?

Personally, I think the people of the country are interested in the larger question which will grow out of this matter, and that is, Are we to go on, under the camouflage of flood control and improvement of navigation, and continue to get the Government more and more into business in competition with the citizens of the Nation? And if the Government gets more and more into competitive business with its citizens, shall that business be conducted on a business basis, so that the Government has no special privileges, or will the people's money be put into Government ventures so these ventures can cutthroat the interests of the people who have their money in private ventures?

The people in the various States of the Union are becoming extremely concerned about the constant increase in the national debt, as was so ably stated by the Senator from Michigan. We spend money here like water, and it is very difficult for the farmer and the businessman to keep his head above water. The distinguished Senator from Colorado expressed the wish of the people of the Nation when he said that it was time "to start toward economy." It was quite clearly demonstrated by the Senator from Ohio that the value of the Gilbertsville Dam as a flood-control measure is practically nil.

Speaking of the Gilbertsville Dam, as I understand the situation, if we make an appropriation, estimated at $12,000,000 at this time, we will have just begun to spend, because the cost, as stated yesterday, would be some $95,000,000. Are we going ahead and build that dam, or are we not?

As there appears to be no need, except to provide, according to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, continuous work for some 400 men—I understand that there are some 500 men now on the T. V. A. projects who are receiving $5,000 a year or more in salary—and as it appears there is no great value from the standpoint of flood control, and so far as I can ascertain the construction of these dams would not provide any additional income to be derived from the electric power that is to be sold by the T. V. A., it would seem that the conclusion of both the Democratic Senator from Colorado and the Republican Senator from Ohio should be sustained.

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not desire to take very much time in covering territory which has been so frequently covered during the last 4 or 5 years in the discussion of the Tennessee Valley Authority. I would not have taken any time at all except for what I regard as some very erroneous statements and conclusions which have been submitted to the Senate during this discussion.

When I first came to Congress and for many years thereafter I was interested in having carried out an obligation which Congress entered into many years ago regarding the improvement of the Ohio River from Pittsburgh to Cairo for purposes of navigation. Congress committed itself to that proposal, and it took twenty-odd years, by the process of annual appropriations, to complete the construction of more than 50 locks and dams in the Ohio River between Pittsburgh and Cairo in order to insure a 9-foot stage for navigation during the entire year.

The logic behind that program I then thought and now think was sound, because men would not invest their money in steamboat lines which could operate only 5 or 6 months during the year. The improvement came too late to preserve the steamship lines which already existed on the Ohio River, because they gradually disappeared, for the same reason that caused the disappearance of navigation to a certain extent on the Tennessee River, since men go into business in order to make profit. They are not in business for charity; they do not invest their money in enterprises, except in very rare instances, unless there is hope at least that they will make dividends and profits out of their investments. Men would not any longer risk their money in enterprises which could operate only one-half time. It was for that reason that, over a long period of years, Congress having committed itself to the improvement of the navigation on the Ohio River, it completed it by the building of more than 50 locks and dams.

I may say in this connection that every city and town on the Ohio River was interested in the completion of that improvement.

Every year the Ohio Valley Improvement Association met in various places all the way from Pittsburgh to Cairo, in order to keep active the interest in the valley and to have that interest reflected in the action of Congress. It is to the credit of the Congress of the United States and the United States Government that that promise was kept, that the Ohio River has been afforded a 9-foot stage all the year, and that since its completion river navigation has materially increased on the Ohio River.

The Congress in 1933 passed the T. V. A. Act, nearly 6 years ago, and it has been amended since. I think Congress is just as much committed to the completion of the Tennessee River project as it was to the Ohio River project, although there are different phases of the two projects, that on the Ohio being purely for navigation, while that on the Tennessee River combines navigation, flood control, and power.

I can well understand that there are Senators who think this project ought never to have been begun, but Congress thought otherwise, and passed the law. The testimony of the engineers shows that the dams which have been completed and those which are in contemplation will cost $420,000,000, $220,000,000 of which has already been expended. So that we are now in the very middle of the completion of this project, to which Congress committed itself 4 or 5 years ago.

It seems to me it would be just as unbusinesslike and just as foolish to stop the completion of this project in the very middle as it would for a man to start to erect a house and when he got up to the second story abandon it, unless circumstances were such as to force him to do it, which sometimes occurs. Everyone understands, whether he is for or against the T. V. A., that the full benefit of the T. V. A. project cannot be realized by the Tennessee Valley or the Ohio Valley or by the Mississippi Valley until it is complete from beginning to end, including all the dams contemplated, those which have been constructed, and those which are now under construction and are involved in this bill.

I realize that for the purposes of power alone the demand that has been developed up to date might be satisfied by the power constructions already installed, because the testimony shows that there is now being sold to the public in the Tennessee Valley, within the radius which can be served by the Tennessee Valley Authority, about all the power which is produced, but more power can be generated when a greater market is developed for it, even with the present depth of water.

Mr. President, admitting, for the sake of argument, that for power purposes the entire cost of the dams up to now would not be wasted if the Government proceeded no further, yet it would be extremely unwise and unbusinesslike for the Government to consider such a course. We have heard a great deal of argument about the generation of power by the Government and about the competition created in the field of private enterprise by the development of these power sites. If all the power of all the rivers of the United States were developed to fullest capacity today it would not serve more than one-tenth of the demand for power in the United States. So the fear that the construction of dams on the Tennessee River, or on any other river, or on all of our rivers combined, may affect the total consumption of power in this country seems to me to be a bugaboo, an exaggeration, and an imaginary multiplication of difficulties which will never arise.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I understood the Senator to indicate by his statement that only 10 percent of the total consumption of power is possible of development on all the rivers of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. The information which I have received from authorities whom I think are reliable, is that if all the power that is possible of development on all the rivers of the country were developed it would amount to only about one-tenth of the power developed and used in regions where there is no water power.

Mr. WALSH. Has the Senator any information as to the extent of the power developments that have been undertaken on the rivers of the country by the Government or by private companies?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not have such information. I will say to the Senator. Those developments are isolated.

They cannot include the development of a whole river. They have to be local, because there is no organization with which I have any familiarity that has the financial power or the financial backing to develop more than one power site at a time, if at all.

Mr. WALSH. I have been interested in the flood-control projects of New England. As the Senator knows, under the flood-control laws of 1936 and 1938 the Army engineers must submit to the Federal Power Commission a statement of the reservoirs and dams they are constructing so as to determine whether or not power developments are possible. Of the large number of reservoirs they are contemplating building I am surprised to find that the possibility of power exists only in three, and it is not very extensive either in those three dams.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the flood-control acts and under the Power Act as originally enacted and as amended, I think all these developments have to be submitted to the Federal Power Commission to determine whether there is available power, so that if there is, that fact may be anticipated in the construction of the dams.

Mr. WALSH. And the dams must be so built that they can be converted into power producers if necessary.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. I have been under the impression, as I think the general public has, that in various parts of the country there are watersheds and rivers capable of producing a great deal of power which have not been developed. What is the Senator's view of that suggestion?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it is true that as science progresses and new devices are invented it may be possible in the future to develop more power from any given river than is now believed to be possible. It depends a good deal, of course, on the topography of the country, the flow of the water, the fall in the river, and all the things that enter into the matter of power as water goes over turbines and other devices which are supposed to reflect power.

Mr. WALSH. And also on a navigable river the maintenance of navigation has to be considered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. In such cases power could only be incidental.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. And I thank the Senator for his interruption.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I should like to ask the able Senator a question. When we speak of cost in connection with power developments is it not correct to say that over a long term of years all power developments are self-liquidating?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I think they are. If they were not self-liquidating, and if they could not be made self-liquidating, private capital would never enter upon such projects; they would not invest money in an enterprise upon which they could not hope at least to receive an adequate reward, and probably finally recapture the amount of money invested.

I mention this power situation because it seems to me that there is lingering in the minds of some of our colleagues the fear that the Government is going to take over all power possibilities in the future, and what I am trying to emphasize is that if the Government were to do it in all the rivers that are available, it would provide only a small proportion of the power necessary to serve the people of the United States.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Is it not true that the present shortage of power in the United States presents such a problem, from the standpoint of national defense, that the President of the United States has appointed a committee headed by the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Louis Johnson, to study the subject, determine what can be done, and make recommendations looking to an increase in the development and generation of power?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is correct, and I thank him for the reminder that the President has appointed such a body to look into the question purely as a matter of defense in case of difficulty between our country and any other nation.

The only question involved in the particular pending amendment has to do with beginning or continuing the construction of Watts bar dam in Tennessee. However, inasmuch as the Gilbertsville Dam in Kentucky has been prominently brought into the debate, I wish to mention that, in order, if I can, to allay the fears of some of our friends who are opposed to the construction of the dam, and opposed to the entire enterprise.

The debate has been enlightening. It has brought forth a new theory of engineering, to the effect that water will run up hill, and that the higher a dam is built the less water it will impound. That theory has been advanced in the debate on this particular amendment. We have been frightened by the prediction of earthquakes brought to that region of the United States by the construction of a dam at Gilbertsville. I am not a seismologist.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator will remember that when Congress passed the Boulder Dam bill, seismologists by the wholesale predicted that that dam would go out as the result of an earthquake.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes. The Boulder Dam is much nearer to the center of earthquakes in this country than is Gilbertsville or the Tennessee Valley. There has been no untoward event in the West because of the construction of Boulder Dam.

I am perfectly willing to dismiss the subject of Gilbertsville so far as power is concerned, although some of our colleagues will vote against it because it holds out a threat of power, and others are against it because they say it is of no benefit whatever and is no good as a power dam. The discussion reminds me very much of the story of the man who, while chopping down a tree, killed his favorite dog. Thinking he might salvage something, he skinned the dog and took the hide to a hide dealer.

He said to the hide dealer, "Do you buy dog hides?"

The hide dealer said, "Yes."

The man said, "I have one here."

The dealer said, "Was it a fat dog or a lean dog?"

The man said, "It was the fattest dog I ever saw."

"Well," said the hide dealer, "we do not pay much for fat-dog hides."

The man said, "Well, it was not so damned fat as you might suppose." [Laughter.]

Some are opposed to Gilbertsville Dam because it holds out the threat of power, and others are opposed to it because it is no good as a power dam. No matter what the reason may be, some are opposed to it, I imagine, because they are opposed to the entire development.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the Senator leaves Watts bar dam, let me say that it is likewise a water-storage dam.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I am coming to Watts bar in a moment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have been informed that in time of flood the proposed dam will hold back enough water to keep the lower Mississippi from rising as much as 3 or 4 feet. Is that correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. So the engineers testified. The chief engineer of the T. V. A. was formerly an Army engineer. He has cooperated with and worked with the Army engineers. He has also been engaged in private engineering. He impressed me as being one of the most competent engineers of whom I have any knowledge. He has been with the T. V. A. since 1935. His testimony shows that even in 1937, when the terrific flood occurred in the Ohio Valley, with the imperfect state of completion of the dams in the Tennessee River, the flood stage at Paducah and Cairo was lowered by anywhere from 6 inches to 1 foot, and that when the entire project is completed it will mean a difference of about 3½ feet in the stage of water at Cairo, Ill., and a similar stage up the Ohio as far as Paducah, 40 miles up the Ohio River, and, of course, for many miles down the Mississippi below Cairo.

The Senator understands the topography of the country in that section, and the confluence of the rivers. The Tennessee River is a long river; it is a large river. At Paducah, where it empties into the Ohio River, it is wider than the Ohio River itself at Cincinnati.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator has answered my question. May I ask another?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I shall be glad to have the Senator ask another question.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am told also that if there had been a dam at the site that could have held back enough water to prevent the lower Mississippi from rising higher than a foot lower than the stage it reached, there would have been no disastrous flood on the lower Mississippi.

Mr. BARKLEY. According to the engineers, if the dam at Gilbertsville had been in existence in 1937, it would have held back enough water to lower the stage of water at Cairo by not less than 2 feet, or perhaps 2½ feet. Inasmuch as most of the water in the Mississippi below Cairo comes out of the Ohio River, the dam would have affected the flood in the Mississippi Valley below Cairo by anywhere from 1½ to 2 or 2½ feet. Lowering the flood stage on the Mississippi River by that much would have meant the difference between safety and disaster to thousands and thousands of persons, and probably would have made unnecessary breaking the sluice wall for the dam near New Madrid, on the Missouri side of the Mississippi River.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Has the Senator any information as to what damage that flood caused?

Mr. BARKLEY. The best estimate I have been able to arrive at—and I arrived at it from all kinds of sources, including General Markham, the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army—is that the Ohio River flood caused damage estimated at approximately $400,000,000. Immediately after the floodwaters went down I made a trip by automobile with General Markham from Cairo, Ill., to Huntington, W. Va., a distance of between 600 and 700 miles, stopping at every community which had been damaged, to try to find out what could be done to protect it. I wish to say that I have never known an Army officer or a civilian engineer who had a more sympathetic outlook on the problem of flood control than had General Markham.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I agree with the Senator. He is a great engineer.

Mr. BARKLEY. He is a great engineer and a great humanitarian.

As I say, the estimate of damage done by the Ohio River flood is about $400,000,000. Of course, that damage included the Ohio Valley and the Mississippi Valley below Cairo. If it had not been for the fact that there was practically no water in the upper Mississippi above Cairo—and that was an unusual occurrence—there is no way to estimate the amount of damage beyond $400,000,000 which would have resulted in the lower Mississippi Valley, because if the Mississippi River had been full from Cairo to Minneapolis and St. Paul, the flow below Cairo, where the Ohio River empties into it, probably would have been several feet more than occurred in 1937.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. At that time we had 27 dams between the mouth of the Illinois and the city of Minneapolis, most of which were completed.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct. However, the water conditions at that time were such that there was no flood stage in the upper Mississippi River, which greatly relieved the conditions below Cairo.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The point just brought out by the able senior Senator from Minnesota in regard to the enormous cost of the flood, the estimate of which was given by the Senator from Kentucky, would seem to justify the cost of the entire building project and more. Shall we charge up against those who oppose these projects the damage that could have been prevented?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator's question is not only pertinent but almost answers itself, because it is utterly impossible for those communities, when waters far beyond their control sweep upon them, either to protect themselves against the floods or to reimburse themselves for the damage done.

If more than $400,000,000 worth of property is damaged and destroyed in the Ohio Valley in 1 year by one flood lasting about 30 days, not to mention the danger to the lives of millions of our people, how much damage would be spread out over a period of years when these floods come almost annually?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. For the purpose of the Record, I desire to say that floods have recurred in the lower Mississippi River for many years. I suppose the damage which has been done cannot be estimated. A few years ago we passed an act based upon the theory that floods could not be controlled by building levees on the lower Mississippi; and Congress changed its policy as to flood control, based on the knowledge that the old system of controlling floods in the lower Mississippi was a failure, and that in order to avoid damage we must hold water back up the river and on the tributaries in order to prolong the flow of the water and keep down the flood. So, it would seem to me, from the standpoint of flood control alone, that this dam would be entirely worth while, irrespective of what it might do for power and navigation; and I do not underestimate the importance of navigation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's contribution, and I agree with his conclusions.

I should like to read very briefly from the testimony before the committee. Colonel Parker, chief engineer, was testifying, and he said:

There is no longer any legitimate doubt as to the necessity for the construction of storage reservoirs on the Ohio River and its tributaries in order to supplement the protection afforded to the lower Mississippi Valley by the existing levee system. This point should not be misunderstood. There is no suggestion that the levee system should be discontinued or curtailed. It must be maintained and strengthened wherever possible; but it is now generally conceded that the protection afforded thereby is insufficient and must be supplemented in the only feasible way, i. e., by the construction of storage reservoirs at available sites on the tributaries of the Mississippi system.

The report of the Chief of the Army Engineers of April 6, 1937, set forth in Committee Document No. 1, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, states the facts simply.

I quote from the report of the Chief of Engineers for 1937:

The present levees on the Mississippi are about as high as it is desirable to construct them. An increase in the height accentuates the danger of a crevasse and its consequences, besides presenting a serious hazard of subsidence in the soft ground which they must occasionally cross. Additional safety should be sought rather in the continuation of the program for improving the flood discharge capacity of the river channel and in reducing peak discharge by the construction of reservoirs.

That is the report not of the T. V. A. engineer but of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army less than 2 years ago, who states that in order to protect even the lower Mississippi Valley the levees cannot be built any higher, but it is necessary to resort to the construction of reservoirs at convenient and suitable places on the tributaries of the Mississippi system. That means on the Ohio; it means on all the rivers that are tributary to the Ohio; it means the Tennessee; it means all the tributaries as far back as they may influence the flow of waters during flood season.

Now I desire to quote further from the testimony of Colonel Parker:

The importance of this reservoir protection is further illustrated by the fact that the Army engineers are now recommending the immediate construction of reservoirs on the Ohio River system for this purpose.

And that is true.

It is obvious that such storage reservoirs should be located so as to control the run-off from those rivers which make the principal contribution to Mississippi floods. It is an undisputed fact of record that the Ohio River system, including the Tennessee, makes the largest contribution to such floods. It is equally obvious that reservoirs should be located as close as possible to the points to be protected; and the most effective sites for this purpose are located on the lower tributaries of the Ohio close to Cairo.

Those are the words of the chief engineer of the Tennessee Valley Authority, fortified by the report of the Chief of the Army Engineers made less than 2 years ago, that, in order to effect flood control in the regions where the greatest damage occurs, the levees cannot any longer be built higher, but it is necessary to resort to holding back the waters above the levees, and as engineering experts they say that the place to locate these reservoirs is as near as possible to the seat of danger, and they specify the Ohio and the Tennessee.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator have any estimate of the amount of money that the Federal Government has had to spend for relief because of floods on the lower Mississippi during the last 30 or 40 years?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not have those figures, but it is an enormous amount, and it has not always been represented by cash outlay either. It has been represented in the furnishing of supplies and food and clothing and tents and various kinds of equipment by the Army, by the Navy, and by the Coast Guard, and while the Red Cross is not a governmental institution, the money that it obtains and dispenses comes from the same people who support the Government.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There was a great flood during the Hoover administration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes, and as I recall, Mr. Hoover made a trip to the scene.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. And Congress made an appropriation for the relief of the sufferers from that flood. I do not remember the amount.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes, and that has been done from time to time.

There is, of course, a serious question involved. I am not sufficiently competent to cite comparative figures as to whether it is cheaper to build protective devices that will save the lives and property of the people or to neglect them and then from year to year appropriate enormous sums in order to take care of flood victims after they have been driven from their homes and their property has been destroyed. I believe that it is the duty of the Government of the United States, which is the only organization through which the people can speak effectively, not only to protect them against floods and other disasters, but I think it is just as much the duty of the Government to encourage the development of one natural resource as it is another, and water certainly is a natural resource. There is much more to the same effect in the testimony, but I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate in discussing it.

The pending amendment proposes to strike out the item with reference to Watts bar dam. I do not know that any Senator is going to offer a motion to strike the item for the Gilbertsville Dam; I hope not; but I am not interested in Gilbertsville alone. I would be ashamed of myself if I exerted my efforts here in behalf of a dam that happens to be close to my home and should not in the same degree exert myself in behalf of a dam a thousand or two thousand miles away from my home which is of just as much importance to those in the community affected as the one in my neighborhood is to my community. Ever since I have been a Member of the House of Representatives and ever since I have been a Member of this body I have never denied to any community in the United States, no matter how far removed, my support in behalf of any device or any protection or any enterprise that might make them more able to live in peace and to have the assurance that they had a government that was interested in the welfare of every community in the United States.

I lay down the proposition that this entire project ought to be completed from beginning to end, and it cannot be completed and will never be completed without the Gilbertsville Dam, on which five and one-half million dollars have already been spent.

I drove to Gilbertsville during last Christmas week. It is 23 miles from where I live. I had been there a year before, when the engineers were in there and soundings and borings were being made in the effort to find the most available and safest location for the dam, which had been originally projected for a site 20 miles up the river, at Aurora first, by a private power company. It was realized, after the T. V. A. took over the Tennessee River, that the Tennessee River could not exist half public and half private, and the T. V. A. negotiated with the private power company to ascertain how much they had invested. The private company welcomed an amicable settlement; the T. V. A. paid those who were interested in the private power company and in the location of the private dam what they had spent up to that time during the course of 5 years of surveys and preliminary work looking to the construction of the dam.

The site of the dam was moved down the river about 20 miles for two reasons. One was that it was thought a better location and a better foundation could be found nearer the mouth of the river and also that the construction of the dam nearer the mouth of the river would obviate the construction of another dam which was in contemplation at that time. As I have said, I visited Gilbertsville during last Christmas week. The T. V. A. have taken over the town of Gilbertsville; they have built a waterworks system, including two enormous water tanks, one on the east side and one on the west side of the Tennessee River. They have moved from Pickwick Landing Dam more than 60 houses by putting them on barges and moving them down the river to Gilbertsville, where the houses have been relocated for the use of those who are to work on the Gilbertsville Dam.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at that point?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask the Senator to yield because he is now touching on a point which I forgot to mention when I was speaking. The same thing the Senator has told about as having gone on at Gilbertsville—moving from one dam location, after the dam is finished, to another dam location—is going to go on at Watts bar, just as the Senator has said.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true; and that is a wise thing.

Mr. NORRIS. That is economy.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is economy. Of course lumber dealers and mechanics would have been glad to have the increased work involved in the abandonment of the houses at Pickwick Dam, and the construction of new houses and the purchase of new lumber in another community; but, as a matter of economy and good business, sixty-odd houses were loaded on barges at Pickwick Dam and floated down the river, unloaded at Gilbertsville, and they have been reconstructed there and are being occupied by employees. Water and sewerage connections have been made. Now it has been proposed, both at Gilbertsville and at Watts bar—which is involved in the pending amendment—that the Government of the United States leave that project for a year or 2 years, or permanently, and permit all the development there to go to waste.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. How many dams are there on the Tennessee River, in the entire project?

Mr. BARKLEY. There are 10. I do not know whether or not I can name them all. Beginning at the mouth of the river, they are Gilbertsville, Pickwick, Wilson, Wheeler, Gunter'sville, Chickamauga, Watts bar, and Coulter Shoals. There are two others—Hiwassee, on a tributary of the Tennessee, and Norris, on Clinch River, a tributary of the Tennessee. Those are the 10. There are 10 altogether.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Will those dams produce a 9-foot channel?

Mr. BARKLEY. Those dams, when completed, will produce a 9-foot channel from the Ohio River to Knoxville.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the dam, which is the subject of the pending amendment, is not completed, will there then be a 9-foot channel from the Ohio River to Knoxville?

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no. The dams have to be completed; and the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam provides for navigation for 184 miles up the Tennessee River from its mouth.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Will that, then, complete the 9-foot channel to the Ohio River?

Mr. BARKLEY. The 10 dams will complete the 9-foot channel.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to make a suggestion at that point, if the Senator from Kentucky will permit me to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator ought slightly to modify his answer. There is a place in the river between Hales bar and Chickamauga Dam that will be unfinished. Hales bar dam is the dam which is privately owned; and, by the way, it is the poorest dam on the Tennessee River. It will be necessary to acquire Hales bar dam and raise it a little, or do some excavating between Hales bar and Chickamauga Dam before the 9-foot channel can be completed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator for that correction. I had overlooked Hales bar. It does involve a few miles on the river which will have to be differently treated. In other words, the construction of the 10 dams will automatically bring about a 9-foot channel, with the exception of the strip which is affected by Hales bar.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Unless that is done, am I right in assuming that there will be no navigation because part of the river will not have a 9-foot channel?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. So there can be no navigation on this part of the Tennessee River unless all the dams are completed so as to furnish a constant 9-foot channel?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, there would be some navigation, but it would not be continuous. It would not be of such a nature as to induce men to invest their money in river transportation.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is what I am trying to bring out. It is not economically possible to conduct navigation in barges on a river unless there is a constant channel, and the channel should have a depth of at least 9 feet in order to carry an economically sound load.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Not to finish the channel would make it as impossible to have economical navigation as it would be to carry traffic over a railroad a thousand miles long while several sections of it were not completed.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is absolutely correct; and that very situation is what drove river traffic off the rivers in that whole section of the Midwest.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a statement at this point in his remarks?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the Senator from Minnesota has misunderstood the situation.

If the Gilbertsville Dam is built, and the Watts Bar and Coulter Shoals Dams are not built, there will be navigation with a 9-foot channel for over 500 miles from the Ohio River.

In other words, the dam which is the subject of contention here is the dam at the upper end. The Gilbertsville Dam will complete navigation from the Ohio River for 500 miles without an interruption. There will not be that which the Senator sees, an interruption in the midst of the channel. The dam which we have asked to have eliminated is the dam at the uppermost end, and merely affects the completion of a channel to Knoxville.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. How great a distance would that be?

Mr. ADAMS. About 74 miles.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What is the population of Knoxville?

Mr. ADAMS. Roughly, 100,000. At Knoxville, as the Senator knows, there is a great deal of coal. The traffic from Knoxville would have to be coal going to the Illinois coal fields.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. At Knoxville?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; there is coal there.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Then I think we ought to finish the channel to that point.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is what the Congress has already provided for. That is the scheme for which Congress has provided; namely, to furnish a channel from Knoxville to the mouth of the river.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in regard to Watts bar, so far as the expenditure of money is concerned, to a lesser degree the same situation exists there that exists at Gilbertsville. While at Gilbertsville five and a half million dollars have been spent, and those in charge are now in the middle of that expenditure, at Watts bar about $600,000 has been spent. A good deal of the work has been preliminary, of course. It is always necessary to do a considerable amount of preliminary work before beginning the actual pouring of concrete in the river bed to build a dam.

When the Watts bar dam—which is not to cost sixty or seventy million dollars, but, my recollection is, $35,000,000—is completed, it will involve the storage of 878,000 acre-feet of water.

Mr. NORRIS. No; 340,000 acre-feet.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought the Chief of Engineers said 878,000 acre-feet.

Mr. ADAMS. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. But it is sufficient to protect Chattanooga.

Mr. BARKLEY. Whatever the amount may be, if my figures are wrong, it is sufficient to protect the city of Chattanooga and the contiguous, surrounding country from floods, not only from the Tennessee River but from the tributaries that make up the Tennessee River.

We may argue here until doomsday about whether it is cheaper to let Chattanooga go or to build the dams; but, after all, Mr. President, while I may be a little bit sentimental or emotional on the subject, I am not able to balance dollars on one side of a scale against human welfare on the other.

I think we all want to balance the Budget. We should like to balance our own budgets if we could. When it comes to balancing the Budget, however, I think the Senate of the United States and the country should remember that, while our public debt has gone up so far as the Treasury of the United States is concerned, our aggregate debt, private and public, municipal, county, corporation, individual, home and land, has gone down; so that our total indebtedness—which is, after all, the true measure of obligation—is no greater now than it was in 1929. But when it comes to the preservation and the development of our natural resources, and the protection of the people from things which they themselves cannot control, I am not willing always to try to balance evenly a pair of scales with money on one side and human welfare on the other.

I have received, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] put in the RECORD yesterday, some telegrams and letters from my community. He referred to a letter which the mayor of my home city had written to one of the Members of the House of Representatives, and which was used the other day in the debate in that body.

That letter was occasioned because the reservoir above Pickwick Dam had become full, and could not hold back any more water. It was held back as long as possible, and it was beginning to flow over the dam, and some of it was let out. Because for the past 2 years our people there have been flood-minded, somebody became frightened and went to the mayor, and he wrote a letter merely of inquiry, suggesting that the T. V. A. be requested to give about 24 hours' notice when they were going to turn the water loose above Pickwick Dam. He did not intend the letter to be made public. He did not intend it to be used in debate in the other branch of Congress. I have here his telegram, explaining why he sent the letter, and explaining that he resents the fact that a private letter suggesting an inquiry into a situation was used as an argument against the construction of Gilbertsville Dam.

I happen to have here a telegram which I received yesterday from Paducah:

Information of Mayor Washburn to Congressman MAY does not convey in the remotest the feelings and desires of our people. Quite the contrary to it, these people voted over 6 to 1 for bonds to aid in erection of flood wall, and are just as unanimous for the completion of the Gilbertsville Dam for purposes set out as the reason for its erection. No, sir!

That is set out in the telegram to emphasize it:

No, sir! We feel that the mayor's communication with Congressman MAY at this time is certainly unfortunate and misleading. We are sure that our regular meeting the 20th instant will forward you some communication that will more accurately set out what the people of this city and county desire. We sincerely thank you for the magnificent fight you * * * are putting up for the greatest good to the greatest number—

And so forth. That telegram is signed by Gus E. Hank, Jr., city commissioner; S. B. Pulliam, city commissioner; Robert Stubblefield, city commissioner; and Herbert Melton, city commissioner, of the city of Paducah.

We have a commission form of government there, with four commissioners and a mayor, and the four commissioners signed the telegram which I have just read.

I also have a telegram from the city manager, elected by the city commissioners and the mayor, which was received this morning:

PADUCAH, KY., February 21, 1939.

Senator ALBEN W. BARKLEY:

Resolution passed Monday by board of commissioners fully endorsing program of T. V. A., and particularly endorses completion of the Gilbertsville Dam. This expresses the sentiment of a vast majority of people in this city and this section of the State. Resolution passed to offset impression conveyed to Congressman MAY by Mayor Washburn without authority of board. Copy of resolution to you by mail.

By authority of the board of commissioners.

L. V. BEAN, City Manager.

There was read into the RECORD yesterday by the Senator from New Hampshire a resolution adopted by the Kiwanis Club of the city of Madisonville, Ky., opposing the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam and the entire T. V. A. I happen to have a letter here from Mr. D. W. Gatlin, president of the Farmers National Bank of the city of Madisonville, dated February 17, which reads as follows:

FARMERS NATIONAL BANK,
Madisonville, Ky., February 17, 1939.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BARKLEY: The resolution of the Madisonville Kiwanis Club adopted today approving the action of the House in refusing to appropriate money for the construction of Gilbertsville Dam project, a copy of which was ordered furnished to each of our Senators, and to the Representatives in the House, and to the subcommittee on Senate appropriations, whose chairman is Senator CARTER GLASS, does not represent the deliberate opinion of this community.

The Madisonville Kiwanis Club is composed of less than 50 members, and in this matter was dominated by attorneys and employees of the West Kentucky Coal Co., a subsidiary of the North American Co., both alien to this community and have no vested interest in its development beyond exploiting its natural resources.

Doubtless you are familiar with the facts, but this information is passed along to you with the hope you will continue your fight to bring to completion this project in the interest of the vast territory it will serve.

Very sincerely yours,

D. W. GATLIN.

Of course, Mr. President, an effort has been made to scare many people in the coal regions of western Kentucky into the belief that the construction and completion of Gilbertsville Dam will create so much power that never will another scuttle full of coal be sold in western Kentucky. Operating under a fear of that sort, it is perfectly natural that coal companies and their employees should follow the suggestion of anyone who takes the initiative in order to get through a luncheon club of that sort a resolution that is represented as intended to preserve an industry in the community where it is located.

I have here another letter, also from Madisonville, in which the writer states that he took it upon himself to make a canvass around the public square on the same day when the resolution was adopted by the Kiwanis Club. The letter is as follows:

MADISONVILLE, KY., February 18, 1939.

HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
Senator from Kentucky, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BARKLEY: Allow me to congratulate you upon your efforts at having the Gilbertsville Dam appropriation restored, and let me assure you that at least 80 percent of the people in western Kentucky are heartily in favor of the Gilbertsville project in its entirety.

I am prompted in writing this letter by an article in yesterday's Madisonville Messenger, which stated that a local club, the Kiwanis, I believe, was writing certain Members of the lower House that they approved of the cut in the appropriation. It was indeed cheering to us, the majority, that right alongside the article was another article stating that the Senate group had restored the funds which had been cut by the lower House.

As you perhaps well know, there is a minority here in western Kentucky who are stirring up an awful fuss over the Gilbertsville project. You know, too, I'm sure, that they are the coal interests, who advance the stupid argument that miners will be thrown out of work; the utility interests, who are afraid that we common people may get electric energy at a reasonable price; and a few, a very few, disgruntled Republicans who are always happy to disapprove of anything the administration attempts.

In a private survey of my own yesterday I asked 15 people at random of many walks of life, including 2 coal miners, what they thought about the Gilbertsville project. Thirteen of the 15 were heartily in favor of everything it represented, including one of the miners. One miner, the only one in the group of 15, disapproved for the reason that it would throw miners out of work. There was one in the group who wouldn't express an opinion either way, because, he said, he hadn't thought anything about it.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM LIGHTFOOT.

Madisonville is some 75 miles from Gilbertsville, but it is the center of the coal industry in four or five counties.

Mr. President, I do not believe that construction of the Gilbertsville Dam, with whatever incidental power may grow out of its construction, will have any material effect upon the coal industry of western Kentucky, or eastern Kentucky, or anywhere else. But the same God who put the coal under the ground put the rivers in their banks, and they are both natural resources. While I do not want to see one natural resource developed to the injury of another, I think all of them ought to be developed, and our natural resources in water for navigation, flood control, and for power, cannot be developed by private industry, because it is not sufficiently strong financially.

When we started upon this program we obligated ourselves to do this thing for the Tennessee Valley. Whether any other valley will ever be under consideration for the same sort of development will depend upon Congress, and it may depend upon the results of this enterprise. All we are considering now is the Tennessee Valley, and according to my interpretation of the law we have committed ourselves to the completion of the development of the Tennessee River. If never a kilowatt-hour of power were produced there the expenditure would be justified, and if never another steamboat plied that river as a result of these dams it would still, in my judgment, be justified, because it would offer protection to the people who have settled upon these rivers and in the adjacent towns and invested their money and their lives in the development of prosperous cities, farms, communities, and homes. The expenditure of any reasonable amount of money we may spend to protect that investment, to protect those homes, to bring security and a sense of safety to hundreds of thousands, even millions, of our people, in my judgment is justified.

I hope, therefore, that the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, which affects only Watts bar dam, will be defeated, and that we may go forward to the completion of these projects in this great river, and if, in the providence of God, Congresses in the future desire to expand, then that burden and that responsibility will be upon them. If they do not desire to do so, we will at least have one river, flowing, as it does, through one of the richest sections of our country, which combines, in my judgment, all of the elements which ought to go into a river-improvement project for the benefit not only of those who live in the valley but for the benefit of the millions of people who live below the river mouth in the Ohio and the Mississippi Valleys.

The Mississippi Valley is the granary of America. The Mississippi River carries waters from more than 30 States, and more than a decade ago Congress declared the Mississippi River as a national problem, and all of its tributaries as contributing to that national problem.

We may never be able to keep a set of double- or single-entry books in the Treasury and determine whether every dollar we put into these investments and these improvements will be returned to the Treasury; but the money will be returned in a multiplied sense in intangible values in this great region of our country, where Americans live, who are trying to develop their country, who are good citizens, who are making in peace and war their contribution to the greatness of American life. Certainly we ought not to discourage them now by stopping in the middle of the process. This is one time when Lincoln's famous statement that we ought not to swap horses in the middle of the stream has a peculiar application. Not only should we not swap horses in the middle of this stream, but we should not get down off the horse we are on and try to wade the rest of the distance.

I hope the amendment will be defeated, and I hope the item as reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be retained in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as we are about to vote, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	King	Schwartz
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Sheppard
Austin	Ellender	Lee	Shipstead
Bailey	Frazier	Logan	Smathers
Bankhead	George	Lucas	Stewart
Barbour	Gerry	Lundeen	Taft
Barkley	Gibson	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Gillette	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Bridges	Glass	Maloney	Tobey
Brown	Green	Mead	Townsend
Bulow	Guffey	Miller	Truman
Burke	Gurney	Minton	Vandenberg
Byrd	Harrison	Murray	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hatch	Neely	Wagner
Capper	Hayden	Norris	Walsh
Caraway	Hill	Overton	Wheeler
Chavez	Holman	Pepper	White
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Radcliffe	Wiley
Connally	Hughes	Reed
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Reynolds
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to strike from the committee amendment on page 48, in lines 5 and 6, the following:

And for construction of a dam at or near Watts bar.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. ADAMS asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARBOUR (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH]. Were he present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay," and were I at liberty to vote I would vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. MINTON. The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. If present, the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea," and the Senator from Illinois would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO]. If present, the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "yea," and the Senator from Mississippi would vote "nay."

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN]. If present, the Senator from Maine would vote "yea," and the Senator from Nevada would vote "nay."

I announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is absent on account of a death in his family.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] are detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are detained on departmental matters.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] are detained on important public business.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 49, as follows:

So Mr. ADAMS' amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs upon the committee amendment on page 48, lines 5 to 8, inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 20, after the numerals "1940", to strike out "$21,797,000" and to insert "$39,003,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE obtained the floor.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, are individual amendments to the bill now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Individual amendments are not in order at this time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Consideration of the committee amendments has not been completed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; not yet.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, earlier in the day I introduced for appropriate reference a bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934, and for other purposes. At this time I wish to make a very brief statement explanatory of that bill.

The bill deals primarily with the administrative machinery of the Commission, and suggests certain procedural changes from the present practice. My principal purpose is to present to the Congress alternatives to the recommendations made by Mr. McNinch, of the Communications Commission, and embodied in Senate bill 1268, introduced by the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate. I recognize infirmities in the draft I offer; but the substantive provisions, I believe, are sound and should be considered by the committee whenever Senate bill 1268 is set for hearing and for study.

Sections 1 to 6, inclusive, basically change the present administrative set-up and functions of the Commission. Experience to date has proved that these changes, or substantially these modifications, are necessary if the Commission is to function properly as a regulatory body, and is to give to the Communications Act of 1934 the type and quality of administration and regulatory control intended by the Congress when it enacted the 1934 act.

Summarized, the bill proposes in the first 6 sections a Commission composed of 11 members, separated into 2 permanent divisions of 5 members each, not including the Chairman.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am interested in the statement of the Senator from Maine, who has special knowledge on the subject about which he is speaking. I ask him why he chooses the number "11" for his membership, and divides it into 2 divisions of 5 members each.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I do not regard it as imperative that the number of the Commission should be 11. I do not regard it as absolutely necessary that the divisions should be 5 members each. However, I do think there should be a break-down into divisions, either 2 or 3 divisions. There must be a sufficient number of Commissioners so that each division shall have such a number of members that matters may be studied and may have the combined judgment of members rather than the judgment of an individual member. I do think it imperative, whether the number be 7 or 11, or whether the divisions be of 3 or 5, that there should be a statutory break-down, and statutory jurisdiction in the divisions.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. Am I to understand that each division will have authority to act upon questions without taking them before the full Commission?

Mr. WHITE. That is generally what I propose. I shall enlarge on that question a little as I go along.

Mr. LOGAN. It would be better, then, to have two divisions, say, of five each, and a chairman, so that each division, if the chairman sat with each, would constitute a majority of the Commission, and if there were a disagreement the question could be taken before the full Commission.

Mr. WHITE. My judgment is that the set-up I am proposing, of 11 members, with divisions of 5, is a sound set-up.

Mr. LOGAN. I think so, too.

Mr. WHITE. That is my belief about it, although I recognize that there might be an argument upon that point.

Under the plan, the full Commission would have power and authority to adopt and promulgate rules and regulations of general application authorized by the act, including procedural rules and regulations for the Commission and each division thereof. It would have plenary authority over amateur services, emergency services, over all matters arising under the Ship Act of 1937, so-called, the qualifications and licensing of operators, the personnel of the Commission and of the divisions, the assignment of the bands of frequencies to the various radio services, and many other subjects over which the full Commission now has authority. The judicial and quasi-judicial functions of the Commission would, however, be vested in the two divisions. These include jurisdiction over the important and controversial subjects now inadequately dealt with by the whole Commission because of well-recognized conditions.

The jurisdiction to hear and determine all cases relating to broadcasting, television, facsimile, and similar communications intended for public reception is proposed to be vested in a Division of Public Communications. Similar jurisdiction with respect to common carriers, both radio and wire, is vested in a Division of Private Communications. This plan is a recognition of the fundamental differences in the types of communications involved and the nature of the questions presented thereby. It also provides a method for obtaining consideration of these different types of communication by persons who are selected because of their familiarity with the subjects, and who will be able to devote their time and attention to them without interruption or interference occasioned by the demands of basically different problems.

Under the plan proposed, the chairman would be the executive officer and the coordinator of all work of the Commission, participating fully in all matters within the jurisdiction of the Commission, except the determination and the decision of those contested matters made the exclusive responsibility of the divisions. Again, experience has amply demonstrated that a chairman cannot devote the time and attention necessary to a proper handling and disposition of these technical and contested questions and at the same time efficiently discharge the other duties which unavoidably fall upon a chairman and those which are made in part his obligation by the present proposed amendments.

The terms provided originally for the Commissioners are of 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 years, with the appointments to be made in each case to a particular division. Thereafter, the appointments are to be for terms of 6 years. The original term of the chairman is made 2 years, and thereafter his term likewise is to be 6 years.

I believe such a statutory break-down of the Commission would bring about an essential separation of functions, would contribute to a sounder knowledge on the part of the Commissioners of the communications problems committed to them, would make for orderly procedure and harmony of decision, and would speed up the disposition of cases before the Commission and the divisions thereof.

Sections 7, 8, 9, and 15 of the bill would make the provisions of present law, permitting the merger and consolidation of telephone companies, applicable to all common carriers of communications. The condition of our common-carrier communication companies, and particularly the situation with respect to international communications, make it wise that this authority of law should exist. I have included the provisions because I believe it imperative that this subject should be studied without further delay. Unless some solution of the difficulties of our communication carriers is found—and again I stress the significance of communications in the foreign field—disastrous consequences are likely to result to American services.

Sections 10 and 11 of the bill are designed to eliminate certain obsolete provisions of the present law, and to establish a minimum term of 1 year for all licenses granted by the Commission.

Sections 12, 13, and 14 are designed to remove procedural difficulties which have arisen under the present law.

Sections 16, 17, and 18 deal with broadcasts of a political nature, or those involving the discussion of controversial public questions. Section 315 of the present law has been a subject of controversy. Some would construe it to impose upon broadcasters the duty of accepting and broadcasting slanderous or libelous material when submitted by a candidate for public office, even though the station might thereby become liable in damages or in criminal proceedings under the laws of particular States. I have sought to clarify this situation by deleting some language now appearing in section 315, and by the addition of a new section which provides that although no licensee shall have the power to censor, he shall not be required to broadcast any material submitted by a candidate for public office which is slanderous or libelous, or which may subject the station to an action for damages or to penalty under local, State, or Federal law. The proposed section further provides that the licensee shall have the right to demand and receive a complete and accurate copy of the material to be broadcast, so that it may be examined and made to conform to the requirements of the section.

Section 17 proposes an entirely new section, designed to require the identification of the speaker in the case of broadcasts dealing with public or political questions. This has been required in the case of any commercial use of a station. The proposed section simply carries this principle of identification further, and makes it applicable to those intending to discuss political or public questions.

The other provisions of the bill are technical, dealing with procedural steps before the Commission and with court procedure.

I emphasize that without giving painstaking care to its draft, I have introduced this bill in the hope that the legislative proposals contained therein may receive consideration by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate when Senate bill 1268 is taken up for study. Other questions of policy ought to be surveyed and the congressional purpose with respect to them declared. Some of them are highly controversial; and it has long seemed to me that investigation and study should precede any attempt to draft legislation.

Heretofore the Senate has been reluctant to authorize that examination of the problems which in all good sense should be the basis of legislative action. I hope a different attitude may now be manifest, and that some of the communication problems which vex us will have the study and thought of the Senate and its appropriate committee.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Federal Housing Administration", on page 59, line 12, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$11,500,000" and insert "$9,000,000", so as to read:

Not to exceed $9,000,000 of the mutual mortgage insurance fund and $3,500,000 of the funds advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or the Federal Housing Administration—

And so forth.

MR. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment which has just been stated. Its effect would be to deny the Federal Housing Administration two and a half million dollars which it is necessary for them to have in order to continue operations after the 1st day of March.

It will be recalled by the Senate that last year the Congress amended the Federal Housing Act by extending its operations under section 2 with regard to loans, and thus the amount of work necessary to be done by the Federal Housing Administration was considerably increased.

The Federal Housing Administration, in my judgment, has done a fine job in stimulating the construction of houses in the United States. It is one of the emergency agencies set up by the Congress which has really received a return upon the amount invested.

When we increased the work of the Federal Housing Administration nearly a year ago we did not increase the amount of money available to pay the expenses of the Housing Administration. After the law was enacted the Federal Housing Administration, through its Administrator, Mr. Stewart McDonald, went to the Budget Director and asked for an estimate for an additional appropriation in order to enable it to carry on the work during the fiscal year. Mr. Bell suggested that the Administration wait until toward the end of the fiscal year or until the appropriation was ready to be considered and then return and resubmit the request in the light of the experience they would have obtained during the time between the last session and the beginning of the present one. The Budget contained an estimate or recommendation of $5,000,000 in order that the Federal Housing Administration might continue its work during the remainder of the present fiscal year.

I have before me a letter which the general counsel of the Federal Housing Administration addressed to the chairman of the subcommittee on the deficiency bill when it was under consideration, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], which sets out the situation, giving the reasons why I think this amendment ought not to be agreed to. The letter reads:

JANUARY 31, 1939.

HON. ALVA B. ADAMS,
Chairman, Subcommittee in Charge Second Deficiency Bill,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR ADAMS: When Mr. Zane and myself appeared before your subcommittee yesterday in connection with a deficiency appropriation of $5,000,000 for the expenses of this Administration for the fiscal year 1939, you requested that I write you and explain why our regular appropriation for the fiscal year 1939 was not apportioned over the entire year and why we found ourselves at this time with only sufficient money to carry us through the month of February.

You will recall that in February 1938 an act was passed amending our act so as to greatly extend and broaden our activities. When it appeared probable to us that the amendments would be passed we undertook to reach some estimate as to the amount of additional expenses that we might be called upon to incur during the remainder of the fiscal year 1939 by reason of our increased operations under the amendments.

The act making the amendments was finally approved by the President on February 3, 1938, and a day or two thereafter we presented to the Bureau of the Budget a supplemental estimate for additional funds in the amount of $3,000,000. The reaction of the Budget Bureau to this estimate of increase was that we had no facts or experience on which we could make any reasonably accurate estimate of what our additional costs would be, and any estimate that was made at that time would be largely guesswork. It was pointed out that the amendments might not increase our expenses at all so that the $3,000,000 would not be necessary; and, on the other hand, the amendments may cause such a substantial increase as that it would be necessary to submit to Congress a further supplemental estimate later on. The Budget Bureau then suggested we wait until we had some further experience on which we could base a reasonably accurate estimate and in the meantime that we should furnish monthly estimates of our anticipated expenses which the Bureau would permit us to pay out of our regular appropriations.

In accordance with this understanding the Budget Bureau, under date of January 3, 1939, submitted to the President for his consideration a supplemental estimate of appropriation for this Administration for the fiscal year 1939, amounting to $5,000,000, of which $2,750,000 is to be paid out of the moneys of the Administration and $2,250,000 paid out of funds advanced to the Administration by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The justification for this estimate was stated by the Budget Bureau to be due to the amendments, which I have above referred to. The President, under date of January 4, 1939, transmitted the estimate to Congress for its consideration.

As I stated to the committee yesterday, we have at the present time about $1,150,000 out of our original appropriation, which ordinarily would pay our expenses for the month of February. It is apparent that without the deficiency appropriation this Administration will have to reduce immediately its force to a purely skeleton force and possibly close our State offices.

With kind personal regards, I am,
Sincerely yours,

ABNER H. FERGUSON,
General Counsel.

The appropriation asked for by the Federal Housing Administration was not included in the deficiency bill. I was asked to bring it before the Appropriations Committee but I did not receive this letter from Mr. Ferguson until after the bill had passed the Senate. I do not know at what time the Senator from Colorado received it, but it is obvious from the facts—and I think they are undisputed—that unless the two and a half million dollars, which is carried in the House bill but has been stricken out by the Senate committee amendment, is restored, after the 1st of March the Federal Housing Administration will have no funds with which to continue operations.

I think, as I have said, that the Federal Housing Administration has done a good job. It has assisted in the construction of homes all over the country, and it has been able to do that by the expenditure of a minimum amount of money out of the Treasury. The housing which they stimulate is done with private funds; it is stimulated largely by the insurance and guaranty of the mortgages taken by banks and other lending agencies upon the homes that are constructed or remodeled. It seems to me incredible that Congress should desire that the Federal Housing Administration should practically close up and cease its operations on the first day of March, which it would have to do if this amendment should be adopted by the Senate and should later be agreed to by the House of Representatives.

For these reasons, I hope that the Senate will not agree to this particular amendment, striking out two and a half million dollars from the appropriation carried for the Federal Housing Administration, the two and a half million dollars, which has been stricken out by the committee, being available for expenditures between now and July 1.

MR. BYRNES. Mr. President, so far as I know the attitude of the committee, it shares the views of the Senator from Kentucky as to the work of the Federal Housing Administration; but in this matter the facts are that the amendments to the original Federal Housing Act passed by Congress were approved in February 1938. The Congress was then in session. No supplemental estimate was submitted to the Congress. The Congress remained in session until almost the first of July, but no request for additional funds was made. Then a request came to the Congress.

MR. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

MR. BYRNES. I yield.

MR. BARKLEY. My attention was diverted for a moment, and I did not catch the full force of the Senator's statement as to no request being made.

MR. BYRNES. The amendments to the act were approved in February 1938, but no supplemental estimates came to the Congress for additional funds although Congress remained in session until June 16. When a request was made of the Congress it developed that the Federal Housing Administration did go to the Budget Bureau. Presumably the executive departments have some regard for the law. When the executive departments need funds by reason of additional legislation they can make the request for a supplemental estimate and it can be sent to the Congress. But we learn from the representative of the Federal Housing Administration appearing before the committee that what happened was that they went to the Budget Bureau and that the Director of the Budget told them they could go ahead and use the money appropriated until it was gone.

The law provides that a department shall apportion its funds over the year. We have enacted an antideficiency act. The Appropriations Committee makes an effort to have that act regarded by the executive departments. The Director of the Budget, according to Mr. Ferguson, representing the Federal Housing Administration, told him he could go ahead and spend the money until it was gone.

The chairman of the Appropriations Committee, at the request of the committee, wrote a letter to the Director of the Budget asking an explanation of the statement I have just read; but to this day the committee has not had an answer from the Director of the Budget. The Appropriations Committee amended the bill by striking out the item. Of course, the bill will go to conference; and we hope that while the bill is in conference the Director of the Budget will give to the Senate an explanation of his direction that an executive department, in violation of the law as to apportionment, may go ahead and use an appropriation as it pleases until it is gone.

MR. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

MR. BYRNES. Yes.

MR. LOGAN. I desire to ask only one question. Is it true that the failure to make this two and a half million dollar appropriation will result in closing the Housing Administration on the 1st of March, or does the Senator know about that?

MR. BYRNES. That question has been of interest to the Senator from South Carolina. That statement was made as of January 31. I believe their funds will permit them to go somewhat longer, but before that time this question can be determined. The bill will be in conference. While the bill is in conference the committee may ask the Director of the Budget to answer the communication from the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee as to whether or not the apportionment law is to be entirely disregarded.

Mr. LOGAN. Am I to understand, then, that the committee had not in mind any idea of closing up the Federal Housing Administration on the 1st of March but simply desired to know just how it had spent its money so quickly?

Mr. BYRNES. The bill will be in conference. The House has provided the funds, and if the proper showing is made in conference we can determine the matter. In addition to that, while there is not any reason for mentioning it, a deficiency bill will be before Congress in 2 weeks. This bill will be in conference; but I think the Congress is entitled to have presented to it the information which it has asked for through the chairman of the Senate committee. If it is not required in this instance, every executive department will think that regardless of the law it can proceed to spend money until it is gone, and then submit a request for additional funds. I think the Senator from Kentucky will agree that that is a practice not to be approved of, and as to which the Senate should have an explanation at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think the Director of the Budget has followed the practice of advising the Departments to do that. This situation grew out of a peculiar condition which prompted Congress a year ago to amend the Federal Housing Act and to increase its activities. Following the passage of that law, the Federal Housing Administration went to the Budget Director in order to get an estimate, because they anticipated that the additional activities would make it necessary for them to spend more money.

He suggested that they wait until they had found out what their experience would develop in the expenditure of the regular appropriation, which was based on the curtailed activities prior to the amendment referred to a year ago. I think the Federal Housing Administration have acted in good faith in the matter; and it does not strike me as wise to punish the Federal Housing Administration in order to teach the Director of the Budget a lesson about advising executive departments.

I do not think there is any controversy over the fact that the Federal Housing Administration will be out of money on the first of March, which is only a week off. If the Director of the Budget has not answered a letter sent to him by the committee, that is reprehensible, I should say, unless he has a good reason for his delay; but the F. H. A. ought not to suffer because of that if they need the money.

Mr. BYRNES. As I have said, and as the Senator from Kentucky—who has been in the House and Senate so long—knows, when the bill goes into conference the conferees on the part of the House will present the justification for the amount that is set forth in the bill. The Senate committee has not been able to secure the information it desires; but in conference the House conferees doubtless will make a showing. If they make a proper showing the conferees on the part of the Senate certainly will see that whatever is proper in the premises is done.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield at that point, the amount carried in the bill is only half the amount of the Budget estimate. What they estimated was $5,000,000. Only two and one-half million dollars of that amount is carried in this bill.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; but, Mr. President, I desire to recall another statement made by the Senator from Kentucky a few moments ago. Those amendments to the act were passed in February. A deficiency bill was passed by the Congress within the last week of the Congress. There was absolutely no reason why a supplemental estimate should not have been submitted to the Congress at that time. I believe it should have been done.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield, I understood that the F. H. A. went to the Director of the Budget for that purpose, and were advised that up to that time they had no facts upon which to base a request for an additional amount, and to wait until the regular appropriation.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President—

Mr. BYRNES. No; the statement was that the F. H. A. went to the Director of the Budget in February, at the time of the passage of the act. March went by, and April went by, and May went by, and June went by, and during those 4 months they had time enough to determine how much money should be appropriated. They could have submitted an estimate, and the Senate is entitled to know and its Appropriations Committee is entitled to know why it was not done, and the reason for the submission now of the request for an increase in this fund. If good reasons are submitted by the House conferees, and the Director of the Budget furnishes some information on the subject, I have no doubt that whatever is proper will be done.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. The facts are that the Housing Administration are out of money because they did not observe the antideficiency law. Is not that the case?

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, Mr. President, that is true. Their defense is that they were told by the Director of the Budget that they could ignore the law.

Mr. ADAMS. Is there any reason why the Federal Housing Administration should trust the Director of the Budget rather than the statutes for their information?

Mr. BYRNES. No; only that they have become accustomed to do it, and the Director of the Budget has become, in the opinion of the executive departments, the determining factor as to how they shall spend their money. If he is to occupy that position, the Congress of the United States is entitled to have an answer to the request for information as to why he told an executive department to go ahead and use the money.

Mr. ADAMS. So the executive department spent in 8 months money appropriated to cover a 12-month period?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. And the explanation is that they did it because the Director of the Budget said it would be all right for them to do it?

Mr. BYRNES. That is an exact statement of facts.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not want to continue the argument about the matter. The fact is that the F. H. A. need the money.

Mr. ADAMS. They need it because they did not observe the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Congress probably did not observe its obligation to the F. H. A. when it increased their work and required them to do that additional work on the same amount of money. In an effort to correct that situation the F. H. A. went to the Budget Bureau; whether it was in February or later, I do not know. They did go in February. They may have gone later. I am not sure.

But they need some money. They are out of money. I do not care whether it is put in the bill in the Senate or put in in conference. What I am anxious about is that the F. H. A. shall not be required to curtail their activities on the 1st of March, which they will have to do unless they get this money.

Mr. ADAMS. We all agree with the Senator that the F. H. A. should not be required to curtail their activities. On the other hand, executive departments ought not to be permitted to determine for themselves whether or not they will observe the law. The Congress provides the money. The Congress has specified how the money shall be expended. If every executive department may decide for itself, or even with the concurrence of the Budget Director, that it is going to spend a year's appropriation in 8 months, it can decide that it will spend it in 6 months, or 3 months, or 1 month; and then we shall be told, "Well, you must give them some more money, because they need it."

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the Senator as a matter of principle; but this seems to be an isolated case.

Mr. ADAMS. It is not an isolated case.

Mr. BARKLEY. The conditions which brought about the necessity were imposed by Congress itself. I suppose there was more or less running conversation between the Administrator and the Budget Director. The F. H. A. realized, as soon as we amended the law, that they would need more money, and they did what any prudent businessman or organization would do; they went to the source in order to get it.

They were advised that they had no facts at that time upon which to base the request, and to observe their experience in the enforcement of the amendments which we had provided. In doing that they may have left the idea that they could go ahead and operate under the law passed by Congress, which would require from month to month more money, and that, if it was required, when the time came they could submit an estimate and it would be sent in.

That happened. They have estimated $5,000,000. I do not want to encourage violation of the law by the Director of the Budget or any other department; and yet, in a technical situation like this, I do not think we are justified in being meticulous about a situation which it seems to me we all admit ought not to exist. If somebody else has been derelict in his duty, the F. H. A. ought not to be charged with the responsibility for it. The point is here is a great agency that is going on stimulating the building of houses, the giving of employment, and all that.

If we are to deny them the amount of money they need on a technicality in order to teach someone else a lesson, I doubt the wisdom of it, frankly.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that this was not the first instance of the kind. The F. H. A. are supplied with a fine legal staff. It does seem as if, when every department of the executive branch of the Government can hire fine lawyers, they ought to be able to advise the departments that the laws made by the Congress must be observed.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, in addition to what the Senator from Colorado has said, the counsel for F. H. A. knew it was the law that they should apportion their funds. The counsel for F. H. A. should know that the Director of the Budget is not above the law, and if the Director of the Budget tells them that they can disregard the law, they might well appeal, as they now appeal, to Members of the Senate. Had they done so after the passage of the bill at the last session of Congress they would have been properly advised. I know of no justification for the Director of the Budget not complying with their request. Congress had passed a law increasing the business of F. H. A. If it is said that they could not know how much they would need, that could be said of any agency whenever there is an amendment to the law. They could have submitted an estimate; then it would have been the duty of the Congress to determine whether it was wise or not to make the additional appropriation. Such appropriations are made at the end of every session. In the closing days of the last session more than half a dozen legislative acts passed the Congress, which required the making of appropriations to provide for the agencies until Congress met at this session. The necessary action was taken in the case of all these other agencies, and it will be done as to this.

If F. H. A. through its representatives has made a proper showing to the House, the House will present it to the conference, and the matter will be settled properly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I take it for granted, from all the Senator has said, that the blame is not on the F. H. A., but on the Director of the Budget. I understand they did go to him at once, whether with a definite estimate or not I do not recall, but they did ask for more funds, and they were advised not to present the request at that time because they had not had the experience. It is true that if the F. H. A. had apportioned the funds then available over the year, they could not have carried on the additional duties imposed on them by Congress without abandoning some other duties in which they were then engaged. So that it is as broad as it is long; they could not have apportioned without refusing to do the additional things, or abandoning some already in progress.

Mr. BYRNES. If those be the facts, I have no doubt a proper settlement will be made. In the meantime, even if the Director of the Budget advises them that they can expend money without regarding the law, they had better call it to the attention of the Senator from Kentucky. If they had called this matter to his attention, they would not now be in the fix in which they find themselves.

AMERICA'S FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am very happy indeed to see so many Senators present at this hour, because they will be provided an opportunity to join in the debate which in all probability my address will start. I intend to speak today briefly about foreign affairs, and I am very desirous at this time of ascertaining from this body its attitude relative to that very great question. I wish to say further that I am of the opinion that the American people themselves are desirous of ascertaining the attitude of the Members of this body in reference to foreign relations.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that I expect primarily to address myself to the remarks which were delivered last evening by my personal friend and by our colleague the distinguished senior Senator from the State of Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], who presides most ably as the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, I am in high hope that during the course of my argument he will be present, because he will probably be desirous of directing some questions to me, and I should like in a most friendly way to be provided the opportunity of directing some inquiries to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, for I assume from the phraseology of the address so ably delivered last evening by him as a guest of the Evening Star, through the facilities of their radio forum, that he was speaking for the administration, which means that he was speaking for the President of the United States.

I say to the Members of the Senate, and I likewise say now to the American people, that if the chairman of our Committee on Foreign Relations was speaking for the President of the United States when he outlined very definitely in paragraph 3 of his address what was said by him to be the policy of the Roosevelt administration, then the American people need have no fear whatsoever of this Nation becoming involved in any way with any other nation upon the face of the earth.

Paragraphs 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the address of the distinguished Senator were prefaced by the following one-line statement:

There are, in my opinion, only four fundamental foreign policies of governments. These policies may be stated as follows:

(1) A policy based upon conquest of territory and domination of the lives of the nationals of other nations through military force or the threat of the use of military force.

That is fundamental policy of government No. 1, and that policy may be described as the one which has been utilized by Great Britain since the year 1172, because of all the aggressors upon the nations of the earth Great Britain is unquestionably the greatest aggressor. I am confident that no Member of this body who is familiar with the aggressions which have been made by Great Britain since 1172, when she began those aggressions upon the island of Ireland, will deny the accuracy of my statement.

(2) The policy of appeasement.

I assume that there our distinguished colleague had in mind the recent act on the part of Great Britain and France, when the decision by those two so-called democracies was made at Munich which brought about the dismemberment of Czechoslovakia itself.

The next policy of government he states as follows:

(3) The policy of defense. This policy includes the protection of a country's territory, and the rights of its nationals throughout the universe. It holds that such protection shall be accomplished, first, through every established, peaceful instrumentality; second, through every legal resistance to encroachments upon the integrity of a nation's territory and the rights of its nationals; and third and lastly, through the use of physical force, if every other means has failed, to successfully defend its territory and the rights of its nationals.

If policy No. 3 is the policy of the present administration; if policy No. 3 is the policy of our great and beloved President, Franklin D. Roosevelt; if policy No. 3 is the policy of the United States of America, then the 130,000,000 of this country who are today worried, particularly the mothers, for fear we will be drawn into war, need no longer have any fear whatsoever, because if we stick squarely to policy No. 3 as outlined by the chairman of our Committee on Foreign Relations, we will not become involved in war, nor will we be approached by the danger of war.

In that connection I turn to page 3 of a multigraph copy of the speech to which I have referred, and from which I am reading, and I find that in the next to the last paragraph the senior Senator from Nevada makes the following statement:

And what is our foreign policy in the circumstances? I have attempted to state it in the third policy.

The third policy I have just read to the Members of the Senate. I desire to quote further the same paragraph from which I have just read in the speech of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations:

We will not aid a government whose policy is based upon conquest and military domination.

In other words, we are told by the President of the United States, if our chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations speaks for the President of the United States, that we will not join with any nation which is engaged in aggression, with any nation which has been guilty of engaging in aggression.

In this connection I desire at this time to repeat that in my opinion and certainly in the opinion of all others who have familiarized themselves with the history of the aggressions committed by the nations of this earth, Great Britain is the greatest aggressor of all aggressors. Let us see. I say "Let us see," because Great Britain at this hour is engaged in endeavoring to draw our interests once again across the sea, and to secure our backing physically if she once again becomes engaged in conflict, in war abroad.

Until the year 1172 other nations had been aggressors against the British Isles, but when that period of aggression terminated, according to the pages of history, immediately thereafter, beginning in the year 1172, Great Britain herself began to be an aggressor. Her very first act of aggression was to bring about the conquest of Ireland, and since the year 1172 almost until this present hour, she kept the Irish people, numbering into the millions, under her domination. Great Britain herself, proclaims to the world that she is one of the great democracies. Yet we know that almost to this hour she has kept the yoke of oppression firmly upon the shoulders of more than 3,000,000 of the Irish people. Only a portion, to the extent of a little over 2,000,000 of the Irish people, have succeeded in attaining for themselves a small portion of the liberty which they seek.

No sooner had Great Britain, the aggressor, who now has the audacity to accuse other nations of the world and to criticize them for doing the same thing that she has done for more than 667 years—no sooner had Great Britain brought about the conquest of Ireland until she turned her face toward Wales and made conquest of Wales.

Then she directed her interest toward Scotland, and brought Scotland under her influence. History teaches us that every single inch of land she possesses in the four corners of the globe, and every single particle of territory she rules over today, aggregating one-fourth of all the land upon the face of the earth, she obtained by conquest.

Let us see. She got Ireland; she got Wales, she got Scotland, and by her aggressions, by her conquests, she got Canada, Newfoundland, Australia, Ascension Island, Cyprus, Northern Rhodesia, Southern Rhodesia, Uganda, her possessions in Northern Africa, India, the Malay Settlements, the Straits Settlements, British Honduras—we have her at our very back door, or side step, I might say—Bermuda, the Bahama Islands, with their capital city of Nassau, Bimini, Jamaica, in the West Indies the Barbados, Trinidad, the capital of which is Port of Spain, and down the coast of South America to British Guiana. In other words all the territory that Great Britain possesses today, which is one-quarter of the surface of the earth, she has obtained by aggression, by unholy and bloody conquests. And Great Britain has the audacity to censure Mussolini, the Italians, for their conquest of Ethiopia. Great Britain has the colossal nerve to censure and to criticize Hitler and the German people for their aggressions to the east of Germany, when we all know that the greatest aggressor, the bloodiest aggressor the world has ever known, is John Bull himself, and no one can defend John Bull and the bloody aggressions of his people to the satisfaction of the American people.

Men talk about the blood that was spilled in Ethiopia. The British now tell American citizens through their propaganda leaflets that the things that are taking place in Asia are horrible; that what is being done today in Germany and the territory under the influence of Germany has never been equalled in all the world. Anyone who is familiar with history, however, knows that some of the most dastardly crimes, some of the greatest murders that have ever been committed in all the history of the world, were committed by Great Britain upon her own neighbors, upon her own people who were living within a stone's throw of the great metropolis of London itself.

When we hear the British criticizing Mussolini, when we hear the British criticizing Hitler, when we hear the British criticizing the Mikado, when we hear the British criticizing those who are opposed to the British form of government, those who are challenging the power of Great Britain, we never hear the British tell about the year 1795. It was in 1776, on July the 4th, that we made pronouncement of the Declaration of Independence in Philadelphia, and only a few years thereafter, inspired by that same Declaration of Independence at Philadelphia, the Irish, many hundreds of thousands in number, issued a declaration of independence, and brought about a revolution in Ireland. That occurred only a few years after our outspoken Declaration of Independence.

When there was an uprising of the Irish people in 1795, when their neighbors wanted freedom, what did the British, the aggressors who are crawling to us now on their knees asking for aid, do? They murdered 160,000 of them. And in the Irish uprising of 1795 the British lost only 20,000 men.

The years passed, but all through the years we find the British doing what? We find them continuing their aggressions, continuing their conquests, continuing their murders, until we come to the year 1916, when seven patriots of Ireland attached their signatures to a document which occasioned their being murdered. And at that same time in Ireland, in 1916, more than 16 Irishmen, patriots, who merely sought liberty under democracy, were executed.

Then we come to the year 1919, when, as we remember, there occurred the Black and Tan raids in Ireland, and we recall from the pages of the newspapers we read from time to time, that thousands upon thousands of innocent children and defenseless women and aged men were deprived of their homes and were beaten, robbed, assaulted, and attacked.

Yet Great Britain holds herself out to the American public and to the world as being one of the greatest democracies upon the face of the earth.

How different is the democracy of Great Britain from the democracy of the United States of America. When the island of Cuba came into our possession after the war of 1898, what did we do? We provided men and funds, time and energy, to clean up the pest hole and deliver the island itself to the people to whom it belonged. As a result of the same controversy we came into possession of the Philippine Islands, many large ones and more than 3,000 small ones. After the expenditure of millions upon millions of dollars for the construction of roads, the erection of public buildings, and the maintenance of schoolhouses, appreciating what the word "liberty" means, we have agreed to turn over to the 15,000,000 or 16,000,000 constituting the population of the Philippine Commonwealth all the money expended in their behalf, all the structures and all the good that we did for them. What a difference between the democracy of the United States of America and the so-called democracy of Great Britain.

I mention this, Mr. President, in the course of my observations this afternoon for the reason that I now wish to tell the world that, in my opinion, the American people will not contribute the life of a single son of an American mother to save a so-called democracy like that of Great Britain or France. If anyone is interested in ascertaining whether or not I have today spoken the sentiments of the American people themselves, all he has to do to satisfy himself that I have spoken the sentiments of the American mothers—who, after all is said and done, are the rulers of America—is to go out into the isolated sections of the United States, or into the metropolitan sections of the United States, and find out for himself what the people who live in those respective communities think about our sending soldiers again to foreign shores for the purpose of saving Christianity and democracy.

Mr. President, I wish to read the greater portion of the speech so eloquently delivered last night by my colleague from Nevada as a result of the courtesy extended by the Washington Evening Star, because I desire to avail myself of the opportunity to bring some very pertinent facts and statements to the attention of the American people. In my simple way I desire to be provided the opportunity of airing my views upon these subjects, which views I trust and believe will meet with the approval of the American people, if I am any judge of what the American people want, having ascertained their attitude toward our becoming involved in another war as a result of having made inquiry in many different sections of the United States.

In the course of the address of the senior Senator from the State of Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], he said:

I shall very briefly discuss, first, this latter policy.

The "latter policy" being policy No. 4 mentioned by him, reading as follows:

The last of the four policies, which some governments have practiced, is the policy of isolation.

That, Mr. President, is partially the policy which the United States Government is today following.

The senior Senator from Nevada continues:

I shall very briefly discuss, first, this latter policy, as unfortunately, in spite of the history of its uniform puerility, it is urged by some of our citizens—even by men and women of prominence.

Mr. President, a policy of that sort may appear to some persons to be childish; but I say to the Members of this body that the American people are desirous of pursuing a policy which will keep the United States of America out of another war.

The Senator from Nevada proceeds:

The people of a country, through their government, can isolate themselves by refraining from taking any part in world affairs. They cannot, however, by this action impose isolation upon any other country—

That unquestionably is true—

nor can they prevent any other country from violating their isolation.

That, I will add, unquestionably is true.

We have so many recent examples of peoples and their governments attempting to protect their territory and their peace and safety through the doctrine of isolation, that the impracticability of the policy is self-evident.

Then certain examples are brought to the attention of the American public in this address. For instance:

Austria, since the World War, adopted and practiced a policy of isolation. Behold Austria.

I say, Mr. President, that in beholding Austria we must fashion in our respective minds the geographical location of Austria and the influences within and surrounding Austria at the time it was taken over by the German people.

Ethiopia practiced the policy of isolation. Note the condition of Ethiopia.

France, one of the great democracies which we are called upon to aid perhaps by sending American boys overseas within the next 2 years, was our ally in the World War. Italy was our ally in the World War. Great Britain also was our ally in the World War. In 1920, almost 20 years ago, the great democracies of France and Great Britain made an agreement with Italy to encroach upon the territory of Ethiopia, to commit aggression upon the territory of Ethiopia, to bring about the conquest of Ethiopia. What was the agreement between Italy and the great democracies of France and Great Britain?

The agreement was that if and when Ethiopia was conquered, France was to have the railroad leading from Djibouti, the capital of French Somaliland, for 498 miles to Addis Ababa, the capital of Ethiopia, and that Great Britain was to have Lake Tana in Ethiopia, from which flow the blue waters of the Nile. Italy itself was to have the land.

That is an example of the purity of the great democracies of France and Great Britain, which we are being called upon to save. They themselves had agreed to divide up Ethiopia.

A noteworthy fact in that connection is that in 1935, as will be recalled, when Mussolini was engaged in the conquest of Ethiopia, Great Britain called upon the United States of America to aid her and the League of Nations in the enforcement of the oil sanctions. At the very time Anthony Eden, in charge of foreign affairs for the British Government in November 1935, was calling upon us to aid Great Britain and the League of Nations in the enforcement of the oil sanctions against Mussolini lo and behold, Great Britain was engaged in selling oil to Mussolini in order that he might more speedily carry out his conquest. Lo and behold, about the first government to bring about the recognition of the conquest of Ethiopia was none other than the British Government itself. So we cannot properly refer to Ethiopia as being a country which was isolated.

I desire to discuss each and every one of these instances today, without apologizing for the consumption of time, because, as stated by the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee at the very outset of his speech, and as I now state to the American people, there is no subject of greater importance to the American people today than the subject under discussion. If anyone has reason to doubt that statement, Mr. President, all he has to do is to go into any church or schoolhouse, or to go into any forum or public place anywhere in the United States. What will he find?

He will find that the American people are more deeply interested in keeping the United States out of war than in any other subject. Let us see what further is said.

Czechoslovakia—

And we all know the pathetic history of Czechoslovakia—under the rules of the League of Nations practiced the policy of isolation.

As Senators know, Czechoslovakia was created at Versailles from parts and portions, according to my recollection, of Yugoslavia, Hungary, Poland, and other surrounding nations. The really ancient part known in works on geography of that section of the world was the portion in the immediate neighborhood of the capital thereof, the ancient capital of Prague.

Czechoslovakia, under the rules of the League of Nations, practiced the policy of isolation. Czechoslovakia's territory has been divided up, its government destroyed, and its spirit of democracy annihilated.

Witness China. No people and no government ever practiced more sincerely the doctrine of isolation. They interfered with no other government and no other people. They made no preparation for defense, relying upon their peaceful attitude, the treaty promises of other governments, and their pronounced and practiced policy of isolation.

China experienced safety in her isolation, Senators, until she was invaded by the Communists from the Soviet Union. We all know that prior to and even extending up to the time of the conquest of China by Japan two-thirds of China was ruled by Communists. Likewise, Members of the Senate who, in recent years, have visited Japan know that one of the greatest menaces that Japan had to combat, and, as a matter of fact, is being called upon to guard against and combat today, was the plague of communism. Now China is being conquered by Japan, but witness the fact that the conquest thus far has extended itself principally along the arteries of the highways in that country, which is said to be about two-thirds of the size of the United States and to possess a population of between 400,000,000 and 500,000,000.

Let us now return to the policy of conquest and domination through military force and the threat of the use of military force. This policy has been adopted and is now being practiced by the Governments of Germany, Italy, and Japan—

Countries to which I have frequently referred, Mr. President, as the "unholy alliance"— three of the most powerful military governments in the world. These Governments are absolutely controlled by arbitrary and ruthless dictators—Germany by Hitler, Italy by Mussolini, and Japan by a small military clique.

I continue to quote from the address delivered by the Senator from Nevada:

What are the intentions of these military dictators? Do their policies constitute any threat to the safety of the United States? We can only determine these questions by a study of the statements and the actions of these military dictators. Time does not permit me to read the numerous statements of these dictators. They have been published time and again. They have all ridiculed democratic forms of government. They have even pitied our people in the United States because, as they allege, our Government is too weak and too cowardly not only to protect our citizens and our institutions from abroad but even to protect our peaceful citizens from lawlessness at home. They have defied the League of Nations, the Nine-Power Treaty, and every instrumentality that governments have set up to protect the integrity and the rights of small governments against unjust domination and conquest and for the preservation of peace among all nations.

The statement does not require confirmation to those who read. Great Britain and France urged that there should be arbitration with regard to the Sudetenland. Was this agreed to? No. Hitler had 1,000,000 soldiers on the border of Czechoslovakia. He had more airplanes than France and Great Britain combined.

That is true.

He and Mussolini had twice the capacity for production of airplanes of Great Britain and France. Hitler refused to arbitrate the justice of his demands. Why? Because Great Britain and France had discovered that Hitler had a dominating military force in the air and on land.

That statement is unquestionably a statement of fact. Those who were sufficiently interested at the time and immediately thereafter to make inquiry why the concessions were made at Munich know, as the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee has stated, that Mussolini and Hitler were prepared in arms and armament, and, in addition thereto, Hitler himself, directing the German people, was in possession of more airplanes than the so-called democracies of France and Great Britain combined.

Could there be any more perfect demonstration of rule by force than the determination of the conference at Munich?

I answer, no; there could not have been a more perfect demonstration.

This also clearly exposes the puerility of the power of appeasement. Hitler was not uneasy. The British Government in 1932 abandoned the policy of defense and adopted the policy of appeasement. It has practiced such policy of appeasement ever since, without accomplishing anything for ultimate peace, but, on the contrary, to the encouragement and aid of the ambition of the dictator governments, which ambition, unless obstructed, inevitably will lead to the most disastrous war in all history.

We must admit, Senators, that the appeasement at Munich did continue peace in Europe and in all parts of Europe at the time. Those who are familiar with the conditions, those who have familiarized themselves with the facts will agree to the statement that had not that appeasement been made at that time, then London certainly, and perhaps Paris, would have been razed to the ground by the bombardments of the airmen who were at their stations only a few hours distant from those cities.

When Japan challenged the indictment of the League of Nations and the opinion of the world in 1932—

At that time we were not a member of the League of Nations; we have never been a member of the League of Nations; and, as a matter of fact, we have never been a member of the World Court. In 1934 there was an effort to place the United States of America in the World Court, but we who opposed that effort claimed it was the back door to the League of Nations. Mr. President, I state unhesitatingly that I, for one, am glad that the United States never became a member of the World Court; I am glad we never joined the League of Nations, because, in my humble opinion, had we done so we would, long before this, as the result of such affiliation, have become involved in some entanglements that would have led us into war. I repeat, the American people are determined to stay out of war, either by isolation or otherwise, because they had their stomachs filled with war during their brief participation in it from April 6, 1917, until November 11, 1918, the date of the armistice, which participation to date has cost the American taxpayers a sum aggregating billions upon billions of dollars—a sum estimated by some to reach the enormous total of $67,000,000,000—and it is said that before we shall have finished paying for the World War we will have paid out nigh onto $100,000,000,000.

I resume the quotation from the address delivered by the Senator from Nevada:

When Japan challenged the indictment of the League of Nations and the opinion of the world in 1932, and continued her conquest of Manchuria (a part of China), the policy of appeasement of Great Britain was expressed by Mr. Simon when he yielded to Japan on the promise that Japan would not interfere with the open-door policy in Manchuria and the commerce of Great Britain. Of course, Japan never intended to maintain the open-door policy in Manchuria, and did not maintain such policy. On the contrary, through a fiction of local self-government, Japan has practically excluded the commerce of all countries—except her own—from Manchuria.

Again, when Mussolini undertook his conquest of Ethiopia the British Government, with absolute influence over the League of Nations, composed of over 52 nations, after actuating them to assert the policy of the League of Nations, retreated under the policy of appeasement.

I mentioned only a moment ago that in 1920 Great Britain, France, and Italy had all agreed to enter into and did enter into what might be called a conspiracy to bring about the conquest of Ethiopia, certain portions thereof to be divided amongst them; and I have mentioned the fact that in November 1935, when, as many Senators will remember, Great Britain probably had a greater tonnage of iron and steel in the form of battleships assembled in the Mediterranean at Alexandria, Egypt, than ever in her history, the astute Anthony Eden, who visited us only a few weeks ago, was desirous of the United States joining Great Britain in the enforcement of the oil sanctions.

Ethiopia was conquered. Hitler advanced and fortified the Rhine, and Great Britain, under the policy of appeasement, did nothing. Hitler conquered Austria without battle, and Great Britain yielded under the policy of appeasement. Czechoslovakia, whose territorial and political integrity were guaranteed by Great Britain and France and 52 other nations, was yielded to the military domination of Hitler under the policy of appeasement.

What do we find at Munich? We find at Munich Mr. Chamberlain, the Prime Minister of Great Britain; we find there the representatives of France; and we find there those gentlemen permitting the dismemberment of Czechoslovakia itself. We find, according to my recollection, that France then had and now has a military alliance with Russia itself, and when Russia was called upon, and they made inquiry of her what she could do, she answered not.

That is what happened. That is what took place in the appeasement mentioned in this address.

The policy of appeasement has not only been unsuccessful and ultimately destructive, but has been immoral.

Mr. President, I cannot agree that the policy was immoral. Those who are familiar with the situation, those who studied it at the time, those who were sufficiently interested to provide some sort of information for themselves at that particular time, know that the only thing Chamberlain possibly could have done was just exactly what he did, because Great Britain was not prepared. France was not prepared. Neither of them had been prepared over the course of the years during which Hitler and the German people had been preparing to reclaim that which they claimed was unlawfully, illegally, improperly, and immorally taken away from them. I cannot say that it was immoral for Chamberlain to do that, because when Chamberlain brought about that consent, when he brought about that agreement at Munich, I say to you that he had in mind then and there the lives of the children and the men and women and the 49,000,000 persons constituting the population of the British Isles themselves.

Continuing:

It is evident that no person can die but once, and the period of life is limited; and that it is far better that he die a few days earlier—

Listen, Mr. President, listen, Members of the Senate—for Christianity, justice, and liberty than that he live a little longer in cowardice and degeneracy.

Let us pause there, Senators. Let us pause there in the interest of American motherhood. Let us pause there in their interest, because they and they only are the ones who are being called upon to make this sacrifice, if a sacrifice of American sons is to be made. Let us pause there, Senators, because the sons of American mothers are the ones who will be used as cannon fodder; and let us see whether or not it was immoral for Chamberlain to come to the conclusion that he reached. Let us see whether or not it is far better to "die a few days earlier" if you can save Christianity and preserve justice and liberty.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Who made the statement which the Senator has just read?

Mr. REYNOLDS. This is a statement made by the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, my distinguished colleague from the State of Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

Senators, in 1917 the word "Christianity" and the word "democracy" were employed more times than ever before in all the history of the world, because we heard throughout the length and breadth of this land from the lips of the orators that we should send mothers' sons across the turbulent waters of the Atlantic to foreign shores, to do what? To save the world for Christianity, and to spare democracy. Those poor mothers of America then believed that by making the supreme sacrifice, by sacrificing upon the altar of war their own flesh and blood, they could save Christianity and preserve democracy. But the mothers of America now know that they were not able to do that. There are in America today 37,000 American mothers who know the truth of that statement better than any other mothers in America; and why? Because during our brief participation in the World War 37,000 American soldiers were killed; the hearts of 37,000 American mothers were broken; and those 37,000 American mothers today know that the lives of their sons were not sacrificed in order that Christianity and democracy might be spared. Why? Because, in the first place, they know that the democracy of Great Britain is not the democracy of the United States of America. They know that the democracy of Great Britain does not provide liberty for the people of the world, as does the democracy of the United States of America. Those mothers know that they did not sacrifice their flesh and blood upon the altar of war in order that all wars might be ended and Christianity spared, because, Mr. President, within the past 3 years more than 3,000,000 men and women, boys and girls, have been killed in war.

Up to date, since the revolution in Spain began in July of 1936, more than a million persons have been killed. Those who write, better knowing in regard to the Ethiopian situation, tell us that since the conquest of Ethiopia began, up to the present time, a little less than half a million persons have been killed, 497,000 persons. We know that up to date about 1,900,000 persons have been killed, murdered, in China. So the American mothers who are familiar with these facts and with the conditions existing today throughout the hemisphere know that they did not send their sons to Europe for the purpose of saving democracy and ending war, because their action has done no such thing. That is why the American mothers themselves today are up in arms, and the American people are against any war, and the American people today are against any statement by any citizen in public life that will lead to war.

Let us see, Mr. President:

Hitler told Chamberlain that he was only interested in the borders of the Sudetenland. A few weeks later he changed the borders of Czechoslovakia in many other particulars. He declined to permit the borders of Poland and Hungary to be joined.

That is true. Then the Senator from Nevada asks the question:

Why?

Then he states:

Because every student of history knows that he intends to preserve an alley through which he can conquer Ukraine.

That is true.

Does anyone doubt that Hitler has in his program the domination of Ukraine? In fact, does anyone doubt that Hitler has the domination of Siberia in mind?

In regard to that, I want to say that I do not think there is any doubt that Hitler has in mind the conquest of the Ukraine. Let us see about it. The condition is just as the Senator from Nevada stated. Hitler really did refuse, according to my understanding, to permit the borders of Hungary and of Poland to be joined, because Hitler is now constructing broader and better roads the length and breadth of Czechoslovakia, so that he may send his armies from Germany eastward across Czechoslovakia. They will pass to the north of Hungary and to the south of Poland, and then they will pass across Rumania—north of Bucharest, however—to the Black Sea, and find their way out north of Odessa in the Ukraine. It is my opinion that Hitler is going to bring about the conquest of the Ukraine as the result of sending his agents there; and, as a matter of fact, I venture the opinion that he will not experience a great deal of difficulty in bringing about the conquest of that territory, for this reason:

Around 1933 and 1934 the Soviet Government called upon the wheat growers of the Ukraine, which lies east of Rumania and Poland and north of the Black Sea and Odessa, to pay tribute to the central government in the physical form of wheat. When the Ukrainian farmers made refusal of the request of Stalin to deliver up to the central government millions upon millions of barrels of wheat the central government itself deliberately, without any hesitation whatsoever, in order to punish the thirty or forty million people of the Ukraine, seized that wheat and brought about the murder, in the form of starvation, of anywhere from three to seven million people. So today the people of the Ukraine, recognizing, realizing, and remembering that their central government of Bolsheviks and Communists starved 7,000,000 of their fellow citizens, murdered 7,000,000 of their fellow citizens, probably would welcome Hitler and his gang rather than keep Stalin there.

By the way, as I read the address of the Senator from Nevada I observe in virtually every paragraph he very rightly attacked Hitler, Mussolini, and the Mikado, but I am exceedingly regretful to observe that not one single mention was made of the greatest murderer, the most heartless man upon the face of the earth. That murderer is none other than Stalin himself. I regret exceedingly that throughout the length and breadth of the address I see no mention of the Communists themselves. Nor do I see any mention or criticism of Stalin, the most wicked, the most murderous man upon the face of the earth.

Hasn't Hungary joined his alliance?

Yes.

Hasn't Hungary been compelled to discharge Imready?

Yes; and we all know why he was discharged.

Hasn't Hungary been compelled to discharge Imready, its anti-Nazi Premier, and place in his stead a Nazi Premier? Did not the policy of appeasement of Great Britain surrender to the mercy of Hitler not only Czechoslovakia, but Poland, Rumania, Yugoslavia, and Turkey?

Yes and no. Yugoslavia was sacrificed by the democracies. Yugoslavia was sacrificed by Russia, an ally of France, by the democracy of France, and by the democracy of Great Britain.

Poland, not as yet, because Poland is playing hide and seek between Stalin and Hitler.

We all know the story of Rumania. When Hitler proceeds eastward to the Ukraine of Russia he must of necessity pass over the territory of Rumania, and that is where, I am rather inclined to believe, Hitler is going to experience some difficulty, for I do not think Carol is going to yield to the demands of Hitler, because Carol probably has made up his mind that he will make the last stand for the Balkans; but whether or not he is going to have any aid provided by others it is difficult to say.

In Yugoslavia, as we all know, the interests are evenly divided between Hitler and Mussolini.

As for Turkey—poor Turkey. Recently, according to press reports, a hundred million dollars were loaned to Turkey by Hitler.

The next question asked by the Senator from Nevada is:

What is there to stop his domination, if not conquest, of these countries?

I do not know of anything; but regardless of who wants to stop Mussolini, regardless of who wants to stop Hitler, I am against the United States sending any soldiers from American territory to any part or portion of Europe to stop Hitler when Hitler is not headed toward us, when Hitler is headed away from us. I would not give the blood of one American son of one American mother to save any of the nations over there.

It is loose talk to say that we have to stop the encroachments of the dictator nations upon other peoples of Europe. I ask, Mr. President, what business is it of ours? The mothers of America are asking men in public life today, What business is it of ours? I take the privilege of employing the word "mothers" frequently today, because I know, as my colleagues know, that this is no laughing matter. I know, as other Senators know, and as I have said repeatedly, that, after all, the mothers of the country are the ones who are paying the bill, and the ones who are lying awake late at night worrying, the mothers who are afraid of having taken from their arms and their bosoms their sons, whom they worship and adore.

Yes, Hitler is going east, but I say that we are not going to get together an army and send an army over there to stop him, so long as he is going away from us.

What else do we find in this address of the Senator from Nevada?

What is there to stop his domination, if not conquest, of these countries? What can Holland and Denmark do with regard to the demands of Hitler, in view of Hitler's dominating military force and policy, and the policy of appeasement of Great Britain?

What is there to stop him? What can Holland and Denmark do? Let them answer that. Let the people of Holland answer that question. Let the people of Denmark answer that question. We have enough on our hands here at home, and, as I have repeatedly stated, let Uncle Sam keep his nose out of the domestic affairs of other nations. Let us keep Uncle Sam's nose clean for him. I hope we have him here at home. Let us keep him here at home. He has been all around the world trying to serve as chief of police of the world, while we have troubles of our own here. We have to guard our foreign policy. We have to watch it carefully. It is now creating much talk.

We find that we need help here. When I was in my home city in North Carolina a few days ago I picked up the Charlotte Observer on a Sunday morning. One page is devoted to letters written to the newspaper by various subscribers interested in sundry subjects, and I noticed 9 out of every 10 letters contributed to those columns were written by persons who interested themselves in what was going on in Europe, in some "ism," and only 1 out of 10 interested himself in what is going on in this country.

Do we need a chief of police here at home? We certainly do. The former Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Homer Cummings, about a year ago issued a pamphlet in which he ventured the opinion that the criminals of the United States of America cost the taxpayers of this country, according to his estimate, published in the pamphlet, from fifteen to seventeen billion dollars annually. Someone in the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, I think it was Mr. Edgar Hoover, stated that today there were classified as criminals in the United States a total of about 4,700,000 men.

Think of it, $15,000,000,000 annually! Think of it, 300,000 more men designated as criminals in the United States today than we had in uniform and under arms at the close of the war, on November 11, 1918, when our entire armed forces numbered approximately 4,400,000 men.

I say that we should stay at home and attend to our own business, and that very doctrine I have been preaching for months upon months past. There is not a State in the Union in which I have not made a speech on the subject, reiterating that Uncle Sam should keep his nose out of other people's business. If he does that, there will be no trouble. As I have heretofore stated, we ought to wash behind the old gentleman's ears before we tell anybody else to take a bath. We do not want any trouble with any other country in the world. We want to remain at peace.

What I want our country to do first is to cause industry to make utilization of the 12,000,000 people who today are unemployed. In that connection, I cannot resist the temptation of stating that I hope that there will be passed at the present session of Congress a bill I have introduced providing that there shall be no immigration to this country whatsoever for the next 10 years, or until such time as every employable of the 12,000,000 unemployed may be provided with a job.

In addition to that, speaking of war, I hope Congress will pass at this session another bill I have introduced, a bill which the American people want passed and which will bring about mandatory registration of every alien within our borders, so that we may know how many aliens are in the United States, where they are, and what they are doing here.

Pursuing the statement made by the most excellent chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senator from Nevada, I find that he says:

For the time being, we will pass Mussolini. He has militarized Italy to the fullest extent. He has a tremendous military force. He is by force of circumstances—and may continue to be—in the Berlin-Rome-Tokyo axis.

Eliminating a portion of the address, statements with which I wholly agree, I desire to read this:

No country can successfully attack our shores. In the second place, our people are not cowardly. While they hate war they are not afraid to die for Christianity, morality, justice, and liberty.

I wish to say in regard to that statement that here in the United States we are willing to die for Christianity; we are willing to die for morality; we are willing to die for justice, and we are willing to die for liberty; but we are not willing to die for anyone else's Christianity; we are not willing to die for anyone else's morality, or for anyone else's justice, or for anyone else's liberty. We had better stay home and do our dying in our own country.

Mr. President, in his concluding paragraph the Senator from Nevada states:

Why further impose upon the credulity and the fear of our citizens? Why join in the policies of appeasement or isolation that have not made for peace but for war throughout the world? Why not wholeheartedly support the honorable, peaceful, and practicable policy of our administration? Every patriotic citizen will.

Mr. President, I wish to say again that the American people will be more than happy, they will be more than delighted to support the administration's foreign policy, if the foreign policy of the administration is what the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee says it is in the following statement:

(3) The policy of defense. This policy includes the protection of a country's territory and the rights of its nationals throughout the universe. It holds that such protection shall be accomplished first, through every established, peaceful instrumentality; second, through every legal resistance to encroachments upon the integrity of a nation's territory and the rights of its nationals; and third and lastly, through the use of physical force if every other means has failed, to successfully defend its territory and the rights of its nationals.

I neglected to mention one part and portion of the address of the Senator from Nevada relating to the seizure of the island of Hainan by the Japanese a few days ago. Why should we become excited over the Japanese having seized that island?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Perhaps the island is part of our frontier.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to say to the Senator that, insofar as the junior Senator from North Carolina is concerned, the frontier of the United States will never extend across the Atlantic or across the Pacific.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I join with the able Senator in taking that position.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to say that I do not see any need for us to get excited over what is going on over in Europe. I should like to know who is going to attack us. No one is going to attack us. But I believe in keeping our powder dry. I believe in being prepared. I believe that we should provide for ourselves an adequate national defense, but I believe it should be adequate only for the purpose of defense. I believe our national program providing for an adequate defense should include, most certainly, and perhaps first, the airplanes the President of the United States has called for, because we all know that more time is required in the construction of airplanes than in the construction of other kinds of armament, and we likewise know that airplanes quickly become obsolete.

The chairman of our Foreign Relations Committee made mention of the fact that Hitler and Mussolini and the Mikado of the Japanese were making great inroads into the Western Hemisphere, namely, in the 20 republics which lie to the south of us. That is true. But I wish to ask Senators, What are they going to do about it? We are all worried about it. A short time ago—I think it was in November—a Pan American conference was held at Lima, the capital of Peru. That conference was held, as everyone knows, because we are interested in increasing our influence and commercial relations in the South American countries, which contain about 130,000,000 or 140,000,000 people. It is true that when the Pan American conference was held at Lima the planes which darkened the blue skies of far-away Peru were planes from the factories of Italy and were flown by Italian aviators, instructors of the Peruvian Army. It is true that there were hundreds upon hundreds of Nazi flags everywhere there. It is also true that both Germany and Italy have developed a fine business, a fine trade, with Peru, as they have established and developed commerce with many other countries. It is certainly true that they are making tremendous inroads in the South American countries, and we are sore about it. But I ask Senators, What are they going to do about it? That is what I want to know. That is what we all want to know. We want someone to come forward with a constructive suggestion as to what we are going to do about it.

We are provoked at Hitler because he is getting a great deal of our trade in South America away from us. We are provoked at Mussolini because he is getting a great deal of the South American trade away from us. We are provoked with the Mikado and with the Japanese because they are taking away from us a great deal of our trade in South America. But I ask, What are Senators going to do about it?

Some persons have suggested that we continue our dollar diplomacy. That, in many instances, is rather expensive. We have with us at the present time a gentleman from Brazil. We are desirous of continuing friendly relations with Brazil, and continuing to be the leader in trade with that nation. But it has recently been suggested that in connection with their rearmament program, which will cover a period of 5 years, the legislative branch of their government has appropriated $100,000,000, of which $70,000,000 will go to Germany, $20,000,000 will go to Great Britain, and $3,000,000 of it will come to us, and all that in spite of the fact, as I understand, that about $300,000,000 worth of Brazilian bonds have gone "flooy" in this country.

Right at our back door is Mexico, with its 16,000,000 or 17,000,000 people. Mexico has seized our oil, the oil of American investors and British investors, and it is said that Mexico has sold $17,000,000 worth of that oil to Hitler—to Germany. What are we going to do about it? I dare say no one in this body nor any other American will say, "Let us go over there and kill Hitler, and whip the Germans so that we can have all the trade with South America."

After all, Mr. President, I shall say in conclusion that the American people are interested only in keeping the United States out of war. Much has been said about the conquest that is going on in China. Much is being said now about the fortification of the island of Guam, which is a very small island in the Pacific, 30 miles long and 5 miles wide and containing a few thousand inhabitants. We are tied to that island as a result of our controversy with Spain.

We are discussing now the question of investing, perhaps, $5,000,000 in developing the harbor and improving the island generally. I say that we ought to get out of troubled waters. I say we ought to stay out of that section of the world.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Gladly.

Mr. LUNDEEN. It seems to me that there can be no harm in establishing an air base there for reconnaissance and scouting purposes, and perhaps deepening the harbor for vessels to enter. I am not in favor of spending $80,000,000, or $50,000,000, or $40,000,000 on that island, for it would merely be a Christmas present for the Japanese, who would be able to capture the island within 48 hours after the beginning of hostilities. However, as I understand, the bill merely proposes to provide some navigation and aviation facilities, which I think are justified, because they would constitute part of the eyes of the fleet, as it were.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The question at the present time is one involving making an expenditure of anywhere from $50,000,000 to $80,000,000 in maintaining a permanent establishment.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I do not think such a large expenditure would be wise.

Mr. REYNOLDS. As a matter of fact, in that connection we have the question of Philippine independence. There is some discussion now in regard to postponing the time at which we shall give up the Philippines. That question will bring on considerable argument, for, as the Senator knows, many Americans think we never should have gone into the Philippines and spent the millions we did spend; and now that we have the opportunity to get out, that we should take advantage of that opportunity.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Today is the 21st of February, the day before Washington's birthday. I am wondering if the Senator agrees with the foreign policy of Washington, Jefferson, and Jackson, the great leaders of our country in the past. I am sure he does.

When the present foreign policy conflicts with the wise policy upon which this country was established, and upon which road we traveled to greatness and glory, it seems to me we should not hesitate to break with any present policy which comes in conflict with the views of the great statesmen of the past.

Would it not be wise not merely to read the Farewell Address of George Washington, and the views of Jefferson and Jackson, but to follow that policy a little more closely than we have in the past? Perhaps we should then be a happier, more prosperous, and more contented people.

We have gone about as a sort of prodigal, and thrown our money and men around the world. Soon we shall be glad to come home to the house of the father.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The people of virtually every nation of the world think we are the biggest "sims" upon the face of the earth. We probably are. We saved the hide of Great Britain. We gave the lives of 37,000 men. We spent billions of dollars, and loaned billions of dollars. The World Almanac says that Great Britain is now indebted to us to the extent of about $5,437,000,000 in principal and interest.

I should like to show the Members of this body how Great Britain appreciates our generosity. I wish to say again that all Great Britain has ever given to us is the broad "a," and much conversation.

We are talking about maintaining the Western Hemisphere for ourselves. Very well. Every day we are talking about creating the empire of the Western Hemisphere—that is, North America and South America—but we are opposed to the Japanese creating the empire of the Orient. The Senator understands that.

Great Britain has much property in the Western Hemisphere which she could deliver to us if she were honest and wanted to pay her honest debts; but she will not do it. I wish I had had the opportunity of talking to Mr. Anthony Eden when he was in the United States. I should have asked Mr. Eden if he would not use his influence with England to recommend that Great Britain bring about the transfer to us of some property in the Western Hemisphere. In November I talked with the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Chamberlain, in London. I was introduced to him by our very able representative, Mr. Joseph Kennedy, Ambassador to the Court of St. James. However, I felt that it might be embarrassing to Mr. Kennedy for me to ask the Prime Minister if he would not recommend that Great Britain pay us a little on her debt, so I did not ask him; but if I had had the opportunity of talking to Mr. Eden, I should have asked Mr. Eden if he would not use his influence.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator speaks of the debt being somewhere around $5,000,000,000.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Five billion four hundred thirty-seven million dollars.

Mr. LUNDEEN. It is really twice that, because some 10 years ago we canceled and refunded half of the debt Britain owed us, on the theory that she would pay the balance. She has never paid the balance, and therefore the original sum is due and owing.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I believe that all the defaulting nations now owe the original amount, and that the refunded amount is out of the picture. That is the law in connection with any private debt or any national debt. Our debtors have failed to fulfill their agreement, and the original amount is due.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I think that is true. As a matter of fact, at the end of the war the total indebtedness of the Allies to the United States was $22,000,000,000. We cut it in half, and made it $11,000,000,000.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator will recall that a few days ago I called to his attention the policy of Andrew Jackson, the great Democrat from Tennessee. Referring to the French debt, Andrew Jackson said that if the debt were not paid he would seize the islands in the sea belonging to the French. I was very much interested in the able statement of the Senator on that subject on that occasion.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator.

In reference to our foreign policy, in which so many persons are interested, there is only one question. That question is, "Shall we follow the policies of the Father of his Country, George Washington, or—?" That is the question. Whom shall we follow?

Mr. LUNDEEN. And Jefferson.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Shall we follow the policies of George Washington, the Father of his Country, or—?

We hear much talk about the great democracies which we must save. We must save the French; we must save the British. If Great Britain were a democracy, she would free the Irish. Great Britain talks about being a democracy. If she wants to be fair and provide liberty for the people of the world, let her consider that she has 375,000,000 people enslaved in India. How did Great Britain obtain India? In just the same fashion in which Mussolini obtained Ethiopia. Great Britain talks about aggressors. Great Britain and France cannot receive any pity out of our hearts because of the way they have treated us. We have enough on our hands to preserve the democracy of the United States of America. Everybody knows that. The so-called democracies of Great Britain and France are not like that of the United States of America. I am interested in preserving the democracy of the United States of America. If we do that, we shall have our hands full.

By the way, in speaking of Washington, let me say that he is the man whom I intend to follow. He is good enough for me. He advised us to keep clear of foreign entanglements.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. According to some of the "smart boys" who now hold the stage, George Washington is old-fashioned and out of the picture. However, I submit that the "smart boys" have not done very well.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in conclusion let me say that I have in my hand a very interesting booklet, evidently prepared by an extremely able man. I have made some comparison of the pages of this booklet with the pages of history, and I find that the statements made herein are thoroughly in accord with the statements of many historians whom I have utilized for purposes of comparison. The booklet which I hold in my hand is entitled "Name the Aggressors." It is written by Mr. Louis B. Ward, M. A., Pd. M., 708 Fisher Building, Detroit, Mich. It was copyrighted in 1939 by Mr. Louis B. Ward.

I turn to page 22. There I find listed the name of every section of the world which has been conquered by the British. No doubt those conquests brought about the slaughter of millions upon millions of persons. I ask that pages 22 and 23, which set out the political subdivisions of the British Empire, be embodied in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I ask that there be embodied in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the matter on pages 25 to 28 of the booklet to which I have referred, which sets out the aggressions and conquests of the great democracy of France. She owes us many billion dollars. She clothes herself in raiment of white and places herself upon a pedestal of ivory, like John Bull, heralding to the world that she is without fault, without sin, and as pure as the drifted snow. I ask that the pages of the booklet to which I refer be embodied in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

IV. ITALIAN WARS

In 1499 came the French conquest of Milan.
In 1515 France invaded Italy. There followed the wars with Charles the First, the defeat of Francis the First at Pavis, and the consequent struggle for the possession of Italy.

V. WAR CONTINUES

In 1638 came the invasion of Spain. In 1640 Turin was captured by the French.
In 1667 war with Spain was renewed.
In 1672 the French made war on the Netherlands.
By 1680 France had become the most formidable power in Europe.
In 1702 France invaded the Netherlands. In 1733 France went to the war of the Polish succession.
In 1740 she reentered war over the Austrian succession.
In 1744 she fought England and Austria.
In 1747 she commenced war once more on the Netherlands.

VI. NAPOLEONIC PERIOD

In 1792, during the Revolution, France entered upon a war with Germany.
Under Napoleon, in 1796, she declared war on Italy. The next year Napoleon marched into Austria.
In 1798 he was campaigning in Egypt.
In 1799 he waged his Swiss campaign.
In 1802 he was President of the Italian Republic. Then he made war on England.
In 1805 he fought at Austerlitz.
In 1807 he made war on Russia.
In the same year he invaded Portugal.
In 1812 he invaded Russia and Moscow was burned. Then, of course, came defeat to the "aggressor."

VII. THE HOLY ALLIANCE

In 1818 the Holy Alliance was formed.
In 1830 Algiers was conquered by the French.
In 1844 came war in Morocco.
In 1854 France again declared war on Russia.
In 1859 she declared war on Austria.
In 1863 she occupied Mexico.
In 1870 she declared war on Prussia.
In 1907 she occupied Morocco with troops, and by 1912 made it a protectorate.

At the end of the World War, Alsace-Lorraine was returned by Germany.

VIII. THE AGGRESSOR TODAY

Today France understands the lot of the aggressor nations. She holds a mandate over Syria, with its 2,800,000 population.

In French India she has 286,000 colonists.

In French Indo-China she has 21,500,000 under her rule. Her total dependents in Asia alone number nearly 25,000,000 souls. In Africa she holds a protectorate over Morocco, with its 6,000,000. She owns Algeria, with its 7,000,000; Tunisia, with its 2,600,000. She boasts French West Africa, with fourteen and a half million; holds a mandate over Togoland, a mandate over Cameroon, and rules 3,000,000 in the Congo, or French Equatorial Africa. Madagascar, Comoro Islands, and Somaliland complete her African possessions.

Thus, in addition to 24,000,000 in Asia, she rules 38,000,000 in Africa.

In America her possessions are relatively inconsequential. St. Pierre and Miquelon, Guadeloupe, Martinique, and French Guiana number only approximately 525,000.

In Oceania, New Caledonia, and Tahiti number scarcely a hundred thousand.

In all, she has 42,000,000 at home and 60,000,000 in her colonies. It is France who naturally wants Uncle Sam to maintain the status quo among the nations.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Finally, Mr. President, I ask that there be embodied in the RECORD, as the conclusion of my remarks, part VIII of this little booklet, entitled "The Judgment of George Washington."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PART VIII. THE JUDGMENT OF GEORGE WASHINGTON

On the subject of foreign nations men do well to review the judgments of the illustrious Washington.

From the Farewell Address is, therefore, quoted the wisdom of him who sacrificed most that we might be a nation:

JUSTICE TOWARD ALL NATIONS

"Observe good faith and justice toward all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct, and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt that, in the course of time and things, the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it? Can it be that providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? the experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas, is it rendered impossible by its vices?"

AVOID INVETERATE ANTIPATHIES

"In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded, and that, in place of them, just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another a habitual hatred or a habitual fondness is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable, when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent collisions; obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty, of nations has been the victim.

AVOID PASSIONATE ATTACHMENT

"So, likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducement or justification. It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate, in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld. And it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens (who devote themselves to the favorite nation) facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base of foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

BEWARE BEING A SATELLITE

"As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak toward a great and powerful nation dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

THE INSIDIOUS WILES OF FOREIGN INFLUENCE

"Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens), the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike of another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.

"The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

EUROPE HAS A SET OF PRIMARY INTERESTS

"Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none, or a very remote, relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

"Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

WHY QUIT OUR OWN TO STAND ON FOREIGN GROUND?

"Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

"It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world—so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than to private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But, in my opinion, it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.

"Taking care always to keep ourselves, by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

THE INGRATITUDE OF NATIONS

"Harmony, liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing, with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the Government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary, and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied, as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that, by such acceptance, it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

"In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish; that they will control the usual current of the passions, or prevent our Nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations. But if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, or warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism; this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated."

APPLICATION

The practical political question before this Nation today is whether to follow the wisdom of Washington or not.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposing to strike from page 59, line 12, the sum of $11,500,000, and in lieu thereof to insert the sum of $9,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Federal Housing Administration", on page 59, line 17, after the words "in all", to strike out "$15,000,000" and insert "$12,500,000", and in line 18, after the numerals "1940", to strike out the colon and the words "Provided, That of said sum of $15,000,000 the sum of $2,500,000 shall be available for the remainder of the fiscal year 1939", so as to read:

Not to exceed $9,000,000 of the mutual mortgage insurance fund and $3,500,000 of the funds advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Federal Housing Administration, created under authority of the National Housing Act of June 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 1246), in all $12,500,000, shall be available during the fiscal year 1940 for administrative expenses of the Administration, including: Personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (5 U. S. C. 821-833), but there may be allowed, in addition to mileage at a rate not to exceed 4 cents per mile for travel by motor vehicle reimbursement for the actual cost of ferry fares and bridge and tunnel tolls, and employees engaged in the inspection of property may be paid an allowance not to exceed 3 cents per mile for all travel performed in their personally owned automobiles within the limits of their official posts of duty when such travel is performed in connection with such inspection; printing and binding; law books, books of reference, and not to exceed $1,500 for periodicals and newspapers; not to exceed $1,500 for contract actuarial services; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; purchase of one and maintenance, repair, and operation of three motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes; payment, when specifically authorized by the Administrator, of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses to persons serving, while away from their homes, without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the Administration; not to exceed $2,000 for expenses of attendance, when specifically authorized by the Administrator, at meetings concerned with the work of the Administration; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and all other necessary administrative expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments. The bill is still before the Senate open to amendment.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I offer four amendments which have to do with the language of the bill, and which are acceptable to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], and I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an explanation of the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I ask to have the amendments stated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I insist on the amendments being stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 8, after the word "elsewhere", it is proposed to insert:

Including expenses of the Air Safety Board other than those specifically provided for under "Salaries and expenses, Air Safety Board."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senate that the purpose of the several amendments offered by the Senator from Missouri is to correct and clarify the appropriation for the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

After the bill had passed the House, the representatives of the organization submitted these amendments to us as being necessary to straighten out certain questions arising as a result of decisions of the Comptroller General. At the time the committee thought it best not to adopt the amendments, but I think they should be sent to conference in order that we may have a chance to find out the justification for them. They deal merely with the question of the jurisdiction of the Air Safety Board and of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, as to the approval of expenditures.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, are these the amendments in which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] is interested?

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes, Mr. President; they are.

Mr. McKELLAR. I very much hope the amendments will be adopted.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I did not expect to have anything to say about the matter, but it appears that there is a controversy between the organizations as to the officials who shall have authority to control the administrative expenses. The House passed the bill with the language as it was submitted by the Director of the Budget. My own opinion is that the organizations should settle their differences, that the Director of the Budget should determine the matter, and that we should not be called upon to pass upon a question of this kind; but I think the only way in which we can do justice to the present situation is to adopt the amendments and let them go to conference, and then determine the right and wrong of the matter.

Mr. TRUMAN. I desire to say to the Senator from South Carolina that this organization has been set up since the adjournment of the last Congress. It is made up of organizations taken from the Department of Commerce, the Post Office Department, and the Interstate Commerce Commission; and they have not as yet had a chance to get shaken down and adjusted to the point where they can function properly. This is merely an effort to help them get that done.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Under the amendments which have been tendered or may be tendered, is there any chance of the officials, in their quarrels and controversies, increasing the appropriations or expanding the authority which heretofore has been granted?

Mr. TRUMAN. Not at all; that cannot be done.

Mr. KING. If I had been here during the discussion of the act referred to in the amendments—I was ill at the time and had to leave—I should have opposed some of the appropriations carried in the act for this organization. I think they are too large.

Mr. TRUMAN. I shall be glad to go into the matter in detail with the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The remaining amendments offered by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 8, after the word "services" and the semicolon, it is proposed to insert "fees and mileage of witnesses."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 18, before the word "operation", it is proposed to insert "fees and mileage of witnesses."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 15, after the words "provisions of", it is proposed to strike out "Title VII of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938", and insert "sections 701 and 702 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, except clause (5) of subsection 702 (a) thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 17, after the word "elsewhere", it is proposed to insert "rent and expenses incident to the operation of field offices."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I submit for the RECORD an explanation of these amendments, and ask to have it printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

On page 7, line 8, before the word "contract", we request that the following words be inserted: "including expenses of the Air Safety Board other than those specifically provided for under 'Salaries and expenses, Air Safety Board'."

Reasons: The item "Salaries and expenses, Air Safety Board" (covered at lines 17 to 25, on page 8, and lines 1 to 8, on page 9) is intended to cover only a certain part of the expenses of that part of this agency. It is intended that the remaining part of its expenses, consisting largely of rents, furniture, office equipment and supplies, and communications expenses in Washington shall be paid from the general appropriation to the Authority. It is possible that the existence of a separate provision for a certain part of the expenses of the Air Safety Board might be construed to deprive the Authority of the right to pay these incidental Washington expenses from the general fund. The above insert is suggested in order to clear up that point.

On page 7, line 9, before the phrase "examination of estimates", we request insertion of the following words: "fees and mileage of witnesses."

Reasons: The insertion of these words is deemed essential in order to make it clear that the Authority has the right to pay witnesses' fees and mileage in cases where witnesses are subpoenaed to attend investigations and hearings of various kinds that are required by the provisions of the act.

On page 8, line 15, it is requested that the phrase "Title VII of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938" be deleted and that there be substituted therefor the following: "sections 701 and 702 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, except clause (5) of subsection 702 (a) thereof."

Reasons: The $380,000 to be appropriated for the salaries and expenses of the Air Safety Board are intended to include primarily the salaries paid to that Board and its employees and the expenses which it incurs in the investigation of accidents and for the operation of aircraft. It is not intended, however, to include any expenses that the Air Safety Board may be obliged to incur because of the provisions of subsection 702 (a) (5), which directs that Board to assist the Authority in ascertaining what will best tend to reduce or eliminate the possibility of accidents and to conduct special studies and investigations at the request or with the approval of the Authority. The change above requested, in conjunction with the change requested in item 2 above, is intended to clarify the purposes to which the $380,000 is applicable and the fact that the Authority is to pay the rest of the expenses of the Air Safety Board from the general fund.

On page 8, line 17, after the words "Columbia and elsewhere", we request the following insertion "rent and expenses incident to the operation of field offices."

Reasons: Approximately $60,000 of the $380,000 appropriated for these expenses was budgeted to cover the expenses of opening field offices for the Air Safety Board. It was felt that these offices would not only make it possible for the representatives of the Air Safety Board to get to the scene of an accident more promptly than if they were obliged to travel from Washington, but that their existence would result in savings in operating expenses. There would seem to be some doubt as to whether any part of the $380,000 could be expended for rent and other expenses of such field offices unless the suggested language is inserted.

On page 8, line 18, after the phrase "reporting services", we request that the following words be inserted "fees and mileage of witnesses."

Reasons. In its investigations the Air Safety Board will occasionally have to subpoena witnesses. It is deemed essential that the language shall specifically authorize the expenditure of the appropriated funds to pay the necessary fees and mileage of such witnesses.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

No part of any appropriation contained in this or any other act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, shall be available for the payment of enlistment allowance to enlisted men for reenlistment within a period of 3 months from date of discharge as to reenlistments made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, notwithstanding the applicable provisions of sections 9 and 10 of the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922 (37 U. S. C., 13, 16).

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I feel constrained to make the point of order that that amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, notice of a motion to suspend the rules is on the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BYRNES submitted the following notice in writing:

"In accordance with the provisions of rule 40 of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, the following amendment, viz: At the proper place, to insert the following:

"Sec. 6. No part of any appropriation contained in this or any other act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, shall be available for the payment of enlistment allowance to enlisted men for reenlistment within a period of 3 months from date of discharge as to reenlistments made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, notwithstanding the applicable provisions of sections 9 and 10 of the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922 (37 U. S. C. 13, 16)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to suspend paragraph 4 of Rule XVI.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me inquire if this matter will lead to discussion. It is now after 5 o'clock, and the Senate will have to meet tomorrow.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the session might as well go over until tomorrow. We have to meet then, anyway, and it is now after 5 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of no quorum is withdrawn.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Acting Asst. Surg. John D. Lane, Jr., to be passed assistant surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to take effect from date of oath.

Mr. HARRISON, also from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nominations of the following passed assistant surgeons to be surgeons in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from the dates set opposite their names:

Albert T. Morrison, February 1, 1939, and Langdon R. White, March 9, 1939.

Mr. GERRY, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Joseph J. Cunningham, of North Providence, R. I., to be collector of customs for collection district No. 5, with headquarters at Providence, R. I. (Reappointment.)

Mr. HERRING, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Mabel Gittinger, of Iowa, to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 44, with headquarters at Des Moines, Iowa. (Reappointment.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lucas in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Herschel W. Arant, of Ohio, to be judge for the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Horace Frierson, Jr., to be United States attorney for the middle district of Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Edmund J. Brandon, of Massachusetts, to be United States attorney for the district of Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John T. Cahill, of New York, to be United States attorney for the southern district of New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, February 22, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate on February 21 (legislative day of February 20), 1939

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1939

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

They that trust in the Lord are as Mount Zion, which cannot be moved, but abideth forever. As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about His people, from this time forth and for evermore.

Remind us, blessed Father, that the secret of a true life is in Thee. Thou wilt fill the sphere of life with beauty and fruitfulness, with vision and victory. We pray Thee to enable us to bring character to its highest unruffled temper, unrumored patience, charity that thinketh no evil, and cleanness of life as modest as it is unblemished. May we rise and set our affections on things above the earth. We praise Thee that love is written on the sunbeams of every morning. Wilt Thou bless us and prepare us for this day? In the sacred name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had ordered that Mr. TAFT be appointed a member on the part of the Senate of the Gen. Anthony Wayne Memorial Commission, established by Public Resolution 64, approved August 19, 1937, vice Mr. VANDENBERG, resigned.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 303. An act for the relief of The Ocilla Star;

S. 316. An act to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to reappoint David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner as members of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia;

S. 463. An act for the relief of The Fitzgerald Leader;

S. 745. An act for the relief of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co.; and

S. 1315. An act for the relief of the Corbitt Co.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been requested to recognize two or three gentlemen to submit unanimous-consent requests. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts withhold his motion for that purpose?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Surely.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes on next Thursday following the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and the legislative program for the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, we came here at 11 o'clock for the purpose of transacting business. I do not know the purpose or the subject of the gentleman's talk. Could the gentleman tell us what he intends to speak about?

Mr. FERGUSON. I have introduced a bill dealing with the Federal Reserve System. I think it is pertinent at this time due to the fact that we are extending the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has already been extended, so the gentleman's speech will be just as timely tomorrow as today.

Mr. FERGUSON. It is the gentleman's privilege to object, of course.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. We came here at 11 o'clock to do business. Mr. Speaker, I feel constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the other day I called attention to the manner in which the W. P. A. was trying to build up its rolls so as to make a record for the $150,000,000 that they have tried to hornswoggle Congress out of. I call attention to an article in the Cleveland Plain Dealer of February 17, and read from it the following:

FINDS 51 PERCENT NEGLECT LATEST W. P. A. CALLS

(By John P. Leacacos)

It can be further reliably reported that W. P. A., in addition to setting its house in order by increased stringency of regulations and its current investigation into the eligibility of W. P. A. workers, has also been urging the city speed its certification process so that all in need may be placed on record.

The reason for this, it is said, lies in the fact that only if the cities demonstrate their need of W. P. A., as evidenced in bulging waiting assignment lists, can President Roosevelt sell a hostile Congress on the necessity of another deficiency appropriation to forestall drastic cuts this spring.

In the 2-week survey of assignments, begun when the rolls stood at 68,429, there were 1,705 dismissals and immediate replacements of these and a rise in the rolls to 69,035, a net increase of 606.

TWO THOUSAND FOUR HUNDRED AND TWELVE FAILED TO REPORT

This made 2,311 new jobs that were available and were filled. However, to place this number at work required the issuing of assignment slips to 4,723 persons. Of these, 2,412 simply never showed up.

The reasoning behind the assertion that probably 3,000 of the 10,317 persons on the waiting assignment file will never report for work is this, according to Schwartz:

The file is made of five-thousand-odd men and five-thousand-odd women. Women, finding it much more difficult to obtain private employment, will probably report for work in the majority of cases, if given jobs. It is estimated at least 4,500 will do so.

The number of men who will report, however, is estimated at only 2,500. This follows the percentage figure discovered in the survey of actual assignments, most of whom were men. This makes about 7,000 in all who would probably take W. P. A. jobs, if offered.

It thus appears that Cleveland had a roll of 69,035 paid by W. P. A. They have in 2 days investigated 6,000 cases, or 9 percent. They have found over 1,700 out of the 6,000 who did not belong on the roll, or 28 percent.

Just as the unqualified are dismissed they ask those certified by the city to appear, and 51 percent of those certified failed to appear.

Taken on the same basis through the country, if 28 percent should be dismissed because they do not belong on the roll, that would eliminate at least $50,000, and now at once reduce the number on the W. P. A. rolls to about 2,200,000, and we would have $150,000,000 surplus to turn back out of the W. P. A. appropriation on July 1, next, instead of requiring a deficiency of that amount.

The most astounding thing is the great effort the W. P. A. administrators are making to fill up their rolls now before Congress finds out the truth and insists on getting rid of this gigantic W. P. A. fraud and having honest relief.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include quotations from the newspapers to which I referred.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address I delivered over the Columbia Broadcasting System last Saturday; and I also ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from a man by the name of Fred Mercer, Glendale, Calif.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, all war veterans in the House—veterans of the World War, the Spanish-American War, and the Civil War—are asked to meet in the room of the Veterans' Committee Thursday at 10 o'clock.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman's request embarrasses me. Everyone knows that during the Seventy-fifth Congress the policy was adopted of allowing Members to proceed for 1 minute only before the legislative business of the day was disposed of. I shall have no objection to the gentleman's addressing the House for 1 minute, but I hope he will not ask for longer time.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I amend my request accordingly and ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein copy of a bill (H. R. 4310) to amend section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, which I have introduced, together with the existing section of the Federal Reserve law which I seek to amend.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, the reason I address the House at this time is to state that I wanted to ask the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee yesterday if in his opinion the Federal Reserve System had functioned and made loans to banks just as the R. F. C. made them after they got into a depressed condition, which would have averted the closing of thousands of banks? I did not have this opportunity, but I feel certain the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee would have answered in the affirmative.

I recently received in my office the Twenty-fifth Annual Report of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. As a director in a small country bank that went through the depression following the crash of 1929, a bank that became a member of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and has recently become a member of the Federal Reserve System, I read this report with a great deal of care. And after reading the report, feeling the need of changing the Federal Reserve System by making mandatory the use of the discount powers of the Federal Reserve System, I have introduced H. R. 4310, which I feel will accomplish this purpose. I want to place in the RECORD the bill which I have introduced, H. R. 4310, and a copy of section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, so that the membership may note the changes in the bill.

[H. R. 4310, 76th Cong., 1st sess.]

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IX, title 12, sec. 343), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. DISCOUNT OF OBLIGATIONS ARISING OUT OF ACTUAL COMMERCIAL TRANSACTIONS.—Upon the endorsement of any of its member banks, which shall be deemed a waiver of demand, notice, and protest by such bank as to its own endorsement exclusively, any Federal Reserve bank shall discount notes, drafts, and bills of exchange arising out of actual commercial transactions; that is, notes, drafts, and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial, or commercial purposes, or the proceeds of which have been used, or are to be used, for such purposes, including notes secured totally or in part by real-estate mortgages of any description. The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall accept for rediscount at face value any note classified in group I (all notes shall be classified under group I, if ultimate

Nothing in this chapter contained shall be construed to prohibit such notes, drafts, and bills of exchange, secured by staple agricultural products, or other goods, wares, or merchandise from being eligible for such discount, and the notes, drafts, and bills of exchange of factors issued as such making advances exclusively to producers of staple agricultural products in their raw state shall be eligible for such discount; but such definition shall not include notes, drafts, or bills covering merely investments or issued or drawn for the purpose of carrying or trading in stocks, bonds, or other investment securities, except bonds and notes of the Government of the United States. Notes, drafts, and bills admitted to discount under the terms of this paragraph must have a maturity at the time of discount of not more than 90 days, exclusive of grace.

In unusual and exigent circumstances, the Federal Reserve Board, by the affirmative vote of not less than five members, may authorize any Federal Reserve bank, during such periods as the said Board may determine, at rates established in accordance with the provisions of section 357 of this title, to discount for any individual, partnership, or corporation, notes, drafts, and bills of exchange of the kinds and maturities made eligible for discount for member banks under other provisions of this chapter when such notes, drafts, and bills of exchange are endorsed and otherwise secured to the satisfaction of the Federal Reserve bank: Provided, That before discounting any such note, draft, or bill of exchange for an individual or a partnership or corporation the Federal Reserve bank shall obtain evidence that such individual, partnership, or corporation is unable to secure adequate credit accommodations from other banking institutions. All such discounts for individuals, partnerships, or corporations shall be subject to such limitations, restrictions, and regulations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe. (Dec. 23, 1913, c. 6, § 13, 38 Stat. 263; Sept. 7, 1916, c. 461, 39 Stat. 752; Mar. 4, 1923, c. 252, title IV, § 402, 42 Stat. 1478; July 21, 1932, c. 520, § 210, 47 Stat. 715.)

Before I go into the legislation I want to read some very interesting quotations from this report. After discussing under the title Sources of Reserves to correct the increase of balances of member banks and the increase of the country's monetary gold stock in dollars, on page 21 we find the following:

As a net result of all these developments and transactions, $6,000,000,000 was added to member-bank reserves in the 5 years 1934-38. Of this amount, $3,650,000,000 was absorbed by increases in required reserves, due both to the increase in the prescribed ratios of reserves to deposits and to the growth in the banks' deposit liabilities. In the early weeks of 1939, excess reserves increased to $3,600,000,000. A continuation of gold inflow and of silver purchases would further add to excess reserves. The volume of excess reserves now in existence, furthermore, can be greatly increased by actions of the United States Treasury.

The popular impression from such reports is that these excess reserves are caused from one or two reasons: First, that the banks will not loan money; or, second, that business is afraid to borrow money. The latter is the reason commonly given by Republican speakers. The truth is these are only small contributing factors. The small banks have learned their lesson. They remember too well the experience of 1932 and 1933. In order to get money in those years to pay depositors, banks were forced to put up for rediscount notes, the face of which was three times the amount of money advanced by the Federal Reserve System or other rediscounting agencies. It has become a fetish, an obsession, something that bankers are proud of, to keep their institutions constantly liquid. After a small percent of an institution's deposits are loaned the loan policy tightens because of the horrible memories of past experiences with rediscounts. The Federal Reserve System can change this picture overnight. If banks knew the Federal Reserve System would take their paper at face value with up to a 2-year maturity, business would immediately be adequately financed.

The bill I have introduced changes section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act by making it mandatory, changing the wording to read "Any Federal Reserve bank shall discount." It also makes the bill read, "including notes secured totally or in part by real-estate mortgages of any description." It also extends the maturity from 90 days to 2 years. Of what possible good is a rediscount agency accepting notes of 90 days' maturity? I would say in my part of the West that 90 percent of the losses suffered by banks were due to the fact the banks were forced to liquidate, forced to sell out the maker of the note. Time would have made the notes good. This has been proven by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which made loans on supposedly questionable paper. Time made the loans good. There would have been no need for an R. F. C. if the Federal Reserve System had functioned, if the Federal Reserve System had accepted for rediscount at face value paper offered by member banks. To further insure the workability of this bill I have written into the existing section 13 the following language:

The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall accept for rediscount at face value any note classified in group I. (all notes shall be classified under group I if ultimate repayment seems reasonably assured in view of the sound net worth of the maker or endorser, his earning capacity and character, or the protection of collateral or other security of sound intrinsic value) at the last official examination made by examiners duly appointed by the Comptroller of the Currency with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

My legislation will make the Federal Reserve System work. I ask only that they accept for rediscount at face value notes that have been classified under group I at the last official examination. On page 89 of the report, to which I have previously referred, is clearly set out the policy to guide examiners appointed by the Comptroller of the Currency. To show that something must be done to speed the flow of credit I refer to the same report, page 23, in referring to the course of business in 1938:

The banks, therefore, are in a position to contribute to recovery by easily meeting such legitimate demands for funds as may develop. The rate of turn-over of existing deposits, however, continues to be unusually low.

I sincerely believe that the caution instilled in bankers by the crash of 1929-33 will continue to hold loans down, continue to hold back the recovery of this Nation until Congress demands the Federal Reserve System to take at face value all paper classified as collectible by the last Federal examination. That the Federal Reserve System is beginning to take note of the fact that its regulations have discouraged its use I quote from the paragraph dealing with revised examination procedure on page 37:

Under the new designations the principle is clearly recognized that in making loans banks should be encouraged to place emphasis upon soundness and intrinsic value rather than upon liquidity or quick maturity, and the examiners are expected to follow this principle in their examinations.

If this is truly the policy of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and this quotation is taken from their report, certainly they should not object to extending the maturity of rediscounted paper from 90 days to 6 months.

To sum up in a few pertinent figures what has happened between 1930 and 1938, the private debt has decreased from $125,000,000,000 in 1930 to ninety-one billion in 1938, a decrease of thirty-four billion. Private debt indicates money borrowed to carry on business. On the other hand, the Government debt—Federal, State, and local combined—has increased from thirty-five billion in 1930 to sixty-three billion in 1938, an increase of twenty-eight billion. During this time, especially since 1932, there has been a succession of Government agencies, Government loan agencies, to take care of the unfortunate both in business and in private life. The R. F. C., which makes as a prerequisite of a loan the inability to get funds from another source, the agencies of Farm Credit which again require that a man has to be denied credit from other sources, Farm Security that makes loans to the unfortunate farmers, Farm Tenancy which makes loans for tenants to buy farms. I am proposing in this legislation to make credit available to the businessman of every town and city in this Nation, to the farmer, to the housewife who purchases an icebox, to the wage earner who buys an automobile, to the merchant to increase his stock or remodel his store. Not the down-and-out, not the broke merchant, but to the man who can establish his credit with his local banker on his ability to make money and pay it back. No one, no Government agency, no emergency agency, no social worker, no farm planner, no group of experts, can possibly know as much about a man's ability to repay a loan as his local banker. This bill will encourage that local banker to make every loan he thinks will be repaid. At the same time the local banker will know that when the time comes that he needs the money to pay off his depositors there will be a source of credit from which he can get 100 cents on the dollar on the paper until it matures. He will know this, of course, after his paper has been passed on by the regularly constituted bank examiners.

Let us look at the record of how the Federal Reserve System is functioning now. In December 1938 all the member banks of the entire System had rediscounted with the Federal Reserve System the insignificant sum of $10,472,000. In June 1934, accompanied by a great deal of oratory, a great deal of promise to industry and business, Congress passed an amendment hedged with reservations making loans to industry possible. Since 1934 the Federal Reserve System has made 2,653 loans for a grand total of $175,011,000. Of these loans, $24,024,000 are outstanding. Thus we see that the combined loans to industry and the rediscount notes of the member banks come to the grand total of $34,496,000. This is less than 1 percent of the excess reserves of the Federal Reserve System. We do not have and never have had sufficient deposits in our small banks in this country to finance local business. Industries such as the motorcar industry have been forced, very profitably so, to create their own finance companies. With the great reservoir of credit available to member banks through the Federal Reserve System there is no excuse for any community with a bank that is a member of the Federal Reserve System to be underfinanced. If the local banks know that by congressional action the Federal Reserve System is required to accept their notes for rediscount, good loans will be made. At the present time paper acceptable for rediscount with the Federal Reserve System is charged 1½ percent. With credit furnished with the Federal Reserve System at the rate of interest at 1½ percent, plus extension of time to 2 years on notes, local banks will finance every worthy enterprise in their community. Remember the local bank is absolutely responsible for the collection of the note. This is not a bill to guarantee payment such as we have had to aid housing. This is simply a bill to make the Federal Reserve System work by guaranteeing to the banks of this Nation that the paper in times of need or times of expansion will be acceptable at face value. The passage of this act will do more to bring back prosperity, to encourage legitimate business, to create reemployment than all the relief agencies of the Government combined.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixteen Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House. A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-two Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, at this time when there are being made many suggestions for a change in the administrative set-up of the various emergency agencies intended to stimulate and expedite economic recovery and stability, I deem it fitting and proper to bring to the attention of the Members of this House and you, Mr. Speaker, certain observations that I have made and some suggestions that might be profitably brought to the consideration of the people of this Nation, as well as to that of the governmental agencies concerned.

We have heard much, particularly in recent months, concerning the Works Progress Administration; often of its failures and occasionally of its accomplishments. Frankly, we who created the W. P. A. should assume full responsibility in connection with the failures it has made, because of our own failure to legislate more intelligently.

When this agency was created and began to administer work relief for the benefit of the unemployed, we so legislated that it paid what was termed a security wage—a wage lower in every instance and in every locality than the prevailing rate of pay for all lines of work in private employment in those localities. The agency rapidly branched into every field of labor with a personnel, I regret to say, that was not properly trained or experienced and therefore was not, nor could it be expected to be, competent to carry on the work to which it was assigned. I point specifically in that regard to construction projects and wish to say, without any qualification whatever, that the W. P. A. never has been properly equipped and never has obtained the proper personnel, under work-relief regulations imposed, to carry on those construction projects efficiently.

As the construction work program was broadened by the W. P. A., labor realized that if the agency continued the security wage requirement, it would soon break down the established union wage scales that had been built up over a period of many years, and only after a bitter struggle each step of the way on the part of labor to obtain that to which the workers of the Nation believed they were entitled.

We know, without recital here, of the powerful opposition from those who felt that wage scales should be kept at the lowest level possible. That opposition, it cannot be successfully denied, was prompted by a motive of greater profits to employers without due regard for welfare of the workers and those dependent upon them.

What really has occurred in connection with the many construction projects which have been carried on under the W. P. A.? The significant thing to me is that while there was a continuous and insistent demand for the workers to be paid the prevailing wage—a just demand, in support of which I joined wholeheartedly—I have yet to hear anything said with reference to a requirement that the workers employed by the W. P. A. must do a prevailing day's work for that prevailing wage. Most certainly there has been no such provision in any of the legislation we have passed. Yet in private employment the worker must give such a return to the employer or that employment ceases.

Why is it that when Government money is being expended on these projects only about 30 percent of the actual value of the money expended is being received in labor return, when we compare the actual work done with that which is accomplished for the same expenditure in private industry or in contract work?

Compare, if you will, the accomplishments of the W. P. A. and the cost of the various construction projects it has administered with the work performed by the Public Works Administration, work that has been handled with an efficiency equal to that attained by private industry in similar construction. The records reveal there has been a return to the people of this Nation of full value for every dollar expended on construction projects administered by this governmental agency. That is the reason today for the urgent demand on the part of the people for continuation of the Public Works Administration, and equally the reason why the public generally is frowning upon the projects that have been constructed by the Works Progress Administration, frowning because the costs have been excessive and because, in many instances, the work done has not been up to the standards that good construction practices require and produce.

We have heard much criticism of an expensive, top-heavy bureaucracy being built up by Washington, yet we find in the P. W. A. an agency whose administrative expense is lower than any other save one in the whole Government, totaling less than one-half of 1 percent of the total cost, releasing 99½ percent for the work it was created to do. And the major portion of that fraction of expense is spent mainly in the field where the building operations are being carried on.

Every demand made upon this agency by the Congress has been met. Impossible deadlines set up for construction to begin and to be carried on in the dead of winter by the contractors have been met almost unnoticed because of the regularity with which they have been attained. Appropriations allotted to this agency have been spent in the manner which the Congress intended, and we never have been faced with the report that P. W. A. guessed wrong and the money was all gone in half the time it was supposed to last.

During its life P. W. A. has been known to have a personnel of some of the most distinguished engineers in the country. Presidents of the engineers' professional societies have been proud to serve in the ranks of its expert staff. Outside of wartime perhaps no more able and skilled staff has ever volunteered for Government service. Proof of this is found in fact during the five and a half years of emergency operation; the P. W. A. sign has come to be a hallmark of quality and honesty in construction.

Therefore it is my opinion that a junior P. W. A. within the present P. W. A. set-up would be the logical and most satisfactory way to handle these construction projects of the type which now are under W. P. A. jurisdiction.

I feel that the W. P. A. which primarily was intended to administer emergency relief work for those immediately facing privation and want should be relieved of responsibility for the efficient construction of these major and intermediate projects. I believe, further, that construction projects, in order to obtain the maximum in efficiency at a minimum of cost and to assure the return of full value for every public dollar expended should be let by contract. These contracts should set up the number of man-hours a contractor would be required to use for each project. Through this method we would be certain that the prevailing day's work would be done by every employee for the prevailing day's wage. Most certainly that is not an unreasonable requirement. It is merely good business practice.

And labor, particularly organized labor, which should assume as much responsibility for seeing to it that a proper day's work is done as to demand that a proper wage scale be maintained, would have no further reason for being remiss in performance of that obligation. There would be no wage-differential factor involved, so labor would have the same relationship with the employer as exists in any private employment.

Under this junior P. W. A. plan the sponsor's contribution, of course, would be less than prevails today in the regular P. W. A. set-up. It is my belief a formula should be worked out varying the sponsor's contribution in accordance with the amount of materials to be used on the project.

Where materials are high and labor cost is comparatively low the sponsor's contribution should be high. On the other hand, where the labor cost is comparatively high with regard to the cost of materials, the Government's contribution should be correspondingly higher and the sponsor's lower, a condition justified, of course, by the fact that work for the unemployed is one justification for the project.

If the suggestion I am making here is carried out, it would result in any State or other political subdivision obtaining from two to three times the number of projects it now obtains for the same amount of money expended. Further, it most certainly would bring about that much-desired elimination of politics from these projects, for the reason that the contractor who is the successful bidder would employ superintendents and other administrative employees purely on the basis of efficiency and ability, and without any regard whatever to political expediency.

I have repeatedly pointed out in my State that, unless those who are receiving Government checks perform a service comparable to that rendered by an employee in private industry who is receiving the same amount of compensation, there eventually would be brought about an end to this public employment due to the resentment created in the public mind, a resentment based—and justly so—on what would appear to be wanton waste of the people's money.

There have been several plans suggested to the Congress recently that seek to terminate the undesirable conditions which I have set forth. One of these is the Byrnes plan, which contemplates consolidation of the P. W. A., the W. P. A., the C. C. C., the Bureau of Public Roads, and the N. Y. A. Most certainly this would be a very remarkable conglomeration in one department, one which, I fear, would result in administrative failure, due to a lack of a common factor in purpose among those varied agencies.

On the other hand, we have before us the Woodrum bill, accompanied by a very clear explanation of its purposes and intent by the Representative from Virginia. I believe that measure has much merit, if certain changes, such as I have indicated here, could be incorporated in the bill.

The question of turning Federal work-relief moneys over to the various States for unsupervised administration has been suggested by several Members of the Congress. This, I feel, most certainly should be given careful thought. It has not been my experience from observation of situations where State officials have sole control of the relief agencies that politics have been eliminated. As a matter of fact, it is my personal knowledge that the more vicious type of political practices and injustices follow where administration is left entirely to State agencies. In many instances adoption of that plan has resulted in a condition where it was not the person or persons most in need who were the beneficiaries, but those who controlled the most votes.

I believe that the Congress itself must place the administrative control of this emergency work relief in hands where it is a foregone conclusion that politics will be eliminated, and that conclusion can only be reached by taking into consideration the record of the various governmental agencies in the past. It is for that reason that I offer the suggestion of a junior P. W. A.

During its existence the P. W. A. has supervised programs involving the expenditure of nearly $6,000,000,000. In all of that time there has not been the slightest hint of irregularities, of inefficiency, of political manipulation, or of failure in accomplishment. Therefore, I wish to pay my respects to the Public Works Administration for the able and efficient manner in which it has discharged the obligations placed on it by the Congress; for the clean and thoroughly honest manner in which that great organization has been conducted. It has, indeed, been a credit to our Government, and in whatever State or town a public Works Administration project has been undertaken, we may well point with pride, without exception, to the accomplishment.

I not only desire to see this agency made a permanent part of the Government structure, but most certainly wish to see it remain where it is, under the efficient and intelligent management of the Secretary of the Interior, the Honorable Harold L. Ickes. In my opinion, it is an excellent commentary upon the value of this organization, when we find throughout our entire Nation hundreds of cities and other political subdivisions which are willing and anxious to expend 55 percent of the amount required for a construction project under P. W. A. supervision, and who refuse to consider the same project under any other form of work relief administration even though the proportionate cost to the sponsor will be but 20 percent or less of the total cost. To my mind that is clearly indicative of the fact that the public has learned from experience that P. W. A. supervision of a construction project means the return of full value for every dollar of Government money expended.

As further confirmation of the faith which the people of this Nation repose in the P. W. A., I point to the recent report from that governmental agency, which shows that, in addition to the number of projects being constructed under the last appropriation made by this Congress, there are now pending from all parts of the United States 5,807 additional projects awaiting further appropriation. Those projects contemplate a total cost of $1,775,500,000, of which the Government would provide, in the form of grants, $778,160,000. In other words, the people of the United States are willing to expend approximately a billion dollars of local money as compared with three-quarters of a billion dollars of Government funds because they feel that they are obtaining value received for that expenditure.

In conclusion let me say that when we in the Congress place all of the construction projects of this character in the hands of an agency which has the full confidence of the public, such as has been demonstrated with regard to the P. W. A., we will have overcome the principal objection that is now being made to this phase of increased Government expenditure and will have solved, once and for all, the problem of politics in work relief.

Contractors, as private employers, would absorb those on the present relief rolls capable of doing the work. Those who, due to infirmities of age or other physical handicap, could not meet the requirements of the employer could be given nonconstruction project employment and assistance through Federal Government cooperation with and supervision of proper State agencies. Women and the white-collar workers would continue to be employed in the type of projects already set up by the W. P. A. None in need would be denied assistance, but those able to deliver it would once again be required to give full value in labor for the dollars paid them.

There is no need for further experimentation in this regard. Past experience has provided the public and the Congress with a yardstick which we need now only to apply to reach a properly measured conclusion.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes tomorrow at the conclusion of the special orders heretofore made for that day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein Resolution No. 13 of the Board of Harbor Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK AND COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4011) to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4011) to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, with Mr. CELLER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri: Page 1, line 6, after the word "thereof", strike out "January 15, 1941" and insert "June 30, 1941."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri: Page 2, line 1, strike out "January 15, 1941" and insert "January 30, 1941."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman's amendment an amendment to the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS], striking out "January 15, 1941"?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I assume it is because it strikes out the whole section.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a separate amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have just sent to the Clerk's desk seeks to strike out subsection (b) which is sought to be amended by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS]. Is not an amendment to strike out the whole section a perfecting amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes that should come later, that it is not a perfecting amendment to the pending amendment. It will be in order for the gentleman to present his amendment subsequently to the adoption or rejection of the pending amendment.

The amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri: Page 2, line 12, after "1938" and the parenthesis, strike out "58" and insert "52."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 1, line 6, after the semicolon, strike out the remainder of line 6 and all of lines 7, 8, and 9 on page 1, and "January 15, 1941" in line 1, page 2, the same being subsection (b) of said bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk be amended by striking out the words and figures "January 15, 1941," and inserting the words and figures of the amended section, "June 30, 1941."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment if adopted would require the liquidation of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, the date of expiration of which is June 30, 1939. We should give serious consideration to whether it is necessary or advisable to continue the functions of the Export-Import Bank of Washington. This bank was set up by an Executive order on February 2, 1934. I assume the act of Congress on January 31, 1935, which is known as Public, No. 1, of the Seventy-fourth Congress, ratified the action of the President in setting up the bank.

This bank was set up primarily to supplement loans made by private banks to aid in exporting agricultural and industrial products. For a year and a half after the bank was set up not a loan was made and not a commitment was made. I make this observation to show that for a year and a half after it was found advisable or necessary to set up this bank not a commitment was made. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, through its officers and employees, does all the administrative work. This bank is set up primarily to give the Reconstruction Finance Corporation an outlet to make foreign loans if it so desires.

Is it advisable to continue the functions of the Export-Import Bank? Let us look at its report for 1938. We find that as against the hundreds of millions of dollars of exports from this country this so-called important adjunct to the credit structure of the United States disbursed actually $18,602,974. This was during the year 1938.

At the close of business on December 31, 1938, the active commitments—and it is conceded this agency has been much more active during the last 6 months than it ever was before—of this bank were only $46,165,508, of which $25,000,000 was authorized to facilitate the exportation of American industrial and agricultural products to China. Twenty-five million dollars of a total of $46,000,000 of commitments, or more than 50 percent of the activity of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, as shown by the report of condition at the close of business on December 31, 1938, was in the nature of this very highly controversial Chinese loan.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Does the gentleman have the figures as to the cost of administering this organization?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The cost of administering the bank for 1938 was $49,469.

When we consider continuing the activities of this bank we must take into consideration that there is no limitation on its activities. It can loan to any belligerent. It can loan to loyalist Spain or to insurgent Spain. It can loan to China or the nationals of China, as it has done. It can loan to Japan, it can loan to Germany, or it can loan to Italy or the nationals thereof. It can loan into any situation which might involve us in a European or Asiatic conflict and almost force the Congress of the United States to back it up. This is an agency of the Federal Government and as such its acts and omissions are chargeable to the United States. It is a dangerous thing to have this bank making loans without restraint in situations which might involve us in European or Asiatic conflict. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is highly difficult to follow the argument of the gentleman from Michigan. Part of the time he devotes himself to the contention that the Export-Import Bank is useless because it is doing no business, and then in the next breath the gentleman seems to be alarmed and distressed for fear that the bank might do too much business. I might agree with the gentleman in the first instance, but I dissent from the view voiced in his second contention.

As I view the situation and I believe it is likewise the sentiment of this House and of the country, nothing is more important and essential to the restoration of prosperity and normal economic conditions in the United States than a revival of our foreign trade. [Applause.] This is all that is undertaken by the Export-Import Bank. A large part of the credits of this type commercial banks do not desire because it does not coincide with their training and habits of thought to make loans of the kind desired in connection with export trade. We are not depriving the banks of business by continuing the life of the Export-Import Bank. The Export-Import Bank is cooperating with the commercial banks of the country. Loans this bank makes often are divided, part being carried by commercial banks and part by the Export-Import Bank. Not a loan has been made to cover the purchase of war materials. Not a loan has been made in violation of our neutrality law or any treaty or any other law of the United States Government.

As a matter of fact, no loan has been made and no funds have been paid out in connection with the commitment to the Universal Trading Co., and no loans are contemplated that in any way violate any of the laws of the land or are in contravention of the views of the State Department.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. May I say one word before I yield to the gentleman?

The bill before us limits the loans that may be outstanding by the Export-Import Bank to $100,000,000, and a large portion of this sum is outstanding now. Any thought that out of that sum there can be any serious interference with quarrels or controversies among other nations by the exportation of war materials is absolutely far-fetched and unworthy of serious consideration.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does it not seem at least passing strange that the same gentlemen on the other side of the aisle who are always complaining that the program put forward by this side of the aisle and by the administration is hampering business, when a measure comes up to extend the life of a part of the Government that has for its sole purpose helping American industry it meets with opposition from the same men who are making the statement that we are endeavoring to destroy business?

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, we would hardly expect such a contention from the source, from which it comes. Our country is at a disadvantage in the matter of foreign trade. Other governments subsidize such trade. Other governments resort to every known method in the regulation of exchange, in granting subsidies and in every possible way to secure such trade. Unless we speed up our efforts and improve our machinery for handling this trade, we are going to lose the opportunity of extending our trade in the republics to the south of us.

Mr. SPENCE and Mr. MAY rose.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute that I may yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. I just want to say to the Chairman that I have a letter from Mr. Jesse Jones, Chairman of the Board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in which he states that no part of the recent $25,000,000 authorization has been disbursed and no part of it is to be used for the purchase of war material, and yet the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], yesterday said that a thousand trucks are to be purchased out of this fund. Mr. Jones further states that loans are not authorized by the Board until after the State and Treasury Departments have been consulted to ascertain if there is any reason, in the opinion of those Departments, why the loans should not be made. This bank is more careful about involving us in any foreign entanglements than any other bank in America would be, because it is strictly under the jurisdiction and control of the National Government and amenable to all the Departments of the National Government.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute that I may yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman that in the consideration this morning of a bill before the Military Affairs Committee of the House, where the Secretary of State's office is asking assistance in sending representatives from the departments of this Government to the South American republics to advise and counsel with them with respect to trade, it appeared that two or three foreign nations are offering to furnish the same service without charge, while these South American countries are willing to pay us for the advice that they are offered free by other countries. This measure fits right into that picture and enables us to lend to those nations, if they need loans.

Mr. STEAGALL. It is a legitimate and constructive undertaking. It undertakes to extend our trade and commerce by methods that ought to be gratifying to every citizen in the Nation. [Applause.]

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I can well understand that the majority party would like to vote for this and get it out of the way.

It is strange that you would say it is beyond the imagination of anyone to argue that this Export Bank is a dangerous tool. Evidently the majority side of the House does not read the newspapers very carefully. During the last few days it has been very clearly shown to the public at large by editorial opinion that this is one of the most dangerous tools in the field of economics that could be given to an administration which is so anxious about foreign trade, but has so little concern about our domestic conditions and would sacrifice our domestic industries to increase foreign trade.

It is shown that this bank has done very little business. I can well imagine that the Honorable Jesse Jones would be greatly importuned by those now receiving a salary to carry on these activities lest they lose their jobs. I do not envy his position if he should try to do away with any of these activities. One hundred million dollars is a lot of money when you consider that practically all commitments of the bank are only participating loans, and this sum might be the means of taking care of several hundred millions of these somewhat doubtful loans.

This is needed by our exporters who wish to sell goods to a foreign country lacking foreign exchange, or to foreign buyers who demand long credits. It is probably a rather risky business. Private banks would loan legitimate exporters on a safe and sound loan, unless there was some particular risk involved.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. No; I will not yield, because I want no red herrings just for a moment. If you read the hearings you can form only one conclusion, and that is that this Export Bank might encourage exports by participating, or taking a 25-percent or 50-percent part, whatever it may be, of the loan and the risk involved. If you read the newspapers, or recall the statements made to you twice yesterday, you will note that the Brazilian envoy, representing a nation in default in the matter of a $370,000,000 loan expects the Export-Import Bank to come to their aid. Shall we finance sending our wheat there and arouse the Argentine to make reprisals? You state that we will not finance exports of war materials. You will not need to do so to accomplish indirectly giving such aid. You need not provide money for guns but apply it for different purposes and release other funds to buy the guns. It would be difficult to draw the line of assistance to belligerent nations, in a way that would not be interpreted as direct aid in the purchase of war materials; it would be a strong gesture and would make very plain that our neutrality law had ceased to function. No matter how small may be the suggested operations, the administration demands this unusual economic instrument with all its potential dangers.

In fact, it does not want to give up any activity whatsoever indulged in in the last 6 years that would involve the loss of a single job. That may not be so applicable to this particular case, but it does apply to all cases. Again, I repeat, you do not have to loan belligerents money to buy guns. You can loan them money to buy trucks. Let us not become involved by such operations. We are wondering what may have been the real reasons for the recent resignation of Mr. Taylor from the Treasury. It is suggested by the newspapers that he left because he was out of harmony with the present policy of the administration of the stabilization fund. What would be his opinion of this Export-Import Bank? It is apparent that they simply cannot keep an Assistant Treasurer for long, because he cannot agree with the policies of the administration in monetary matters. I should think that the majority party might be somewhat worried over the implications of these resignations. And now I suppose some Democrat will rise and say, as one did on yesterday, "I will not attempt to answer one of the usual tirades of the gentleman from Massachusetts."

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts just said that there were no legitimate concerns attempting to secure the aid of the Export-Import Bank for the purpose of exporting legitimate merchandise. He certainly has read the statement in the hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee, of which he is a member, in which Mr. Jones lists a number of legitimate American concerns. He certainly would not say that the American Locomotive Co. is not a legitimate business enterprise, nor would he contend that the National Foreign Trades Council, representing numerous American exporters, is not a legitimate American enterprise.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I simply say that a locomotive sold could be used to carry soldiers.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. In South America?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. It is simply that it is a matter of furnishing indirectly means of carrying on a war.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. In other words, the gentleman is accusing the Export-Import Bank of utilizing the backhand tactics that he and his party are using at the present time to discourage a legitimate facility of the United States Government in its efforts to develop legitimate and profitable foreign trade.

Mr. GIFFORD. Might use it—not using it.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The Export-Import Bank is merely an implement to facilitate the conduct of a small portion of our foreign trade.

Advances and commitments are made for the most part to business concerns that are unable to secure the necessary credit through the ordinary commercial banking channels.

On page 91 of the hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee will be found a list of typical transactions that illustrate the nature of the business handled by the Export-Import Bank.

These transactions range all the way from peso coinage for the Republic of Cuba to the export of locomotives and foundry pens to South America.

There are no items in this list that suggest any sinister attempts to violate neutrality or to promote other than friendly and profitable commercial relations.

Now, the so-called Chinese loan has been made much of. Mr. Jones flatly stated that this loan was not to the Chinese Government but to a Chinese-owned American trading company. The loan, amounting to $25,000,000, will be paid to the R. F. C. by the Chinese-owned American Trading Co. The only manner in which the Chinese Government could be dragged into the transaction is that the loan, like all big loans, is guaranteed by the Bank of China, one of the world's great and powerful banking institutions, an institution which is, by the way, owned in equal parts by private individuals and the Chinese Government.

The supervision and direction exercised by the Chinese Government is, I am told, of a very mild character. It is probably about the same as that exercised by the R. F. C. over American banks in which it holds either preferred stock or debentures.

In any event, the loan is not a Chinese Government loan; it is merely an ordinary commercial loan transaction between the Export-Import Bank and a Chinese-owned American trading company; and any attempt to invest this loan with international political significance is an unfair and unwarranted piece of partisan skulduggery in keeping with the Pecksniffian antics of a completely befuddled minority.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 114, noes 152.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH: Page 2, line 14, after the figures "$900,000,000", insert "Provided, That not more than $500,000,000 of this sum may be loaned annually to finance the sale and export of commodities to any nation, person, or persons, outside of the Western Hemisphere, without the consent of Congress."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to believe that the vote just taken, and the practically unanimous vote on the Republican side against the continuance of the Export-Import Bank and its operations, was largely due to the fear that the Export-Import Bank may be used to finance arms, ammunition, and implements of war and war materials to belligerent nations throughout the world. If that is so, naturally I have sympathy with them. On the other hand, this Export-Import Bank, which has not served any very good purpose up to date, has made a commitment of $25,000,000 to furnish supplies to China; and I say to the gentlemen of the Committee that a commitment has been made for 1,000 trucks, and this information was given to me by Mr. Pearson, the president of the bank, only yesterday. It was made for two lots of 500 trucks each. Those trucks, of course, will be used to carry war materials and supplies to the Chinese Army from Burma up to wherever the Chinese Army is.

I do not think it was a proper commitment to make. It is 50 percent of all the commitments they have made. I believe we are facing a very serious situation. We have been asleep to the economic invasion of South America by Germany and Japan. We have lost 50 percent of our trade there since 1929. Latin America is still our largest market. We still do more trade in South and Central America than Great Britain, Germany, Japan, and Italy combined, but we have been losing it very, very rapidly in the last year in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, and Mexico.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Is it not true that we did lose a great deal and then we gained back largely our trade with South America?

Mr. FISH. The fact is we have lost a great deal in the last 6 months or year. We have lost 50 percent of our trade alone with Mexico, and we have lost that to the Germans. I do not have time in 5 minutes to go into all those details.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Would the gentleman be able to tell us whether or not any of this money has been used to finance the shipment of cotton gins to Brazil?

Mr. FISH. I am not sure, but I will say this in favor of the bill: That it has financed the shipment of cotton to Poland and to Italy to the amount of two or three million dollars to each.

I have submitted my amendment to the president of the bank, and he had no particular objection to it, because it would not interfere with the operations of the bank, except the Chinese loan. It would not interfere with the sale or financing of cotton to Italy and Poland to the amount of two or three million dollars—and only restricts loans to under $5,000,000.

I believe we face a very serious situation. I believe that unless this Congress does something of this kind immediately, right now, we will lose another 50 percent of our trade with South America, our single biggest market in the world, because we cannot compete with these subsidized governments like Japan and Germany. This, in effect, is a subsidy. It is a loan by the Government to finance and encourage trade, primarily with South America. I would like to limit it entirely to South America, but to make it a little broader I propose to limit it to Latin America except for loans up to $5,000,000. I think that should be accepted by the chairman of the committee. The president of the bank has no particular objection to it. I am fearful that if we increase this amount of money to $100,000,000 President Roosevelt might use his influence to loan $50,000,000, or commit it, to China for war purposes, to finance the war, whether it is to buy trucks or other munitions. I want this money to go to South America to finance trade with South America, and limit foreign nations to $5,000,000 each.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Did Mr. Pierson tell you that these thousand trucks were to be used for war purposes?

Mr. FISH. He did not, but every Member of Congress knows there is a war going on in China, and we know why the Chinese Government wants those trucks. They do not need them for commerce. They do not need them for trade. They have practically no commerce and they have no trade.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. While it may not be true that this bank is financing the purchase of war materials, the fact remains that we have furnished 51 percent of the essential war materials to Japan.

Mr. FISH. Yes; that is true. That is due to the President of the United States refusing to put into effect the neutrality law which said it should go into effect when a state of war existed. A state of war exists in China, and everybody knows it.

Mr. REED of New York. The President does not know it.

Mr. FISH. The Congress is not to blame for that. It is the President of the United States.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SHANLEY. The gentleman talks about meeting the Germans. Does the gentleman know that the Export Bank blocked off a German deal in Haiti by means of discounting a $5,000,000 loan? We were able to block it off for that reason.

Mr. FISH. That is why I am in favor of this proposition.

Mr. SHANLEY. The gentleman said we had not done anything.

Mr. FISH. Well, we have not done practically anything. Five million dollars is not very much.

Mr. SHANLEY. That is a pretty good deal.

Mr. FISH. Not when we are trying to save trade to the amount of half a billion dollars. We are very apt to lose it. I want the Export-Import Bank to continue, but I want it confined largely to South America, and not be used for war purposes, for purchasing trucks in China. I think the gentleman agrees with that.

Mr. SHANLEY. If we have given $5,000,000 to Haiti, we can do it with Brazil and the Argentine.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman does not understand. I am advocating exactly what the gentleman advocates. I want to confine this largely to South America, but any other nation outside of the American Hemisphere cannot be loaned or a commitment made beyond $5,000,000.

Mr. SHANLEY. The gentleman misunderstood me. I objected to the gentleman saying we have not already done it.

Mr. FISH. Oh, we made that one little loan to Haiti.

Mr. SHANLEY. Not one little loan. It is a significant loan.

Mr. FISH. I am not objecting to that loan to Haiti. I favor it, but actually it is chicken feed in view of what should be done. I want to make greater loans and increase our trade in the Western Hemisphere. If you do not pass this bill and encourage our trade with South America by sound loans, or even subsidies, we are deliberately kissing our trade with South America good-bye. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York would alter the provision of the bill which deals with the resources of the Commodity Credit Corporation. It does not relate in any way to the Export-Import Bank, its fund, or its operations. If you will read the bill, you will see that the concluding subdivision reads as follows:

(d) Section 4 of the act approved March 8, 1938 (58 Stat. 108), is hereby amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "$500,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$900,000,000."

This sum is the $900,000,000 mentioned in the amendment. It is the amount fixed by the amendment in this bill increasing the resources of the Commodity Credit Corporation from $100,000,000 capital, plus its borrowing power of $500,000,000, to make its borrowing power $900,000,000, making its resources $1,000,000,000 instead of $600,000,000.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is correct, and I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by striking out those words.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman from Alabama will yield, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that cures the evil.

Mr. FISH. I ask unanimous consent further to modify my amendment by inserting, after the word "lent", the words "by the Export-Import Bank."

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, pretty soon we are going to want to know what we are to be called to vote on.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York restate his modification?

Mr. FISH. After the figure "$5,000,000" strike out the words "of that sum", and after the word "lent" insert the words "by the Export-Import Bank."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the amendment as modified.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH: Page 2, line 14, after the figures "$900,000,000", insert "Provided, That not more than $5,000,000 may be lent by the Export-Import Bank annually to finance the sale and export of commodities to any nation, person, or persons outside of the Western Hemisphere without the consent of Congress."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment as requested by the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. The amendment now is what the gentleman from New York thought it was, and it is just as objectionable in its present form as far as this fund is concerned that we are supposed to draw from as it was in the beginning. In other words, the gentleman would give the Export-Import Bank a certain power in one paragraph and then withdraw that power in the next paragraph. This would be the effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman from Alabama will yield, does it not just restore power to Congress? I am sure the gentleman has no objection to that.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Does not the gentleman from New York mean without the consent of the minority of Congress?

Mr. FISH. Well, it will not be 2 years from now.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, it is, of course, impractical to have Congress pass on every loan that might be considered by the Export-Import Bank in excess of the sum of $5,000,000. The amendment might just as well provide that no loan shall be made outside of the Western Hemisphere. This would be the effect of it. If this is what the gentleman desires I respectfully submit that the amendment should have been drawn that way in order that the House may be fully informed as to what is under consideration.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. FISH. I would have no objection to restricting this to Latin America or the Western Hemisphere; but in order to include small loans that have been made and that will be made to countries like Poland, Italy, and others for cotton and other products, I put in the $5,000,000 limitation; and the president of the bank himself had no objection to it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. The president of the Export-Import Bank is not passing on the policy of Congress, nor is he a Member of Congress.

Mr. FISH. I did not say he favored it; I said he had no objection to it. Furthermore, it does not interfere with any loan except the big loan to China for trucks.

Mr. STEAGALL. An embarrassing situation would confront the Nation under the operation of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York. Should we desire to make a loan of $6,000,000 for the exportation of farm products to some part of the world outside of the Western Hemisphere at a time when Congress was not in session, the President would have to call an extraordinary session of Congress to pass on the application, rather than having the law administered by officials of the Export-Import Bank. That is the situation that would confront us. This amendment would put us in an unfortunate position before the world.

My good friend the gentleman from New York talks often about foreign affairs and of our interference and on expression of views respecting the merits of controversies among the nations of the outside world. If I understand the gentleman, he wants us to pursue a policy of strict neutrality in all our international relationships, yet would have us say to the world that we will not trade with nations outside of the Western Hemisphere.

Nothing is more essential to good will and understanding among nations and the cause of peace than the extension of trade and commerce.

Mr. Chairman, the service contemplated in this legislation would contribute at least in some measure to these desirable results in extending our contacts and commercial relations with other nations. What we are trying to do today is to improve business, and to enlarge the output of our factories, and increase employment of labor of the United States. If we wish to further this policy, a more legitimate method cannot be used than that provided in the pending bill.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be rejected.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. Chairman, I do not see any particular reason why we should not restrict these loans to $5,000,000. I do not see any good reason why the Congress of the United States should not pass on loans made by the Export-Import Bank in excess of $5,000,000. After all, an extra session of the Congress of the United States might be ever so much cheaper than allowing the Export-Import Bank or anyone else to precipitate this Nation in a world war by doing something foolish with respect to credit.

If all that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] has said is true with respect to the advisability of using this bank to create credits for the purpose of financing exports, then why has not this bank been functioning during the 4 years of its existence? It has been practically nonexistent until the last year and in the last 12 months our international relations have been such that we have had to proceed more cautiously than ever before in the history of this Nation.

Mr. Chairman, all we ask is that we may check every act to be performed by the executive branch with respect to our international relations so that if this country is about to get into a war we will know just where we are headed. Much has been said about this Chinese loan.

Why was the Chinese loan made? It was made purely and simply because we have a fallacious silver policy which compelled the Republic of China to go off the silver standard and tie its currency to the British pound sterling.

Whatever war we fight will be an economic war wherever we fight it, whether it be in Asia or in Europe. It will be an economic war and we should not lose sight of that. We cannot afford to be drawn into an economic war by allowing an individual or a group of individuals in the executive department to believe that the horrors of a war can be completely offset by exporting a few million dollars of our goods. We spent billions of dollars, twenty-four or twenty-five billion dollars, in the prosecution of a war in 1917 and 1918 which we recognize now was an economic war and it did not preserve world democracies.

We cannot afford, with the present condition of the finances of the United States Government, to enter into another war which is going to cost us billions of dollars. The people of the United States through its agents, the Congress of the United States, have a right to assume that any of these unfriendly acts by the executive department are entering wedges which might bring us into these conflicts.

I have said, and I made the charge, that the reason for this Chinese loan was because we had so affected the credit of China by our fallacious silver policy as to make this necessary. I say that after careful study of our silver policy and its effect upon China. China mines no silver. It was on the silver standard and it could deal with the United States. China is a pioneer country. It has a new nationalism and the people of that country want occidental goods. We are in position to furnish these goods to them. We forced them off the silver standard and now we cannot deal with them. They have no redeemable currency. They have had to tie up with the British pound sterling and all of the commerce between the United States and China henceforth, until a different monetary standard is provided, will have to be through the back door of London, England.

This is a question much more far-reaching than whether this particular bank shall be continued. It has to do not only with the question of our foreign policy which might precipitate us in a world war, but goes to the very foundation of the credit policy of this country with respect to credit furnished other countries in order to build up our trade.

This Export-Import Bank has not functioned, and you cannot tell me that a matter of $21,000,000, exclusive of the Chinese loan, is a drop in the bucket compared with our total exports. What is the purpose of continuing the bank? It is to make loans to foreign countries without regard to the wishes of the Congress of the United States and to circumvent congressional declarations of neutrality to which all our people subscribe. If the Congress countenances that it makes possible violations of our neutral policy, it menaces our peaceful relations with many foreign countries, to the prejudice of the taxpayers and the peace of this Nation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FISH) there were—ayes 113, noes 156.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts: Page 2, line 11, after the word "stock", insert the following: "Provided further, That the Export-Import Bank of Washington shall not make loans the proceeds of which are to be used for or in any aid of the purchase for export of arms and munitions, including airplanes, now in the possession of or to be acquired by the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, except with the consent of Congress."

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is a very plain one. It provides that no money shall be loaned by the Export-Import Bank of Washington for the sale for export of our Navy, Army, or Marine Corps arms or munitions, including airplanes.

If I needed a defense for this amendment the President's own message on January 12 to the Congress regarding his preparedness program would be enough, I believe, to convince the Members that this amendment to the bill should be adopted. I refer the House also to the testimony of the War Department regarding the sale of military airplanes to France.

I should like to remind the Congress also that history has proved that every nation which has had a weak army has been a weak nation. We hear of foes without and we are hearing of foes within. But are we giving attention to keeping prepared against the foes at home? How many of the Members have been thinking of preparedness in terms of rifles, for instance? We do not have too many rifles in our country today. Lately we have all been speaking of the sale of our Army secret airplanes to France. If my amendment is not in the bill at the moment under consideration, certainly airplanes, rifles, guns, and every sort of arms and munitions might go on their way to France, England, or even South America and thus weaken our own defense. While we all want to develop our trade with South America, with whom we have the most friendly relations, I do not believe we wish to ship our Army, Navy, or Marine Corps planes or arms or munitions to those countries. I strongly believe in the development of trade with the South American countries but I do not believe in selling them our Army planes for instance.

If my amendment is adopted and later we should wish to change our policy and ship our Army or Navy planes to other countries, Congress will be in session for many months and we can do that.

Let me quote from the President's message. In speaking of his preparedness program he stated as follows:

All of the above constitutes a well-rounded program, considered by me as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and by my advisers to be a minimum program for the necessities of defense. Every American is aware of the peaceful intentions of the Government and of the people. Every American knows that we have no thought of aggression, no desire for further territory.

Nevertheless, as the executive head of the Government, I am compelled to look facts in the face. We have a splendid asset in the quality of our manhood. But without modern weapons, and without adequate training, the men, however splendid the type, would be hopelessly handicapped if we were attacked.

The young men of this Nation should not be compelled to take the field with antiquated weapons. It would be economically unsound to provide in time of peace for all the modern equipment needed in a war emergency. But it would be nationally unsound not to provide the critical items of equipment which might be needed for immediate use and not to provide for facilities for mass production in the event of war.

Devoid of all hysteria, this program is but the minimum of requirements.

I trust, therefore, that the Congress will quickly act on this emergency program for the strengthening of the defense of the United States.

Does anyone in this House want our young men to take the field at home or abroad with antiquated methods, antiquated weapons, or antiquated aircraft? The testimony before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs by the War Department officials proves conclusively that it takes 2 years at least to train a pilot satisfactorily, and it takes a longer time also to train a pilot in the proper handling of fast airplanes. I do not believe the Members of the House would willingly weaken our defense program.

I repeat the President's own words:

Devoid of all hysteria, this program is but the minimum of requirements.

My amendment would simply defend the President's own program, the program that was endorsed on January 12. [Applause.]

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this question of airplanes as it is being handled by the House of Representatives is entirely wrong. We cannot ship out any planes of the Army and Navy, nor can we permit any commercial firm to do so, until at least 6 months have expired from the time the second plane of that particular type is delivered to the War Department or the Navy Department. There is going to be no shipment of Navy planes or Army planes, built as such, to any foreign country, but I know you will all agree with me that we would like to keep our factories going.

We need the development of aircraft in this country. There is no gainsaying that, and a year ago, when the British sent over a group of officials to go into our facilities here for building planes, there was no squawk on the part of us here. Everybody was tickled to death that we could keep our factories going and supply the British with 300 planes. I knew they were here and you knew they were here. The other day when the French sent their officials over here I knew they were here. I knew they went out to the factory in my town and I knew they went all over this country trying to see if they could not get the best type planes to offset the advantage of the Germans in Europe.

Those people are under an entirely different set-up there than we are. They are not protected by 3,000 miles of ocean on each side. No; they have a thousand planes at their back door ready at an instant to drop bombs on defenseless people.

I shall not go into the question of the Rhine being our frontier or anything of that kind, but let me say we must have development of aircraft in this country, and if we can bring it about by having somebody else pay the bill I cannot see where the difference comes.

Another thing, we say it is all right to send cotton out there, and the gentleman from New York said that two or five million dollars' worth of cotton is a fine thing for Italy or some other country, but do you not know that cotton is the most important ingredient in munitions? Why, take your planes, take your trucks, but give me cotton, because with nitrocellulose and TNT I can blow your trucks out of the way. You have got to have cotton, and still when we talk about sending scrap iron and other materials and munitions of war, nobody ever says anything about cotton. Do not forget that if there is a world war we will have to have an absolute embargo to keep out of it. That is what we will have to have, and when you gentlemen are ready and willing to embargo cotton and the other things that we have to have in modern warfare, then I will go along with you to keep from sending trucks and planes and any other kind of munitions out of this country.

I believe the amendment of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts should be defeated.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Of course, the amendment would not interfere with the sale of commercial airplanes or planes built as the other countries wanted to have them built. My amendment simply provides that our Army, Navy, and Marine Corps shall not be crippled with respect to munitions of war, and especially airplanes. I think it is a very protective measure and is certainly in line with the President's message to us. We have claims upon us to be prepared at home as well as against foreign invasion.

Mr. IZAC. Does not the gentlewoman realize, however, that a commercial plane is so readily changed into a war plane that the difference is not worth considering?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The amendment would apply to only the arms, munitions, and airplanes of our Army and Navy and not to the commercial planes. It is only a protective measure.

Mr. IZAC. The modern bombing plane today is a cargo-carrying plane. You simply take out the medicines and the other things you are shipping and put in bombs. That is the only difference.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Why weaken our own Army planes or take away from our own defense? That is what we all fear.

Mr. IZAC. We are not doing that. We did not appropriate enough money to keep the factory in my town going. The San Diego factory needed orders and I was glad to see the British come over here and try to get their planes from us. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I doubt that any Member of this House hates war or militarism more than I do. But world problems cover a wide range, and our international relationships are not matters for consideration at this time. I do not hesitate to say that I am not willing to throttle the trade of the people of the United States with the people of other nations simply because of the fear of armed conflict not already existing and which we have good reason to hope will be averted. As a matter of fact, I cannot bring myself to share the alarm that seems to be so widespread over the possibility that the world will soon be plunged into war—certainly not the peace-loving people of this country. After all, it seems to me that if no nation were to permit the sale of war equipment, the result would be that many nations would have to speed up preparations for war with enormous increase of the vast armaments that now burden the people of the earth and threaten the peace of mankind.

As for the amendment before the Committee, I hardly see what practical good anyone could hope to accomplish by its adoption. The Army and the Navy of the United States do not engage in the sale of airplanes or any other war equipment. As a matter of fact our advices seem to be to the effect that both arms of our Military Establishment are anxious to find an opportunity to acquire more airplanes. Certainly they are not engaged in selling airplanes and certainly they would not engage in such sales, and the same is true of the Export-Import Bank. The bank has no such authority and has not undertaken and would not for a moment undertake to finance such sales. The bank would not finance any sale contrary to the law of the country; not in any case without the consent and approval of the State Department. Only $100,000,000 of resources are available to the Export-Import Bank. A large portion of that sum is already employed in commitments made hitherto, which in no way involve the sale of airplanes or armaments to outside nations. The practical situation is such that nothing could be done to finance sales of armaments to outside nations on a scale that would play any important part in financing a war.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am very glad to hear the gentleman state that he feels that airplanes now in the possession of the War Department could not be sold, and neither could munitions, if I so understood his statement, and that those in possession of or about to be in possession of the War Department or the Navy or the Marine Corps could not be sold to foreign countries.

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course when it comes to those "about to be acquired by the Army and Navy" as expressed in the language of the gentlewoman's amendment, that is a matter about which nobody here is informed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, as a result of the gentleman's statement, I cannot see why he is unwilling to accept my amendment. It is simply a protection of our Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, and is in line with the President's own statement that it is but the minimum of requirements of our defense. My amendment has nothing to do with the purchase of commercial planes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 77, noes 150.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: Page 2, after the period at the end of line 14, insert "Provided further, That no loans shall be made to any foreign government or political subdivision thereof or their citizens and corporations while such government or political subdivision is in default of its obligations or any part thereof to the Government of the United States."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, on April 13, 1934, Congress enacted the so-called Johnson Act, which prohibits the sale in the United States of the obligations of foreign governments or of their political subdivisions when such governments or their subdivisions are in default to the Government of the United States. Foreign governments now owe the Government of the United States more than $12,000,000,000. The Johnson Act is still the law of the land, and unless we adopt this amendment which I have offered, the Congress will place the Government of the United States in a rather peculiar position.

Defaulting foreign governments will be prohibited from borrowing funds from private American investors but will be able to raid the American taxpayers' Treasury through the Export-Import Bank. My amendment carries out the intent of the Congress, as expressed by the almost unanimous vote when the Johnson Act became law on April 13, 1934, in order to protect the interests of our American taxpayers.

Adopt this amendment and prevent foreign nations who are now in default to America and who now owe our country more than $12,000,000,000 from getting more hand-outs from our American taxpayers who are now staggering under almost unbearable tax burdens. I ask the majority leaders in charge of the bill to accept this amendment. Do not send word out to the country that although our foreign-debt-defaulting nations are not permitted to borrow from private investors, they can come to our Federal Treasury and get their hand-outs with the help of the Export-Import Bank. I sincerely hope you will accept the amendment. This is a good, sound, constructive American proposition. We should rise above party and all join together and support it. Let us place the welfare of our country above the welfare of our party and the welfare of foreign debt defaulters.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FERGUSON: On page 2, line 11, after the semicolon, strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I am not really sincere in offering this amendment which would keep the limit of the Commodity Credit Corporation at $500,000,000, its present maximum. I do this to call the attention of the House to the fact that if the Federal Reserve System was actually functioning as it can and should there would be no necessity for the Commodity Credit Corporation.

I will read from the last act of the Federal Reserve System:

Nothing in this chapter contained shall be construed to prohibit such notes, drafts, and bills of exchange secured by staple agricultural products.

And it goes on to say:

Make advances exclusively to producers of staple agricultural products in their raw state shall be eligible for discount.

Under our present Federal Reserve System any local bank could make a loan to a producer of an agricultural product. In case he had to make loans in excess of his deposit limitations he is perfectly eligible to rediscount that paper with the Federal Reserve System.

It seems strange to me that we should continue emergency organizations as loaning agencies when we have a system that could loan all the money necessary to operate our businesses so that they would not have to go through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation when in distress. In fact, that same thing is taken care of in the last act passed amending the Federal Reserve Act in 1934, which provides for direct loans to industries.

But with all these powers that Congress has given the Federal Reserve System, today there is rediscounted with the Federal Reserve System only $10,000,000 of notes from member banks, and only $25,000,000 in loans under the industry clause. Thirty-five million dollars is all that is loaned through the Federal Reserve System to finance business and agriculture, when they have excess reserves, held by their member banks, that amount to a hundred times that $35,000,000.

I would like to see the Federal Reserve function, and with that in view today I inserted in the Record a bill which instructs the Federal Reserve bank to accept for rediscount any note offered by a member bank that has been classified in group 1, that is, a collectible note, at the last examination by the Federal Reserve examiners—their own examiners. Thus a bank would know that it would have a ready market for its paper when the time came that it was in need, and not be forced to put up $3 worth of paper for every dollar it received when it was in dire distress and needed a place to rediscount its funds.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. With $3,500,000,000 which the member banks hold as excess reserves, there is no reason at all why banks should go to the Federal Reserve bank for the purpose of discounting paper.

Mr. FERGUSON. Of course not. The member banks can loan that money in excess reserve, but they have had the terrible experience that they went through in 1931, 1932, and 1933, when deposits went down and loans went up, and they are not going to take a chance until they know where they can get the money in another emergency situation such as we had at that time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, the bill which the gentleman has introduced, I understand, further authorizes the Federal Reserve banks to discount paper which they cannot discount now?

Mr. FERGUSON. No. It does not change the security requirements at all, but it directs the Federal Reserve bank to accept at face value any note classified in group 1, as they now call it, at the last examination, and it extends the time from 90 days to 2 years, so that they can take any payment paper, like on automobiles or electric refrigerators. We would need no Electric Home and Farm Authority if they could rediscount that paper, and the banks knew that any time they needed to they could rediscount the paper.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, your proposal is entirely in line with the recommendations and suggestions recently made to the banks by Chairman Jesse Jones of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, wherein he pleads with them to finance that type of paper?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Ohio: On page 2, line 3, following the word "inserting", strike all out down to the semicolon in line 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 9. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Export-Import Bank of Washington, District of Columbia, a banking corporation organized under the laws of the District of Columbia as an agency of the United States, pursuant to Executive orders of the President, shall continue until June 30, 1941, or such earlier date as may be fixed by the President by Executive order, to be an agency of the United States and in addition to existing charter powers and without limitation as to the total amount of obligations thereto of any borrower, endorser, acceptor, obligor, or guarantor at any time outstanding, said banking corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to discount notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt for the purpose of aiding in the financing and facilitating exports and imports and the exchange of commodities between the United States and any of its Territories and insular possessions and any foreign country or the agencies or nationals thereof, and, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to borrow money and rediscount notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt for the purposes aforesaid. During the continuance of such agency the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Commerce are authorized and directed to continue, for the use and benefit of the United States, the present investment in the capital stock of said banking corporation, and it is hereby authorized to use all of its assets, including capital and net earnings therefrom, except such earnings as may be required from time to time to pay dividends upon its preferred capital stock, and to use all moneys which have been or may hereafter be allocated to or borrowed by it, in the exercise of its function as such an agency: Provided further, Notwithstanding any existing charter powers of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, the said Export-Import Bank of Washington shall not have outstanding at any one time loans in excess of $100,000,000, the capital for which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, when requested by the Secretary of the Treasury with the approval of the President, may continue to supply from time to time through loans or by subscription to preferred stock."

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I pointed out to the House a gross inconsistency in the text of this statute. The law as it reads at the present time provides for two banks, notwithstanding any other provision of law: The Export-Import Bank of Washington and the Second Export-Import Bank of Washington. This is the law we are now amending.

The amendment to this law as provided in the bill now under consideration provides that the Export-Import Bank of Washington—the Export-Import Bank of Washington—not the Second Export-Import Bank of Washington, merely the Export-Import Bank of Washington—"shall not have outstanding at any one time loans in excess of $100,000,000." The provision which limits the amount of money outstanding here certainly does not apply to the Second Export-Import Bank of Washington; it applies to only the one.

It is true that by Executive order both these banks were created. By Executive order also the Second Export-Import Bank of Washington was dissolved, but there is nothing in this text, there is nothing in the law, which indicates that this Second Export-Import Bank may not be reestablished by Executive order. There is no question about that.

All this amendment does is to clarify this particular point. It was necessary to rewrite the whole text, because there are 11 places where the plural is used, and it was necessary to change it to the singular. This amendment, as I state, simply clarifies this law. It merely states that this amount outstanding shall be limited to this one bank alone.

Let me call attention to another feature of this bill. As it stands at the present time I contend that there is no limitation to the amount of funds that may be outstanding at any one time, because the power still exists under this law to re-create by Executive order this Second Export-Import Bank of Washington.

Only one other change is made by my amendment. The charter of the first Export-Import Bank of Washington provides that the Corporation reserves the right to amend, alter, or change any provision contained in the certificate of incorporation in any manner prescribed by statute, and the act as now written provides: "In addition to existing charter powers"—in addition to existing charter powers—"certain grants are herein provided." The point is simply that there is a question as to whether this bank, the Export-Import Bank of Washington, may not have the power to amend its own charter over and above the law itself, because the law specifically provides: "And in addition to the existing charter powers." In order, therefore, to clarify that point and make certain that there can be no misinterpretation of the law, I have simply provided in this amendment as follows:

Notwithstanding any existing charter powers of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, the said Export-Import Bank of Washington shall—

And so forth. It is to be seen, therefore, that the amendment I now offer is merely a clarification of the law. It is an amendment that is just and fair. It simply says in plain English what I believe every Member of Congress means this law to say; and I am asking, therefore, that this amendment do pass.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, we discussed somewhat this same proposition on yesterday. The gentleman's own admission shows that it is not necessary to have this amendment. Originally, of course, there were two export-import banks. Under Executive order of the President the Second Export-Import Bank was discontinued, it was dissolved. It has been completely liquidated, and there were no losses in connection with it at all. The assets were taken over by the present Export-Import Bank.

Existing law covers every feature in connection with the operation of the Export-Import Bank. I ask, therefore, that the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Ohio) there were—ayes 61, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CELLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4011) to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 96, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOLCOTT moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency, with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith, with the following amendment: On page 2, after line 14, add a new section and the following: "Provided, That not more than $5,000,000 may be loaned by the Export-Import Bank annually to finance the sale and export of commodities to any nation, person, or persons outside of the Western Hemisphere without the consent of Congress: Provided further, That the Export-Import Bank of Washington shall not make loans the proceeds of which are to be used for, or in any aid of, the purchase for export of arms and munitions, including airplanes, now in the possession of or to be acquired by the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, except with the consent of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 107, noes 169.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 149, nays 202, not voting 82, as follows:

HOUSE OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. tomorrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the program is to complete general debate on the Navy bill tomorrow and also read the bill for amendment as far as we can, with the possible exception of the consideration of the provision relating to Guam, which will go over to Thursday.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentlemen on this side are willing, if they can complete general debate tomorrow and read the bill for amendment, to allow the vote on Guam to go over to Thursday morning.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is not quite clear. Will the debate on Guam be tomorrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is the hope. The gentleman understands this is a short bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I wonder if it would not be well to meet Thursday morning at 11 o'clock and allow the Members a half hour then for discussion of the provision regarding the development at Guam.

Mr. RAYBURN. I believe we can easily agree on allowing half an hour for its discussion after meeting Thursday.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not want to be too insistent on it, but I believe putting the vote over to Thursday will really accommodate most of the Members.

Mr. RAYBURN. The general debate and practically all the debate on the bill will be concluded tomorrow, but I do not believe there would be objection to allowing, say, 30 minutes for debate on Thursday morning.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Let us have this understanding, then, that tomorrow we shall complete the consideration of the bill, with the possible exception of the Guam provision, and the vote in the Committee on that question will be on Thursday.

Mr. RAYBURN. The vote in the Committee on the Guam provision will be on Thursday.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The vote will be on Thursday morning.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And that we shall be allowed 30 minutes for discussing that question on Thursday morning.

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, there will be no vote tomorrow even in Committee on the Guam question?

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is correct, and we are perfectly willing to agree to 30 minutes' debate on that question on Thursday morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from Jesse H. Jones, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, on the activities of the Export-Import Bank, and a summary of the R. F. C. activities since its organization on February 2, 1932.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. DISNEY, due to illness, and I ask unanimous consent that he may be granted an indefinite leave of absence pending his complete recovery.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including an address delivered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JOHNS] at Johnson City, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

NAVAL AVIATION FACILITIES

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 98 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

House Resolution 98

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 4278, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 6 hours to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommend.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, of the time allowed for the consideration of the resolution I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] to be in turn yielded by him as he sees fit. I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the pending resolution makes provision for the consideration of H. R. 4278, a bill reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, which provides for 12 aviation developments, the cost of which will not exceed $52,000,000.

This proposition is not new. In the measure approved May 17 of last year, a bill to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, authorization for the setting up of a board was contained. Under this authority a board was appointed and in accordance with the instructions of the measure did make investigation and did report on the need for additional naval bases to protect the coast of the United States, its Territories, and its possessions.

The bill now proposed—H. R. 4278—is to authorize the Navy Department to carry out certain recommendations of the board. The Navy Department in its report states that it considers the immediate provision of these bases to be sound and conservative for peacetime operations and as measures of preparedness upon which to base wartime expenditures.

Mr. Speaker, it seems the only part of the bill which is controversial is that which provides for certain developments at Guam. I wish to state that I had entertained some apprehensions with regard to the proposal to improve Guam, but, after my examination of the hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs, those fears were altogether dissipated.

Admiral Leahy, when he appeared before the committee considering this bill, gave the following evidence:

The authorization in the bill now before this committee does not provide for the development of a base at Guam. It requests only authority to make improvements in the facilities for handling airplanes. As an expression of my own personal opinion in regard to the value of a base at Guam, I may say that it is my understanding that the United States has at no time in its history entertained offensive designs against any nation, and that the permanent military policy of the United States is defensive.

The establishment of a base for submarines and aircraft on the island of Guam would be extremely valuable in augmenting the defensive power of the American Fleet because no foreign power would like to project an advance in force across the Pacific without first reducing such a base—

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes. Continuing, the admiral said:

If the United States is to continue the maintenance of an Asiatic squadron, it is necessary that a base for repairs be available in the Western Pacific Hemisphere somewhere.

If the United States is to withdraw entirely from the western Pacific, and to also leave the defense of the Philippine Islands to the natives thereof without any assistance, the whole value of an airplane and submarine base at Guam would be its deterrent effect on anybody contemplating a hostile move from the general area toward the Hawaiian Islands.

Continuing the admiral said:

If the United States expects to afford any assistance in the event of the Philippines being attacked by a foreign power, a base at Guam would be invaluable.

A strong, fully equipped base at Guam capable of protecting itself against an attack, together with the fleet available if the present international naval ratios are maintained, would practically prohibit an invasion of the Philippine Islands, and would add greatly to the difficulty of attacking from the Pacific Ocean any American territory.

The necessity for a fully equipped base at Guam seems to depend entirely on the national policy, for which the Navy has no responsibility.

So, Mr. Speaker, it appears that there is nothing in the proposed expenditure at Guam that should disturb anyone and I urge my colleagues to carefully examine the hearings before the committee, for I am sure that such examination will satisfy the most of you and your opposition to the measure, if not withdrawn, will at least be less determined. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

LXXXIV—108

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, this is a naval preparedness bill that we are to consider here, and I may say at the outset of these few remarks that I believe in this country being prepared for defensive warfare. I think the country should be prepared and I think it should be prepared in time of peace and not wait until war is actually upon us.

As my distinguished colleague [Mr. Cox] has just said, the only controversial feature of this bill is the question of Guam. I believe the people of the United States as a whole believe that we ought to prepare in time of peace. I think we are agreed upon that, and I would just like to say in passing that one of the most admirable spectacles I have witnessed since I have been in this House was the lack of partisanship that was shown in the consideration of the military bill that we discussed here last week. I hope this bill may be approached from that same unbiased and unpartisan angle, because if there is one thing that Republicans and Democrats alike should agree upon, it is upon the question of patriotism and especially upon those questions affecting the security of our common country in time of war.

I approached this question of Guam with an open mind. I listened to the learned chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, Mr. VINSON of Georgia, when he was before the Rules Committee, and I tried to reason this thing out from a logical standpoint and from a patriotic standpoint, and, frankly, I am afraid of this Guam proposition. I know there is a division of opinion on it, and I know there is a division of opinion among the military and the naval experts, and I know this House is going to try to arrive at the proper conclusion. In the next place, let me say that if it were just a matter of how Guam is affected by this particular bill I would have no apprehension about it, because this bill, of itself, is absolutely inoffensive from any point of view to any other country or to stirring up of international strife. The bill merely authorizes the deepening of the harbor at Guam, but then the question arises, if that is all there is in this bill, why was this provision reported out by the Naval Affairs Committee? Why did it not come through the regular channels with respect to all river and harbor development and be reported out by the Rivers and Harbors Committee? When we undertake to develop other rivers and harbors in the country or in the insular possessions, we let them come through the regular course just as all other river and harbor legislation.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. Yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think we ought to clear up, before we start, the matter of Guam coming under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The House should know that Guam is under the jurisdiction of the Naval Committee, put there during the time of President McKinley, after the Spanish-American War, and therefore the Committee on Rivers and Harbors does not have jurisdiction over this matter, and if the harbor at Guam is to be deepened, it must be done by the Navy Department.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I am just wondering if the gentleman is fully and correctly advised about that proposition. I made some investigation of the matter myself, and it is my opinion, after this investigation, and I was so advised by those in a position to speak authoritatively, that both committees possibly would have current jurisdiction of the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURDOCK of Utah). The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. COLMER. So it seems at best they would have concurrent jurisdiction. What do we find? We find a war-torn and alarmed world. We are sitting on the edge, and all nations are nervous and irritable, and we have this country protesting all of the time its good-neighbor policy—protesting any desire toward aggression. We should follow that out in deed as well as in words. So I think we should approach this matter rather carefully.

I do not think I would be opposed to this under other circumstances. I do not know the necessity from an economic point of view for the development of this harbor for our commercial or even naval purposes, but I doubt that it should be approached in this manner. Here is an island 5,428 miles from the Pacific coast, over there close to another country with which they say we are not on such friendly terms. If we do not desire aggression, why should we attempt to do anything at this particular time that would prove offensive or would add to the nervous tension of the world?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. Yes.

Mr. COX. The gentleman will recall, I am sure, that on the application for a rule before the Committee on Rules evidence was presented in the form of a telegram which represented the attitude of the Japanese with respect to this proposal to improve the harbor of Guam.

Mr. COLMER. I say to my friend that I heard that telegram read by one of the minority Members. I am not sure just what the full portent of that was, but I must get back to the proposition, and I am sure that my friend, who has a level head on all occasions, would rather that this question would not come up at this time. As I said at this time, there is nothing partisan about that. We have to go out there over 3,000 miles beyond Hawaii, under this bill, to fortify an island. It will be like hoisting a red flag over there, to add to the jittery condition of a world torn with dissension. It was also brought out that it is not proposed to fortify this island. Let us reason about that.

If you are not going to fortify the island, then why do anything about it? In other words, why go in there and deepen the harbor that would be useful to Japan or some other country, because we would not be able to protect it if we did not have any fortifications?

Mr. COX. If the island is not to be used at some time for strengthening our national defense, then what purpose could there be?

Mr. COLMER. As far as I am concerned, rather than go over there and have a war about a corral reef, I would be willing to let them have it. I am not a naval or a military expert, and I don't know just what advantage it would be, but I do know that it is now proposed to do something more than to dredge that harbor, because I hold in my hand a bill recently introduced, on January 19, by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to build some barracks over there at a cost of some $75,000. What I am apprehensive of, let me say to my good friend from Georgia and others who are interested, is that I am afraid that this might be an entering wedge to build up a fortified island nearly 5,000 miles from our coast line, that later would serve to get us into trouble, and I think it is a matter that ought to be most carefully considered by this House.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, you and I know that it is the purpose eventually of the naval authorities to fortify this island. In fact, the Hepburn report discloses that that committee recommended such a course. Moreover, it has been estimated, I believe, by the naval authorities that it would cost $88,000,000 for the fortification and something like seventy million for a naval and air base. That means that, if we were to follow the Hepburn recommendation, we would expend a total of approximately $150,000,000 for the defense of a little island 6 miles wide and 30 miles long situated 5,428 miles from our coast and approximately 1,400 miles from Japan. That they do intend to fortify it is shown on page 22 of the printed hearings. Admiral Leahy was asked if it was not possible that the Navy Department at a later date would make further recommendations "to guarantee national defense" for Guam and other localities. Admiral Leahy replied, "It is reasonable to assume that the Department will make such recommendations at a later date."

Now, as I said in the premises, I believe in national defense. I do not believe in aggression or anything that smacks of it. Every utterance that I have made on this floor or elsewhere reflects that position. But I am compelled to view with some alarm the policy of fortifying an island that far from home by a nation that has ever protested any desire for conquest.

If the island is not to be fortified eventually, then we are wasting $5,000,000, and, more than that, we might be building for Japan or some other aggressive nation who would take it away from us and use it against us. On the other hand, I am unalterably opposed to expending such a huge sum as $150,000,000 to fortify it. Viewed from either point of view it is a bad investment. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 minutes. I know of no more dangerous and provocative proposal that could come before the House in these days of war hysteria and fear and dread of war than this matter of Guam. Appeals have been made to emotionalism and fear throughout the length and breadth of this land that have created war hysteria to such an extent that only a short time ago the people of the great State of New Jersey, listening into the radio, even thought they were being invaded by warriors from Mars. There is no denying the fact that the American people have been alarmed by all of this talk and thought of war, and if the women really believed one-half they read in the newspapers, and one-half they heard over the radio, they would look under their beds every night to see if there was not some Jap or German or Italian there ready to pounce on poor little defenseless America and gobble up both North and South America at one bite.

As Al Smith used to say, "Let's look at the record." What does the record disclose? The record discloses that instead of being a poor, weak, defenseless nation, like China or Abyssinia, we have the greatest Navy we have ever had in the history of our country; a Navy three times as large as the German Navy, twice as large as the Italian Navy and 50 percent larger than the Japanese Navy. Then why is it necessary to change our entire foreign policy, which has been one of national defense and defense of our own shores and upholding the Monroe Doctrine, to go 6,000 miles away from our Pacific Coast to set up an airplane base? Is that for defense—6,000 miles away? This little island of Guam is farther from Hawaii and Honolulu than we are from the Rhine. Yet we propose to go out there and spend $5,000,000 to dredge that little harbor of Guam, in order to provide an airplane base. Against whom?

Before I go any further, I challenge the President of the United States, I challenge the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the subcommittee on naval appropriations to state to this House what nation or nations is even dreaming of attacking the United States, or what nation or nations has the faintest capacity to attack the United States of America? Then why depart from our traditional foreign policies of nonintervention, of neutrality, of peace, and of national defense and go looking for trouble? I say to you if we were ever looking for trouble and war, this is the way to find it.

Human nature has not changed. When I was a boy at school and I wanted to get into a fight I would put a chip on my shoulder and go out looking for one, and I would always be accommodated. Today we are putting a chip on our shoulder by going out of our way to dredge and prepare Guam as an airplane base. Oh, you will hear all about this being a mere harbor dredging operation. A harbor for what? For airplanes, not civilian, but naval airplanes. For aggression, as an airplane base it would be, a dagger at the throat of Japan and an arrow aimed at the heart of Japan and its communications and its trade. Guam is only 1,300 miles from Japan. Only 1,400 miles from Tokio and the great industrial cities of Japan. It could be used as an air base to bomb its commerce and destroy its cities. I say to you I think this is one of the most important factors to consider when you are considering the entire program of national defense how would we like a Japanese base within 1,300 miles of the Pacific coast? We are Americans regardless of partisanship. After all, war is above partisanship. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. What would we say if Japan started to build a harbor for airplanes 1,300 miles from the Panama Canal; 1,300 miles from San Francisco;

1,300 miles from Los Angeles? It must be self-evident to every Member of the House that that would create overnight a serious war hysteria, a direct fear and dread of war, and would lead directly to war if Japan did the same thing we propose to do if we enact this bill.

Mr. THORKE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. THORKE. May I ask the gentleman, does he believe that China is carrying a chip on her shoulder, or Ethiopia, or Africa, or India, and the other places?

Mr. FISH. I will say to the gentleman that I do not think the United States of America, with the greatest Navy we have ever had, is in the same situation as China or Abyssinia or Spain or India. We propose to have and have the utmost national defense that is necessary to protect our own shores, to protect our trade, and to uphold the Monroe Doctrine; but we do not have to go looking for wars in foreign lands.

Now, I am glad this issue has been brought up today before Washington's Birthday and will be considered on Washington's Birthday and will be voted on the day after Washington's Birthday. What is it that Washington said in his Farewell Address as advice to the American people? There never was an American statesman who had the vision of George Washington. He said this:

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

I repeat and I emphasize: "Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation?" That is the issue. Nothing has changed since those days, since the day that Washington proclaimed that doctrine and left it as advice and a warning to the American people not to depart from it. There is no airplane that has ever been invented that can fly from Germany or Italy or Japan and bomb a single American city and get back to its base. I challenge the President or anyone in this House upholding this bill to specify that a single airplane can fly from either Germany, Japan, or Italy and bomb any city in the United States and get back to their base.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. This is to get the record straight, also. This bill also provides certain air bases for Alaska. I wonder if the gentleman is familiar with the fact that Japan has fortified its airplane base which is closer to Alaska than Japan is to Guam, and I wonder if the gentleman has the same objection with regard to the air bases in Alaska.

Mr. FISH. No; because in the last Congress we agreed that our first line of naval defense should be from Alaska to Hawaii, down to Samoa, and then to the Panama Canal. That was recommended by our admirals and Navy Department, and was adopted by Congress as a proper and adequate first line of defense, with Hawaii as our outpost. Now we propose to move 4,000 miles farther, farther than it is from Washington to Berlin. We now propose to move from Hawaii to Guam, that little outpost in the Pacific, in order to establish an airplane base as a threat against Japan and her commerce, and to extend our naval operations from the eastern Pacific to the western Pacific.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COX. Do I understand that the gentleman's objection to Guam constitutes his full objection to the bill?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I am willing to accept the appropriations for Wake and Midway Islands. I do not know that it is necessary or that I want to quarrel about whether we should fortify Wake and Midway. I will accept that plan of defense as going a little farther west than Hawaii but not 4,000 miles beyond Hawaii to set up an air base at Guam.

Mr. MAGNUSON. And Alaska.

Mr. FISH. And Alaska; but I do object to going 4,000 miles away looking for trouble in the Western Pacific in the vicinity of Japan.

Mr. COX. The gentleman, of course, is not objecting to the adoption of the pending rule.

Mr. FISH. Not at all. Now, let us consider for a moment this alleged menace from enemy airplanes. Actually, if one believed all one read in the press one would believe that we were about to be invaded by some foreign power, that foreign airplanes were about to bomb Washington, New York, or San Francisco.

What are the facts? The facts are in regard to the three totalitarian States of Italy, Germany, and Japan, that Italy has no airplane carriers, Germany has two airplane carriers and Japan has only six. This makes a total of eight airplane carriers. Each of those carriers has a maximum capacity of 50 planes. So if we sunk our Navy, the greatest Navy we have ever had and almost the equal of Great Britain's today, if we sunk our Navy these totalitarian nations could only bring over against us on airplane carriers 400 planes; and today we have 4,000 airplanes between the Army and the Navy. If 4,000 modern American airplanes with the best pilots in the world cannot defeat 400 European or Asiatic planes, then we better give up anyhow and not talk any more about defense. However, facts seem to count for little owing to the fury of the war hysteria and propaganda.

Why should we adopt this aggressive program and disregard the advice of George Washington? Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation and go looking for trouble? We will find all the trouble we are looking for. The President a little while ago said that we have a rendezvous with destiny. It is beginning to look as if we would have a rendezvous with death at Guam. If we begin arming and fortifying Guam as a base for airplanes naturally we will follow it up for submarines and then for larger ships, and in a little while we shall create enough suspicion, and hatred, and enmity with Japan that war will be inevitable. All history proves it.

Go back to the days of Athens and Sparta, Carthage and Rome, all the way up to the days of Great Britain and Germany. Naval competition has always created hatred and enmity, and eventuated in war. That is what is happening now. We are launched on a great naval race with Japan, a mad and costly rivalry and this is a logical step in that naval race, to arm as far out as we can get for offense. We will have changed our entire foreign policy from one of defense to one of offense if this bill goes through. I suspected it last year when we discussed appropriations for a super navy—not for defense, but for offense. This proves that we are going out into the western Pacific for aggressive purposes, to quarantine the world, to act as policemen for the entire world, with American blood and treasure.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman give us some idea of what the President had in his mind last week just before he left on his fishing trip when he said that complications might arise which would force him to shorten his trip and come home?

Mr. FISH. All I can say to the gentleman after listening to the President's speeches in favor of concerted action against aggressor nations, demanding powers from Congress to determine the aggressor nation, talking of economic sanctions and acts short of war, and about policing and quarantining the world—all I can say to the gentleman from Minnesota and my fellow Republicans is that the more the President goes on fishing trips and stays away from Washington the safer the country will be. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman is opposed to the fortification of Guam, is he not?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. Does the gentleman believe that the $5,000,000 authorized in this bill is the beginning of the fortifying of that island?

Mr. FISH. I am sure it is.

Mr. STEFAN. Then does not the gentleman think that the American public and American industry in the Philippine Islands should know today that we are taking a definite step in abandoning forever the Philippine Islands?

Mr. FISH. Answering the gentleman, and I can express only my own views, I voted to give up the Philippines. I voted to give them up voluntarily because I would not give them up under threat of war, but I am willing to give them up in time of peace. I remember the words of Theodore Roosevelt when, as President of the United States, he wrote to his Secretary of War, Mr. Taft:

We must do everything we can to give up the Philippines in time of peace when no threat is being made against them, because they constitute the Achilles' heel of the United States.

This statement was made 30 years ago by a great American President and a courageous man. I am in favor of giving them up. I think it is preposterous that, having voted to give up the Philippine Islands, we should now attempt to fortify the island of Guam, 4,000 miles from Hawaii, or to establish an air base there against Japan.

Mr. STEFAN. We have had an idle Army in the Philippines for 30 years. We are abandoning various fortifications; we are abandoning Cavite, Olongapo, and Corregidor. Why now fortify this little island in that same region?

Mr. FISH. That is what I cannot understand, and that is the question I ask. It is preposterous, unreasonable, and unsound, because we could not defend it if we wanted to; and it is a provocative act that promotes unfriendly relations with a proud, sensitive, and warlike people.

Mr. STEFAN. It is my opinion that the Army and Navy want something out there as an excuse to go there.

Mr. FISH. It is a big adventure in aggression and offense, and will result inevitably in war.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. At the time the Philippine Act was up for consideration, was there debate of any consequence as to whether or not the people of this country or the Congress of the United States had any right to take away from the Philippines the protection of the United States; in other words, discharge that Territory and forever remove it as a part of this country? Has Congress the right to discharge the State of Michigan from the protection of the United States? Was that matter debated at all?

Mr. FISH. I believe it was. We had a very extensive debate on that proposition. I believe it was unanimously felt we had this right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is a constitutional right that has never been settled?

Mr. FISH. If we have not got it, we ought to amend the Constitution, because, after all, we cannot go to war perpetually over the Philippines.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But the question has not been decided?

Mr. FISH. Not definitely by the Supreme Court, but I doubt if the Congress felt it was necessary.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is what I mean.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In view of the fact that in a special message of March 2, 1934, the President recommended abandonment of all military establishments in the Philippines, can this policy be reconciled with that recommendation?

Mr. FISH. It cannot be. You cannot reconcile any of the President's statements. He is the one who has been advocating Guam as an air base from the beginning and that is why it is before the House today. We are supposed to goose-step in support of the proposal because the President wants Guam fortified as a part of his program to quarantine the world. Do not make any mistake about that.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. The gentleman has been talking about the attitude of the Congress with regard to the Philippines. The gentleman, of course, is aware of the fact that the Philippines were taken under a Republican administration with the promise that they would soon be free. Does the gentleman not recall it was the Republican Party that kept the Philippine Islands for many years?

Mr. FISH. I am not denying that. I am not denying the fact the Philippines were conquered during a Republican administration, that we paid $20,000,000 for the islands to Spain, but many of us Republicans are willing and glad to give them up. The Democrats also wanted to give them up. Now, why go out and fortify Guam? That is the question for you to answer?

Mr. COX. The Philippines were given their conditional freedom under a Democratic administration.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. Speaker, I want to appeal to my fellow Republicans and emphasize that there is no country in the world thinking of attacking us. There is no country that has the ability or the capacity to attack us if they wanted to do so. Every one of our admirals stated that the Japanese Navy must be three times as large as ours in order to even attempt to attack us. All of this talk about an attack or invasion from a foreign nation or nations is part of the war hysteria and fear being created in America by the New Deal administration and among others who are doing this are the Communists who want us to go to war with Japan and Germany for the benefit of Soviet Russia. I insist all this talk that we will be invaded and attacked by foreign foes is merely political bunk and eyewash to cover up the change in our foreign policies from neutrality, nonintervention, peace, and no entangling alliances to collective security, economic sanctions, aggression, and war. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from New York desire to use more time?

Mr. FISH. Yes. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, in thinking of this question of Guam, my mind, of course, goes to the Philippine Islands situation. Personally, I do not consider that the Philippines have yet been granted independence and I do not hesitate in saying that so far as I am personally concerned, I do not think the Members sitting on the floor of this House today will live to see the time that the Philippines will gain their "political and economic independence." I think the forces of the world are shaping themselves in such manner that before July 4, 1946, the Philippine people will deny themselves independence, as defined in the independence act. I think the forces are shaping themselves in such manner that the people of this country will feel it will be a greater curse to our people and invite more danger by turning over the Philippine Islands to Japan than building fortifications at Guam or any other step we can possibly take in connection with the far islands of the Pacific.

Anyone who desires to analyze in detail the resources of the Philippine Islands, which we have never attempted to develop or exploit, will find that there is stored there war material which Japan is seeking and which Japan is now taking, not after 1946 but right now, in an amazing manner, with our full consent. As surely as the 1946 Independence Act is consummated, if we ever have trouble with Japan these war materials will be converted into war munitions and war supplies to be used against the women and children of the United States of America as well as those located in the Philippine Islands, if the Filipinos resist Japanese domination.

Mr. Speaker, there is no need kidding ourselves. We have shadow-boxed and bamboozled ourselves for 40 years with reference to the Philippines. I seriously question the right of this Congress to pass such an act in the first place.

Certainly I am not a constitutional lawyer. It is a political proposition which has been whipped up by a few leaders in the Philippines led by the present President of the Commonwealth. I do not think Japan will pay any more attention to this harbor development of Guam than we would pay to the transfer of another thousand Japanese from Tokio to the port of Davao in the Philippine Islands. This is a lot of bushwa we are talking about now as far as Japan jumping on us because we build this fortification is concerned. Japan will just quietly proceed to take the Philippines and will let us go ahead and play with Guam in our own way. She knows we are not going to "fortify" Guam. Are we to maintain air service—passenger and freight—from this country to the Far East? If so, we will have to have harbor development to accommodate the planes. If we do not want the planes to run over there that is a different proposition. If you do not want to maintain your world power in the Far East, that is a different proposition. If you desire to surrender all there is in the Philippines to Japan, that is one thing, and that is what we are doing now. The Japanese are conquering the Philippines much more rapidly than we are moving out. All you have to do is to look up the facts to determine that. If you will look up the figures of private industry, you will appreciate that Japan is rapidly conquering the Philippines, by acquiring control of mining, banking, shipping, agriculture, retailing, importing Japanese goods into the islands through houses established, located, and operating in the islands. You will also find that although we purchase an overwhelming proportion of the total goods shipped out by the Philippines, Japan is selling to the Filipinos an increasing amount of goods which are paid for with the dollars we give to the islanders for the goods they ship to us. Furthermore, you will find, if you care to search the records, that leading Philippine Islanders are now taking the position, and openly, that they should move from here on ally themselves with the great Japanese Empire so that they may hover under the protecting wing of the Japanese Navy and Army and international power. Take note of the flirtations of President Quezon with the high-ranking Japanese officials. Heed the growing attention being paid by Japan to all of the developments in the islands in the way of education, communication, religious, and other activities falling outside the realms of business and agriculture. I repeat, and let me emphasize my statement "the Filipinos will not accept 'independence' and you can rest assured they will capitulate to the aggressiveness of Japan before independence, as set forth in the 1934 Independence Act, has been attained." The Filipinos will do this very thing unless the people of the United States intervene. The progress which Japan is now making in inducing the Filipinos to move in the direction of Japan is nothing short of startling in the light of the representations for years made by the present President of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Speaker, to an amazing degree the inherent and decent rights of Americans now residing in the islands are being run over and ignored by Filipino officials. We will hear and see more of this in the future as Japan applies the pressure here and there on the islanders. This is a very natural development. As this goes on, the Filipinos will assume they are outsmarting us. They will take the position they are a superior class because of our receding attitude. I am here referring to the "politicos" of the islands, not the Philippine people as a whole. Orientalism and Americanism are two dissimilar breeds. They will never mix insofar as permanency is concerned. As time comes and goes we will more fully comprehend this fact.

Mr. Speaker, if we are to agree with the program of letting Japan acquire control of the Philippines, then let us get out of all the western Pacific islands west of Hawaii and let Japan run that part of the world and pull ourselves back to the Western Hemisphere and take care of our own situation.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. KITCHENS. What the gentleman said is true. The Philippines today is in a pincers between fortifications by Japan on the east and on the west at the island of Hainan.

This practically places the Philippine Islands under the jurisdiction of Japan today.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in speaking briefly on this measure is to share with you the contents of a letter I have received from one of my constituents. I trust it may be interesting. I quote:

I lived more than 3 years on the island of Guam.

Guam, Manila, and Yokohama are set in a triangle about 1,500 miles apart. Guam is 5,500 miles from San Francisco. The Azores are about 1,800 miles from Boston. Considering these distances, it would seem more sensible to fortify an island in this group rather than Guam, the southernmost island of the Ladrone group.

However, to return to Guam. About 5 miles from Agaña is the harbor at Piti. Most islands in tropical Pacific waters are surrounded by an outer coral reef; closer inshore are other coral reefs. This harbor is formed by "Goat" island and an outer coral reef. This reef is completely under water at high tide. Inside, the harbor is full of sunken reefs that could rip the bottom out of a vessel.

In 1900 the U. S. S. Yosemite was lying at anchor in this harbor. A typhoon came up so suddenly that she could not get steam up soon enough to clear the harbor and get to sea. She was blown over the coral reef, out to sea, where she foundered about 24 hours later. Three years later the cable ship Scotia ran up upon the reef at the entrance of the harbor. At low water she looked as if she was setting up upon the top of a table.

This all leads up to what I want to say. Guam has no harbor and as it has no harbor it would seem a wicked waste of public funds to fortify the island. Guam is the home of typhoons and earthquakes are frequent, as many as 10 a month. In 1903 I went through an earthquake that didn't leave a house standing on the island that was built of stone.

This picture in contemplation of spending a lot of money on this island, even for civil improvements, is not an enticing one. We are all extremely interested in the diplomatic side of this proposal. The President has expressed his approval, and as I recall it, he also suggested that if any particular protest were made he might withdraw the request even for the minor improvements. This gives us the right to assume it to be a diplomatic move to make Japan a little more sympathetic with our eastern interests, according to comments I have been reading. These moves appeal to me as being something of which Japan might approve. If we were to have a base within 1,500 miles of Japan and were obligated to defend it, contemplate the advantage to Japan to entice our fleet into their nearby waters, far from our own bases. Is not that looking at it from a sensible point of view?

Several have made suggestions about the President's present trip to witness naval maneuvers. I do not regret his taking a vacation for he must surely need one. I wish at the moment he were not going to watch those maneuvers, however, for it may be that he will return so imbued with our naval power and strength and warlike preparedness that he may carry a chip on his shoulder. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish at this time to make any observations with reference to the fortification of Guam. It seems to me this is a matter that probably had better be discussed when the bill itself is before us rather than while the rule is under consideration.

I am impressed with the fact that we face a danger which has not been touched upon, one probably greater than any danger that threatens us from foreign shores. I refer to the danger presently existing in connection with the hazardous financial condition of the country. It seems to me we should pay some attention today to the fact we have about reached the limit of our national debt, and that if the emergencies exist which the present administration would have us believe exist we should be mindful first of all of putting our financial house in order so that we may be able to meet the demands which would come upon us in the event of an emergency.

It seems to me we should be setting up a national-defense program which would include financial stability as well as armament stability.

During the past 6 years we have followed a course and pursued a program which lead to a jeopardy and a hazard far greater than any jeopardy or hazard presented by any foreign foe. I pose this question to you today, what would we do in the event of an emergency which would require the same degree of financial support as the World War required? The World War required the outlay of great sums of money. Billions of dollars were needed in order that we might provide the men, the munitions, and the materials to carry on that war. But the present administration, assuming the dangers which it would have us believe do lurk in the offing, has pursued a policy of profligacy and of dissipation of our wealth and our resources which places us today in an extremely hazardous position.

Let us think a little bit about strengthening the financial stability of the Nation, while we are talking about the fortifications of these island possessions of ours. Let the Treasury Department be called upon to bring forward its estimates of the financial needs of the country in the matter of the defense of the Nation. Instead of calling on the War Department and instead of calling on the Navy Department to dissipate our funds and spend our wealth, let us ask the Treasury Department to come here and tell us what the plans of the Treasury would be in the event of this emergency which they tell us probably may arise at any moment. Let the Treasury Department come here and give us their plans of national defense. It seems to me this would stimulate in the Nation a confidence which would give us a degree of stability which the other nations of the world would recognize so they would know that if an emergency came we would be prepared.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. I believe that question has been answered. The gentleman forgets there is a new philosophy. When we get to that $80,000,000,000 income through the present program of spending a certain amount, everything is going to be all right. I believe the gentleman's question has been answered.

Mr. DITTER. I hesitate to intrude any political observations in this discussion. [Laughter.]

I mean that. I do hope you take it that this is a sincere observation. This is a matter of serious concern to our people. It is vital. National defense is above partisanship. I repeat, our weakness today is not in men or munitions, but in the hazardous financial condition in which we find ourselves as a result of the past 6 years of shameful profligacy. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4278) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4278, with Mr. WHITTINGTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, by the Constitution the Congress shall have power to provide for the common defense and to provide and maintain a Navy. That not only gives us the power to provide a Navy but to provide the necessary naval bases and shore establishments required which together with the fleet will make this country secure from attack.

The primary object and purpose of this bill is to authorize the construction of certain of the aviation facilities recommended by a board of officers appointed in accordance with a provision of the Naval Expansion Act, approved May 17, 1938; the other provisions in the bill are supplemental to the main provision and are included to permit the accomplishment of the main purpose of the bill in the most expeditious and economical manner.

The Naval Expansion Act of 1938, authorized an increase of 20 percent in combatant vessels and at least 50 percent in naval aircraft.

Fully realizing that the expansion so authorized would, when completed, require additional bases and facilities for efficient maintenance and operation, Congress directed the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a board to "investigate and report upon the need for the purposes of national defense for the establishment of additional submarine, destroyer, mine, and naval air bases on the continental coasts of the United States, its Territories and possessions."

The board so authorized was duly appointed, made an exhaustive study of the question of additional needs for bases for the Navy and has submitted its report which was transmitted to the Speaker of the House and which may be found in House Document No. 65 of this Congress. The report recommends the creation of some new bases and facilities as well as improvements in or expansion of some of those already in existence.

A careful study of the contents of the report of this board, now known as the Hepburn Board, reveals that the Navy is far short of the bases and facilities considered essential for the efficient operation of the fleet in the training necessary for it to reach the maximum state of readiness for the defense of our shores and possessions. Not only are these bases and facilities necessary for peacetime training but they would be invaluable for defense in time of a national emergency.

The President in his national defense message to the Congress has recommended that certain funds be appropriated "for the creation or strengthening of Navy bases in both oceans in general agreement with this report."

Therefore, your committee presents this bill to you after a thorough investigation into the needs for these bases and with only minor changes from the recommendations of the board, the Navy Department, and the President.

The defense of continental United States necessitates appropriate development of continental and outlying naval bases and a strong Navy free to move from one ocean to the other. Panama and Hawaii are vital points involved in securing this freedom of movement.

So long as Hawaii and Panama are secure and backed up by a superior fleet, so long will continental United States be free from attack from the sea or from the air.

The security of these two places can be threatened by hostile navies in the Atlantic, in the Pacific, or in both oceans. The safeguarding of these vital points, Hawaii and Panama, can be vastly improved by the development and use of outlying bases in the Caribbean, in the mid-Pacific, and in Alaska. Unless we can feel certain that potentially hostile navies will not now, nor in the decade to come, pursue courses that will increase the threat and danger to Hawaii and Panama, we dare not now neglect the development of these outlying air facilities included in this bill that augment them.

This bill authorizes the Navy Department to develop or increase the naval aviation facilities at Kaneohe Bay, Pearl Harbor, Midway Island, Wake Island, Guam, Johnson Island, and Palmyra Island in the mid-Pacific area; Kodiak and Sitka in the Alaskan area; San Juan, Puerto Rico, in the Caribbean area; and Norfolk, Va., Tongue Point, and Pensacola in the continental United States.

Our Navy will be called upon to defend the interests, rights, possessions, and vital security of the United States wherever they are threatened. The effectiveness with which it can accomplish this task will be definitely improved when this proposed program has been achieved.

The one item of this bill that has received the most publicity and the one that has been subject to the most criticism is the provision to expend $5,000,000 to improve the harbor facilities for seaplane operation at the island of Guam in the mid-Pacific.

Opposition to this item has been based on the assumption that Guam is to be fortified and made into a strongly defended naval base for airplanes and submarines.

In view of this opposition the committee has gone into this matter at great length, and I can assure you that there is no intention on the part of the Navy Department to fortify Guam or to do anything further than what is included in this bill.

The island of Guam had minor fortifications and a small aviation force prior to the Washington Treaty of 1922. By that treaty the United States agreed that the status quo with regard to fortifications would be maintained at Guam. Conforming strictly with that treaty, no increases in fortifications were made at Guam during the life of the treaty but, rather, in 1932 all defensive weapons were removed from the island, including the planes. The Washington Treaty expired on December 31, 1936, so that it is now possible for the United States, so far as international obligations are concerned, to fortify Guam and to construct a naval base there if the country so desires.

Guam is in the midst of the Marshall, Caroline, and Marianas Islands. These islands were mandated to Japan by the Treaty of Versailles. The terms of the mandate stipulate, and Japan agreed, that no military or naval bases should be established or fortifications erected in the mandated islands. No definite information has been obtained that any of the mandated islands have been fortified; however, foreigners are not allowed to visit these islands.

Adverse comment by foreign press and foreign spokesmen to any development of Guam is noted, but the improvements the Navy Department recommends for accomplishment are not an indication of aggression; to take cognizance of such inspired adverse comment would be an indication of weakness.

Admiral Leahy, ranking naval officer, in his testimony said:

The authorization bill * * * does not provide for the development of a base at Guam.

Mr. Charles Edison, civilian Assistant Secretary of the Navy, when before the committee, said:

Facilities for the operation of airplanes from Guam will add materially to the defensive power of the fleet.

It is impossible to look into the future and see whether or not there will be need for further development of Guam as an airplane base, but we may hope that the future international situation will make it unnecessary to use Guam except as a commercial airport.

It is the present policy of the Navy Department to limit development to the extent stated in the bill before this committee.

If unforeseen changes in the international situation should indicate a necessity for further development of an airplane base, then the Congress will be so informed.

We hope that there will be no necessity for further development—none is contemplated at the present time.

He went on further to say:

In some quarters there seems to be the impression that the Navy is desirous of working along a program based on offensive rather than defensive plans.

Before I came here 2 years ago I shared this misconception. I can state as an absolute truth that during the 2 years I have been here as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, I have never heard discussed, officially or unofficially, any plan for naval expansion that was based on a desire for offensive action. The whole and sincere desire of the personnel of the Navy is to do a first-class job of preparing this country to defend itself. Never, within the Department, in the field, or at social gatherings, or in personal conversations do I get any other impression. The idea that the Navy seeks defense on the surface and offense in the back room is simply imaginary and untenable.

If the Navy or the Army, the State Department, or the administration were looking for trouble, there have been many incidents of sufficient gravity in the past 3 or 4 years that could have been easily used as a basis for belligerent action on the part of the United States. The exact reverse has been true. We winked at many things that in other days would not have been tolerated and which would have led us directly to war.

The armed forces, the State Department, and the administration most earnestly desire to live at peace with our neighbors and will continue to strive constantly for this objective.

This is proof enough to me that the Navy Department has no intention of fortifying Guam.

It is the considered opinion of the committee that the recommendation of the Navy Department for limited improvements at Guam should be carried out at this time. Whether further expenditures will be authorized at a later date for the establishment of a base is for the Congress to determine at a later date.

If world conditions at some future time make it advisable in the interests of our national defense to establish a protected naval air and submarine base or if events compel the development of Guam into a fortified fleet base, I would be in favor of that undertaking.

For Guam is vitally important to the United States from the standpoint of naval as well as commercial aviation.

It is an essential link in any overseas movement of naval patrol planes to the Philippines as well as an important stepping stone in the commercial air route across the Pacific.

It is of great importance as a possible air and submarine base from which to protect our overseas commerce from the Dutch East Indies, where essential strategic materials necessary to maintain our industries are obtained. It is of value as the site of a possible naval station to support the Asiatic Fleet when the United States withdraws from the Philippines in 1946.

Its strategic position in the western Pacific makes it of inestimable value to the United States as a possible defense base which would act as a strong deterrent to any Asiatic power contemplating a hostile move toward the Hawaiian Islands or the American Continent.

It is an unquestioned important strategic position and some day its security may be indispensable to the success of United States defensive operations.

I repeat again, nothing in this bill authorizes fortifications at Guam. We hope the necessity will never arise; but if it does, Congress can be depended upon to do whatever is necessary at any cost to defend America.

I say to you that our fleet must not be hampered in its movements when it is called upon to defend America, and any implication that we should not go beyond the one hundred and eightieth meridian, even when our own territory lies beyond, is wrong, and the people of this country will not agree to any such restriction placed upon our fleet.

We should never be partisan where national defense is concerned, and with a united Congress determined on an adequate defense America need have no fear for its future.

We must make America impregnable from any direction, and with the outlying aircraft facilities included in this bill our fleet will be so strengthened that any aggressor nation will be defeated long before he reaches our shores.

We must be prepared to stand alone. National defense is of utmost importance to America and to the Western Hemisphere.

Let no one think that with the world being overrun by the dictator powers—Germany and Italy in Europe and Japan in the Far East—that it is not of the utmost importance that we be forever vigilant in looking to our defenses.

It is not only necessary that we look to our own defenses but it is to our advantage to allow our airplane manufacturers to furnish planes to those other two great democracies—France and England—in order that they may not be destroyed by the dictator powers.

Every right-thinking American approves the administration's decision in this case, for if England and France are unprepared they will surely be destroyed and the last stand of the democracies will be in this hemisphere, with the United States carrying the load.

America now finds it necessary to answer the dictators in their own language. The world might just as well know that America is not going to submit to being destroyed with other unprepared democracies.

There are even those who believe that the ills of this mad world could be cured by conferences and covenants between the democracies and the dictatorships.

There is not a man within the sound of my voice who would not welcome such a conference if it meant a return to world sanity, a resurgence to the good old-fashioned principles of national honor, national ethics, and national respect of obligations—if one iota of good could come out of it.

Every meeting so far with the dictators has meant unequivocal surrender. Peace on the terms of the dictators is a Carthaginian peace.

At the moment the slogan of the aggressors is "might makes right." This is not a new slogan. It has been used before. Attila the Hun used it 1,500 years ago. He was termed "The Fear of the World" and "The Scourge of God"—high-sounding phrases which no doubt flattered his colossal vanity.

Mr. Chairman, last October a general European war was narrowly averted. During those trying times the State Department, under the guidance of our great Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, handled our foreign affairs in a masterly manner, which will resound to his undying fame when the history of these days is written.

In the hope of making political capital and of embarrassing the President some have quoted him as saying that "America's new defense frontier was on the Rhine River in Germany."

He has branded that statement as a "deliberate lie" and to silence his critics stated only a few days ago his foreign policy as follows:

The (American) foreign policy has not changed and is not going to change.

We are against any entangling alliances, obviously.

We are in favor of the maintenance of world trade for everybody—all nations—including ourselves.

He further stated:

We are in complete sympathy with any and every effort made to reduce or limit armaments.

As a nation—as American people—we are sympathetic with the peaceful maintenance of political, economic, and social independence of all nations in the world.

This policy voices the sentiment of the rank and file of the American people.

The statements by the President show that the policy of the Nation is neither imperialistic nor aggressive but on the contrary is purely a policy of defense and self-reliance.

There is nothing in this bill which is not in thorough accord with this policy. No other nation can logically object to any nation improving the purely defensive facilities of its own land unless that other nation should have aggressive designs on the territory thus defended.

We do not seek war with anyone. We do not intend to get entangled in any alien quarrels. As a democratic people we are a peaceful people.

We respect the rights of other nations; we expect other nations to respect our rights.

We do not covet one foot of soil of any other nation. The purpose of this program is to insure that no covetous nation shall secure a foot of ours. [Applause.]

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. The gentleman has stated, and correctly so, that this measure does not contain all of the recommendations that were contained in the Hepburn report so far as Guam is concerned, but I invite the gentleman's attention to the testimony given to the committee by Admiral Hepburn himself, the chairman of the board, that if we are to do anything at all at Guam we should go the full limit. His words were, "Do it right or not at all."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In reply to that statement, Congress writes the naval policy. Admiral Hepburn makes suggestions, but we are to determine what the policy shall be, and, representing the House, we have brought in a bill not carrying out Admiral Hepburn's recommendation.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. The gentleman made the statement that the only item in controversy in the entire bill is with respect to the island of Guam.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. As far as the committee is concerned.

Mr. HAWKS. Is that the opinion of the entire committee; and if so, where did the committee get the information that the country as a whole had no objection to any other part of this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Unfortunately the members of the minority on the committee had not consulted the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin—

Mr. HAWKS. I am not speaking for the minority; I am simply speaking for myself and asking for the information.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. So far as the committee is concerned, my statement is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Philippine independence will occur on July 4, 1946, as set forth in the present act.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Would the gentleman care to comment upon the attitude of this country, or the position that we would be in, if, during the next 7 years Japan aggressively steps into the Philippines and moves with force? What would the United States have to do?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I trust if it is going to be 7 years, that the gentleman will be here during that time and that we may then cross the bridge when we come to it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let me submit this, then. Would this present proposal to improve the harbor at Guam, insofar as this bill goes, assist in that situation, or would we miss this particular improvement?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This improvement to Guam is of such character that it adds defensive value to the fleet if the fleet is in that vicinity. The House was very much impressed with the statement the gentleman just made with reference to the Philippines, and he will excuse me if I do not embark on that perilous line of thought that is going through the mind of the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am seeking information. Let us assume, for instance, that there is trouble in the world today, and, indeed, there is trouble in the Far East, and keep in mind that independence is 7½ years yet away: If there is so much trouble in the world that we should take all these steps from the standpoint of defense, is it not likely that something may arise in the Far East, insofar as the Philippine Islands are concerned, before July 4, 1946, and should we not give that most serious consideration in dealing with this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. All those questions are questions that are receiving proper consideration.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman is undoubtedly one of the outstanding authorities in the House if not, indeed, the outstanding authority on matters affecting the Navy.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MICHENER. I have listened to him down through the years. Am I correct in stating that at times it has been the position of the gentleman in these matters that we should get out of the Philippines, because if this country ever had trouble with Japan, the first thing Japan would do, and could easily do, would be to take the Philippines? Is that the gentleman's position?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I present my views by my vote, and when the question was up I voted to get rid of the Philippines.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. In view of the question asked by my colleague on this side as to what the country would do in case of attack on the Philippines, what does the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs think we would do in view of what Admiral Leahy stated, that with an increase in the Navy three times that he asked for last year, he then would be unable to carry on a successful campaign against Japan in the Pacific?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am not going to get involved in these hypothetical questions. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] I yield myself 20 minutes and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, this bill, H. R. 4278, authorizes an expenditure of $53,800,000 in increasing the naval armament strength of the United States. As indicated in the bill and the report of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the naval facilities it authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to establish, develop, and increase are based on the recommendations of a special naval board appointed by the Secretary of the Navy. With the single exception of the project for Tongue Point, Oreg., all the items embodied in the bill are based on this naval board's recommendations.

In order to understand, therefore, exactly what the measure under consideration proposes to accomplish, it is necessary to examine the report of the naval board itself, consisting of six naval officers. It is popularly known as the Hepburn report, taking its name from Rear Admiral Arthur J. Hepburn, the senior member of the board. The report bears the official approval of the Secretary of the Navy and has been printed as House Document No. 65, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session. I hope that every Member will procure at once from the House document room this important House Document No. 65, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, known as the Hepburn report.

Before turning to a discussion of the bill itself and the Hepburn report on which it is based, let me say that the American people can find real satisfaction in the fact that, however political minded Congress may ordinarily tend to be, on questions of national defense, involving the national security and safety of our people, their Representatives in Congress do not allow political or partisan considerations to influence their judgment. This was clearly evidenced by the overwhelming vote by which we passed the military defense bill last Wednesday, and particularly by the high patriotic plane on which the entire debate was conducted.

To be sure, during the course of that debate objections were raised to certain features of the military defense bill and amendments were offered. But they were conscientious objections and the amendments were proposed in a sincere desire to improve the bill. There was a rather pronounced disagreement as to what our policy should be in the matter of rate of airplane production. But that disagreement arose simply as an honest difference of opinion as to what would be the best procedure for creating and maintaining a strong air force.

And no doubt during the course of this debate on the naval defense bill there will be differences of opinion with respect to the wisdom of certain projects it authorizes to be undertaken by the Navy Department. That is indeed a healthy condition. It may be that certain amendments will be offered by individual Members that will greatly improve the measure. That is our legislative process at its best and much to be desired.

Let me say for myself—and I am sure I speak the sentiment of the entire membership of the House—that whatever differences of opinion or disagreements we may have with the able chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs on this particular bill, whatever amendments we may propose, have their origin in conscientious, honest, sincere convictions and are not in any way influenced by any political considerations. We agree with them that we must at all times maintain an adequate national defense.

We cannot sit smugly and complacently and close our eyes to the unsettled international situation and the world armament race inaugurated by the dictators of Europe. We cannot entirely ignore their militaristic philosophy and their disregard for treaty obligations. The volcanic state of affairs in Europe and Asia, created solely by these dictators with whom force is a fanaticism, should be a dual warning to the United States. It is this: Look to our defenses at home and stay out of imbroglios of Europe and Asia.

Recalling our bitter experiences prior to our entrance into the World War and the power politics of that fateful period in which we slowly became entangled, the explosive situation abroad today should be a warning to those in charge of the affairs of this Government that the security and safety of the American people lies solely in the Western Hemisphere. We can obtain that safety and security only by maintaining adequate defenses for this hemisphere and by refraining from any meddling into the power politics now being played in Europe and Asia.

Today we are considering a bill which proposes to increase our naval armaments. Insofar as the naval projects it authorizes are in keeping with necessary facilities for the adequate defense of this hemisphere, they have my wholehearted support. But there is one item in this bill against which I must voice a vigorous objection.

It represents a radical departure from our long-established naval-defense policy in the Pacific. It is the initial step for extending our line of defense deep into foreign waters. I refer specifically to the authorization of an expenditure of $5,000,000 for the island of Guam. This item may be the very step that serves to involve us in the power politics of Asia and Europe which our people so earnestly desire to avoid.

In our chairman's report I notice that he has endeavored to make it appear that the improvements to be undertaken at Guam are simply ordinary harbor improvements. Our able chairman would have us believe, if he could, that the improvements have little or no relationship to our armament program.

But, on the contrary, Mr. Chairman, the proposed improvements at Guam are not the ordinary harbor improvements "done year after year by this country." They have a very definite relationship to our armament program and are intended to constitute the first step toward the complete fortification of the island. It can be definitely said that the proposed $5,000,000 harbor improvements at Guam have no other purpose than to make that island a naval outpost in Asiatic waters.

By no stretch of the imagination is it possible to divorce the harbor improvements for Guam from their military character. If they are supposed to represent "ordinary harbor improvements," purely civil in character and purpose, then the item has no place in a naval armament bill. Rather the authorization should come from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and the work should be undertaken by the Board of Army Engineers.

Year after year the Committee on Rivers and Harbors reports legislation for the improvement of the various harbors of the United States. Year after year the Board of Army Engineers conducts surveys and makes reports to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors as to the commercial need for and costs of civil improvements.

In fact, the harbor-improvement work which is now being done at Midway Island was authorized by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors as a civil improvement. Like Guam, Midway Island is under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department. But it is indeed significant, to which no little importance is to be attached, that the authorization for the harbor improvements of Midway Island came from the Rivers and Harbors Committee, whereas the authorization for Guam comes to the House from the Committee on Naval Affairs as an item in an armament bill.

Under the authorization of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for Midway Island we have appropriated $1,041,000 for the Welles Harbor improvement. A survey was authorized by the committee, the Board of Army Engineers made its report, the civil as well as naval value of the harbor improvements was shown by that report, and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors authorized the improvements.

And, Mr. Chairman, exactly the same procedure was followed in connection with harbor improvements at Wake Island, also under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department. A survey was authorized by the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1935. A report was made by the Board of Army Engineers to be found in House Document No. 84, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session. And in the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1937 the improvements for the harbor were authorized. To date no appropriations have been made for the Wake Island Harbor. But the significant point is that if and when the appropriation is made, it will be made by virtue of a Rivers and Harbors Act authorization and not by virtue of a Navy committee authorization as is proposed here today in connection with Guam.

The reason for this difference in procedure is not difficult to understand. The one may be said to be civil in character and the other naval. A real commercial value, as well as naval, can be found to exist in the harbor at Midway Island. A commercial necessity was shown to exist for the authorized improvements. But, on the other hand, practically no testimony was presented at the hearings before our Committee on Naval Affairs to show any real commercial necessity for the $5,000,000 harbor development proposed at Guam.

During the course of the hearing it was mentioned as an incidental fact that the Pan American Airlines stop at Guam. But not a single witness stated that it was essential to improve the harbor for commercial purposes. Rather every witness emphasized the value of an improved harbor for naval operations.

Let me refer you to the committee testimony in order to better point out to you that the harbor improvement for Guam is anything but the ordinary improvements made "year after year by this country," as stated by the report of our chairman. On page 25, part 1, of the hearings, Admiral William D. Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations, made this significant statement:

I see no reason why the Navy should spend money from the naval appropriation solely for the advantage of any commercial industry. The purpose of the Navy is to use some money from the national-defense fund to improve the facilities at Guam in order that we can use the harbor. * * *

Then on page 40 of the hearings will be found this statement by Rear Admiral A. J. Hepburn:

With the $5,000,000, as I understand it, you could improve the harbor so that it would be practicable for the operations of sea-planes and possibly give submarines a little more facility there.

Clearly and definitely the authorization for Guam has a purely naval purpose. It is the first step toward establishing a naval outpost, fully fortified and fully garrisoned, 5,400 miles from our shores.

As I stated at the outset of my remarks, in order to understand exactly what is proposed and really intended by this bill, it is necessary to examine the Hepburn report. The chairman has emphasized in the very first paragraph of this report that the—

Object and purposes of this bill are (1) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain of the aviation facilities in line with the recommendations of the board of officers. * * *

Thus to these "recommendations of the board of officers" we must turn with a view to determining the true nature of the Guam proposal.

I cannot, of course, take the time to read all that is embodied in the Hepburn report with regard to the island of Guam. But, for our mutual understanding, I cannot escape the necessity of directing your attention to at least certain pertinent parts of the naval board's recommendations.

First of all, permit me to call attention to paragraph 112 (e) to be found on page 27 of the report:

So long as Guam existed as a strong air and submarine base, hostile operations against the Philippines would be a precarious undertaking. To an even greater extent Guam would greatly impede, if not actually deny, extensive naval operations to the southward, thus greatly simplifying our naval problem should the fleet ever be called upon for operations in the Far East.

Let me read a few more paragraphs from the Hepburn report on which this particular bill is based. It goes on to say in paragraphs 113 and 114 on page 27:

The foregoing considerations are of sufficient weight to warrant the recommendation that Guam should be developed as a major air and submarine base, with a garrison sufficient in strength to make its reduction or occupation a major effort on the part of any probable enemy. There are, however, other considerations and possibilities of far greater significance which it is pertinent to take account of in this connection. Although these considerations may be regarded as beyond the precept of this board, they are of such far-reaching importance that the board feels impelled to include them in its report.

Guam is adapted naturally to development as a major advanced fleet base. Detailed studies to this end have been made in the past, and plans adequate to the situation are in hand. * * *

On the following page (28) in paragraph 116 this same naval board report goes on to state:

The establishment of a fully equipped fleet base at Guam, capable of maintaining at least the major part of the fleet in all types, would in itself practically assure the impregnability of the island. * * *

In other words, Mr. Chairman, the report of the Hepburn board of naval officers looks to the establishment at the island of Guam of a "major air and submarine base." It is very true that the $5,000,000 development authorized in this particular bill does not of itself establish such a "major base." But we cannot escape the fact that, as the report of the chairman of our committee states, the $5,000,000 improvement we are today asked to authorize is in line with the naval board's recommendations. We cannot escape the logical conclusion that the harbor improvement, coming as it does as an item in the Navy bill and not a rivers and harbors bill, represents the first and essential step toward the ultimate establishment of a fully fortified American naval base 5,400 miles from San Francisco, 3,337 miles west of Hawaii, 1,309 miles west of Wake Island, and within 1,500 miles of Yokohama, Japan.

The most casual glance at the maps will depict the real dangers in this undertaking. It will be noted that Guam is not only 5,400 miles from our shores, but it stands in the midst of Japanese mandated islands. The Japanese mandated island of Saipan is only 120 miles from Guam, and I understand there is another such island under the jurisdiction of Japan only 30 miles distant.

A knowledge of distances is the key to an understanding of our naval problem in the Pacific. A glance at the two maps of the Pacific that I have had brought here to show you will make the problem of Guam clear.

Guam is in the very midst of Japan's 98 mandated islands—15 in the Marianna group, 33 in the Marshall group, and 50 in the Carolines.

Guam distances

1 nautical mile=1.1515 statute miles—1 statute mile=0.8684 nautical mile

Guam is 5,428 nautical miles, 6,250 statute miles, from San Francisco via Honolulu.

Guam is 5,053 nautical miles, 5,818 statute miles, from San Francisco direct.

Guam is 8,022 nautical miles, 9,237 statute miles, from the Panama Canal via Honolulu.

Guam is 3,337 nautical miles, 3,842 statute miles, from Honolulu in a direct line.

Guam is 3,651 nautical miles, 4,204 statute miles, from Honolulu via Midway and Wake Islands.

Guam is 3,080 nautical miles, 3,546 statute miles, from Samoa in a direct line.

Guam is 2,502 nautical miles, 2,881 statute miles, from Midway Island via Wake Island.

Guam is 1,309 nautical miles, 1,533 statute miles, from Wake Island.

Guam is 1,353 nautical miles, 1,557 statute miles, from Yokohama direct.

Guam is 1,501 nautical miles, 1,728 statute miles, from Manila direct.

Guam is 122 nautical miles, 140 statute miles, from Saipan direct.

Guam is 52 nautical miles, 60 statute miles, from Rota direct.

Guam is 458 nautical miles, 527 statute miles, from Yap direct.

Guam is 1,440 nautical miles, 1,658 statute miles, from Nagasaki direct (Japanese naval base).

Guam is 2,585 nautical miles, 2,976 statute miles, from Singapore direct.

Guam is 3,054 nautical miles, 3,516 statute miles, from Sydney, Australia.

Guam is 1,822 nautical miles, 2,098 statute miles, from Hong Kong.

Guam is 1,687 nautical miles, 1,942 statute miles, from Shanghai.

No one will deny that we have a perfect right to fortify Guam. The Washington and London Naval Treaties expired on December 31, 1936, and we are legally free to fortify Guam. But there is more involved here in this initial step than that which we have a legal right to do. It is a question of pursuing a policy which will provide our country with an adequate national defense and at the same time keep us from becoming involved in the tense situation which exists in the Far East and in Europe today.

When Admiral Hepburn appeared before our committee, he was asked by my colleague Colonel MAAS whether he and his board took into consideration the possible international repercussions of the Guam recommendation. The admiral very frankly stated that while they "recognized there might be unfavorable reactions," the "Board could not take that into consideration." As to the possible diplomatic difficulties, the admiral made it clear that they did not consider them at all but felt, to use his own words, "that was for the political powers to decide."

Into a very delicate international situation we are injecting a new factor. In 1932 we withdrew the very, very small force we had at Guam and today, in 1939, when the whole world atmosphere is tense, we propose to start fortifications off the coast of Japan, in line with the recommendations of the board. This move will naturally be interpreted by Japan, as well as by Germany and Italy, who appear to be allied with her, as a step in line with a policy of military and naval intervention by the United States. It may lead to countermeasures by the other powers; and, almost before we realize it, we are deeply involved in the power politics of the Far East and Europe.

There is hardly any question but this initial step for the fortification of the island of Guam, practically next door to Japan, will at least be regarded with suspicion by the Japanese Government. Whatever our motives, they will no doubt look upon it as a threat, just as we would be indignant and view it as a threat for any foreign power to make naval harbor improvements for an air base in the Caribbean Sea.

As Members of Congress, responsible for the policy of this Government, and responsible to 130,000,000 people who desire to live in peace, we cannot entirely ignore these potential international repercussions from the Guam proposal. Rather than lending our moral influence toward international understanding and peace, by taking this step we are adding to the tenseness of the situation and promoting ill will. We are inviting dangers and creating risks. We are taking risks, totally unnecessary, that may readily involve our people in another war.

It certainly cannot be denied that there are hazards and risks in this proposed undertaking in Asiatic waters. And yet we are proposing to take the risk, nonetheless, when the naval board itself, through Admiral Hepburn, made it clear to the Committee on Naval Affairs that neither the harbor improvement at Guam nor the complete fortification of the island was necessary for our national defense.

I call your attention to the testimony to be found on page 41 of the hearings, where our chairman asked Admiral Hepburn this question:

It is your testimony that you consider Guam a necessary link in the defensive system of the country?

That question, it seems to me, is one of the most important questions asked during the entire hearings. It is a question in the mind of every Member of Congress and every citizen. Is Guam necessary for an adequate national defense?

And mark you Admiral Hepburn's reply:

Not essential. I say that I think it would greatly simplify it and the effort we would have to make.

A little later in the committee hearing practically the same question, as to whether the improvements at Guam were necessary for our national defense, was asked of Admiral Hepburn by my able colleague, Congressman JENKS. I will quote from this brief but extremely important testimony itself, to be found on page 54, in order that you may get the true import of the answer:

Mr. JENKS. Yesterday I asked Admiral Leahy whether the proposed improvements at Guam were for commercial purposes or for defense proper, and he said for defense. The chairman asked you this morning if you felt the improvements recommended there were necessary for defense, and I understood you to say that they were not necessary. Did I get you correctly on that?

Admiral HEPBURN. I believe I might have said they were not necessary for defense but they were contributory to defense.

Mr. JENKS. But not necessary.

Admiral HEPBURN. In my opinion, no; they would not be necessary.

And there, Mr. Chairman, is the opinion of the senior member of the naval board itself on the question as to whether these proposed improvements for Guam are necessary for the maintenance of an adequate national defense. At one time he stated, without hesitation, "not essential," and at another time he definitely stated "not necessary."

Are we to hazard international repercussions and to run all the risks of having a naval base in foreign waters when it is admitted by our own naval officers that the item in this bill for Guam is neither essential nor necessary for our national security and safety? I think we might advisedly ask what new, but apparently undisclosed, foreign policy motivates this particular proposal which is admitted to be not necessary for our national defense. I think we might advisedly ask those in charge of the affairs of this Government in the field of foreign relations what policy prompts this particular recommendation for the island of Guam which causes the Navy Department to move our naval defense westward by almost 1,500 miles to the very door of Japan?

Last year when we had the naval expansion bill under consideration, Admiral William D. Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations, appeared before the committee and on January 31, 1938, testified as to the defensive line of the Navy. On page 1948 of the House Naval Affairs Committee hearings on H. R. 9218, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, you find this testimony explaining our naval defensive line in the Pacific Ocean, as well as the Atlantic:

The CHAIRMAN. The defense is based not any farther than the Hawaiian Islands?

Admiral LEAHY. The defensive line of the American Navy at the present time reaches from the Aleutian Islands to the Hawaiian Islands, to Samoa, and to the Canal. There is also in the Atlantic a defensive line that runs from the Canal to the Virgin Islands, and the coast of Maine * * *.

Thirteen months ago our defensive line went no farther west than Wake Island, in the immediate proximity of the Hawaiian Islands. Today, by virtue of this proposal for Guam, it is suggested that we extend this line to Guam, about 1,500 miles westward. There is not one shred of evidence as to why, within the short space of 1 year, it should suddenly become necessary to depart from the long-established naval-defense line. There is not one particle of evidence to show why these naval harbor improvements for Guam, admitted not to be necessary for our national defense, should suddenly become so important as to call for an expenditure of $5,000,000.

There seems to me to be but one logical explanation, and that is that there is slowly being evolved, bit by bit, an altogether new foreign policy for the United States. This proposal for the island of Guam, admitted by the naval officers to be unessential and unnecessary as far as the defense of this hemisphere is concerned, seems to me to indicate that the United States is slowly being led away from its traditional doctrine of nonintervention in the affairs of other nations.

In its place the doctrine of "collective security," in cooperation with Great Britain and France, is being substituted. And it should not be overlooked that in the Far East both Great Britain and France have rather extensive interests.

It is quite impossible to disassociate any scheme of national defense from principles of foreign policy. The one is a corollary to the other. As to what really constitutes our foreign policy today, I am not at all certain. I sincerely want to believe that those at the head of our Government, who are by the Constitution entrusted with the conduct of foreign relations, do not contemplate any radical departures from our traditional policy of no entangling alliances and nonintervention. But, frankly, I am not sure, so much has been said and done in the last 2 years that is inconsistent with our traditional principles. I confess to experiencing the same confusion and uncertainty, the same misgivings and fears as to what appears to be the foreign policy we are pursuing as are being experienced by the great majority of the American people.

On January 4, the day following the opening of this session of Congress, the President delivered his address on the state of the Union. In the course of his remarks he stated:

They—

Referring to the United States and the other democracies of the world—cannot forever let pass without effective protest acts of aggression against sister nations.

With that I am indeed in agreement. It is in keeping with the traditional foreign policy of the people of the United States to register their protests through diplomatic channels against acts of aggression and against violations of treaty obligations. America has always respected the sanctity of treaties and America has always lent its moral support to preserving that sanctity.

But in his address on January 4 the President said more than that. He went on to indicate in what form our protests should be made. He said:

Words may be futile. * * * There are many methods short of war, but stronger and more effective than mere words, of bringing home to aggressor governments the aggregate sentiments of our own people.

What those "methods short of war" are that the President has in mind to employ as "protests" against aggressor nations I do not know. It may be that he spoke of "methods short of war" in his message to Congress with the same thought in mind when, at Chicago on October 5, 1937, he spoke of the democratic nations joining in a "quarantine" of disturbers of the peace. I do not know. At any rate, I think we might well ask ourselves whether or not there is any relationship between "quarantine," "methods short of war," as a statement of foreign policy, and this proposed authorization for the $5,000,000 development of naval facilities on the island of Guam, off the strategic flank of Japan.

If it is intended that there be this radical departure from the traditional foreign policy of the United States, the American people are entitled to know it, in order that they may pass judgment upon it. This is a constitutional democracy. This is the people's Government. And surely we are cognizant of the uncertainties and fears that exist in the minds of our people as to the course their Government is pursuing in foreign relations, lest we should become involved in foreign conflicts through ill-advised meddlings.

To have national safety and security we need a positive reaffirmation, not only in words but also in our acts, of the established principles of American foreign policy as it has evolved over the last 150 years. First, that there will be no entangling alliances, no tacit understandings with any nation, and no interference, by aggression or otherwise, in the affairs of other nations. It is a happy coincidence that tomorrow we commemorate the birthday of George Washington by a reading of his Farewell Address. It was in that address that he uttered a solemn warning to the American people against foreign entanglements.

The second basic principle of our traditional foreign policy which should be reaffirmed in our every act is that our security lies solely in the Western Hemisphere, and we will enforce the Monroe Doctrine against any foreign aggression. The proposal for Guam departs from this principle and moves our defense out of the Western Hemisphere into Japanese waters. Mr. Chairman, we can no better reaffirm our traditional policy of "America for Americans" and safety and security by impregnable defenses solely in the Western Hemisphere than by rejecting this proposal for a naval outpost at Guam.

And, Mr. Chairman, there is a third basic principle in the traditional American foreign policy to which we might well give thought. Until of late it has always been the policy of this peace-loving Nation to make untiring efforts for the promotion of world peace and understandings. Not only do the American people desire to live in peace at home, to be safe and secure, but our people beseech us to do everything humanly possible to keep the European nations from going to war. Not only do they ask us to do nothing that may provoke war: they ask us to exert all our energies to lead the world to a peaceful settlement of differences.

War is not inevitable. There are alternatives for war. There are ways and means to make peaceful settlements of differences. However dark the world situation may appear, there surely can be found a basis for new understandings and agreements. Yet there appears to be no real effort being made to establish a new order of peace.

In fact, the leaders of our own Government have tended to add distrust, hatred, and pettiness in our international relations by reckless and ill-advised remarks. Rather than pursuing a policy of restraint, rather than a policy tending toward the elimination of distrust, rather than seeking to exert our great moral influence for new understandings, we have actually witnessed the leaders of our own Government participate in a campaign of hate and virulence.

Mr. Chairman, it is my sincere conviction that this proposed $5,000,000 authorization in this naval bill for the island of Guam serves only to add to the tenseness of the delicate international situation today. It will add to the growing distrust, suspicion, and hatred. It will be construed by Japan and the world generally, rightly or wrongly, that the United States is preparing to pursue a policy of foreign intervention. It will have international repercussions of far-reaching importance. It is likely to result in counter moves in the Pacific. It is hazardous. It is dangerous.

I intend to support this bill, but I cannot support the $5,000,000 authorization for Guam, which looks to the establishment of an American naval outpost in Asiatic waters. It is not in keeping with our traditional foreign policy, and it has been definitely admitted by the naval officers themselves to be unnecessary for the enforcement of the Monroe Doctrine.

I am prepared to vote millions for defense but not one cent for foreign intervention. The $5,000,000 authorization for Guam, 5,400 miles from our shores, is just such an item which I must oppose in the interest of the security and safety of our people. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DREWRY].

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Chairman, I am going to approach the consideration of this bill in a somewhat different manner from the way in which it has been already discussed. It is not my intention to speak of the condition of the United States Treasury or to go into international affairs or to talk of the prospects of war between this country and any other, but I wish to speak directly to the bill itself and not to go outside of it.

There is much more confusion and misunderstanding with reference to this bill than is warranted by the expressed purposes of the bill. This confusion, I believe, arose from two disturbing factors: First, general world conditions today are such that no man knows what tomorrow may bring forth. Notwithstanding the desire of the peoples of the world for peace, yet the controlling influences in some of the nations apparently seem determined upon warlike demonstrations. At such a time every move is noted with apprehension. Statements of the leaders of all the nations of the world are analyzed studiously and all legislation is carefully studied. It is possible also that in our two-party form of government any party move by one or the other is interpreted as indicating opposition to legislation proposed by the party in power. According to the newspapers, the formation of a committee of the Republican Party of the House to make a special study of the military policies of the country has, in the minds of many, indicated opposition to all legislation by the Military and Naval Affairs Committees. This, of course, is not necessarily the fact, but it has caused confusion with reference to the purposes of this bill.

This legislation was not only supported by the administration but it has the approval of the Naval Affairs Committee, which has considered it for several weeks. I have been a member of the Naval Affairs Committee for many years and have served on that committee when Republican administrations were in power, as well as under Democratic administrations. In all that time I have never known any partisan strife within the committee on the question of the development of our Navy or the naval defenses. I would like to stop for a moment in passing to pay a tribute to that grand old man of the Republican Party, Mr. Butler, who was for many years chairman of the committee. I do not believe he ever let partisan thought affect his decisions with reference to the needs of the Navy or in studying the defense of his country. He was able and patriotic and had a splendid grasp of the Navy's affairs, and I found myself generally in accord with his views. I also served under Mr. Britton, who was as patriotic as Mr. Butler, and who actively and energetically did much toward building up the United States Navy. The eight Republicans on the committee at the present time are a fine body of men and they have patiently sat through the hearings and have worked with but one thought in mind, namely, the building of a navy that will be adequate for the defense of the country. Keeping these things in mind, it will be noted that this bill was reported favorably by a large majority of the members of the committee, including Democrats and Republicans. I bring this up to show the House that there is no partisanship in the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, and no partisanship has been brought into this question. The committee has sat as a body of Americans, all earnestly and patriotically striving to do what is best for the Navy and the country. There have been differences of opinion, of course, but those differences of opinion have been, I feel confident, conscientiously advanced by those who dissented from the views of the majority of the committee.

Making allowance for the confusion that has existed by reason of the factors above noted, I would like to analyze briefly the bill itself.

The purposes of the bill are set forth in the bill. It does not say anything about fortifying anywhere, any place. There is nothing about fortification in the bill. It reads:

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to establish, develop, or increase naval aviation facilities.

That is the purpose of the bill.

Now, it seems to me if we can show to you, the Naval Affairs Committee, that we are following the purposes of this bill, then the bill will meet with your approval, regardless of what may be in the minds of some that are fearful or apprehensive of something that may happen in the future.

It carries an appropriation of $53,800,000, and is directed solely to the construction of buildings and accessories in certain localities within the United States and its outlying possessions. I wish you particularly to note two things: First, that there is nothing warlike and nothing that could be construed as a warlike demonstration in any phase of the bill before you. It is simply to augment existing facilities in order to support the fleet, and this proposed development constitutes the minimum required for such support, according to the naval experts. Secondly, I feel that there should be particularly stressed the fact that we are developing our own bases on our own land for purposes of increasing our own naval facilities, and that there is no reason why we should feel called upon to consider any expressed interference on the part of any other nation in such development.

There is no need for us to ask permission of any other nation and no reason why we should get the consent of any other nation to develop our own naval facilities any more than that other nations should ask our consent in developing their naval facilities.

The United States is not a predatory Nation. We have never waged a war of aggression and I hope never will. We do not want any territory belonging to any other nation, and that has been the announced policy of this country for 150 years. Every war we have ever been engaged in has been in the defense of our people and their right of freedom throughout the world. In furtherance of this policy, we are developing our own property to ensure that freedom if any other nation should attempt to take it from us. The expenditure of the money involved in this development is to insure to the people of the country that it is adequately prepared to defend them against any aggressive forces.

This development becomes necessary at this time because our fleet has been increased, and it is essential that bases be created in order that the fleet may have adequate facilities for its operation in peacetime or in war. It would be a foolish policy to increase the fleet and then not give it facilities for its upkeep and maintenance. Some of the bases mentioned in this bill should have been developed years ago, but our policy has been to hold down the expense to a minimum, and most of the development up to this time has been in the enlarging of the fleet itself. Turn back the pages of our naval history and note that wonderful gesture of the United States at the Washington conference, when we gave up our naval superiority at that time in the hope that other nations would do the same and would join us in cutting down the tremendous cost of armaments throughout the world. At that time, by treaty, we agreed to a 5-5-3 ratio of battle-ships and aircraft carriers with Great Britain and Japan, and at the London Conference in later years, continued to make treaties for further limitation. Hoping that the other nations would follow our example, we neglected the building up of our fleet even to the strength permitted by the treaties. The other nations, however, did not follow our example, and we found ourselves upon the expiration of the treaties in a serious position. Then we began increasing our naval strength and we are still doing it, and I hope we will continue to do it until we feel that we are fully prepared to defend our people and our country. Even now, although the treaties have expired, we are only attempting to bring our fleet up to the strength which was agreed upon in the treaties, as if the treaties were still in existence. Surely no one, in the face of these facts, can point to the United States as being a disturbing factor in the peace of the world, and the inspired propaganda emanating from some countries against us should not blind our people to our own needs and the necessity for our own military preparedness.

There are 15 locations mentioned in this bill, of which, first, 5 are in the continental limits of the United States.

(1) Philadelphia, to provide for an aeronautical laboratory.

(2) Hampton Roads, to provide more land for the expansion of the present base on the Atlantic coast.

(3) Tongue Point, for the further development of that base on the Pacific coast.

(4) Pensacola, Fla., for the further development of aviation training facilities.

(5) Corpus Christi on the Gulf of Mexico, for which no money is provided, as the land has been given by that community.

Second, there are five localities where there are already some existing facilities in the outlying possessions—two in the Hawaiian Islands—two in Alaska, and one in Puerto Rico.

Third, there are five island possessions—small islands west and south of the Panama Canal and Honolulu, for the better development of the defense of the Canal and Hawaii, or, in other words, for the better defense of the United States. These include small islands where dredging and building construction will be the main work. Again let me repeat that all of these bases are necessary because the expansion of the fleet has necessitated an increase in training-station facilities, industrial facilities at navy yards, and in all other branches of naval shore establishments. "The rapid expansion of shore facilities is a condition precedent to expansion of the forces afloat." I am quoting Admiral Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations, in his letter to the House of Representatives transmitting the draft of this proposed bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Chairman, the last one of these five islands is Guam, which, strange to say, seems to be the only location that has aroused antagonism to any extent. The amount involved is only $5,000,000 out of a $53,000,000 authorization. The work to be done consists merely in the dredging of the harbor in order that some of the obstructions in the harbor may be removed, thereby lessening the danger to ships and to airplanes that might alight thereon. There is not one word in this bill—it may be in the minds of some people, but there is not one word in this bill—that in any way deals with fortification of the island of Guam.

Breakwater.....	$2,200,000
Dredging outer harbor mooring area.....	800,000
Dredging inner lagoon and connecting channel.....	1,070,000
Dike.....	120,000
Pier.....	120,000
Grading filled area.....	70,000
Seaplane ramps.....	120,000
Seaplane parking area.....	120,000
Sea wall.....	90,000
Gasoline storage.....	160,000
Power service.....	30,000
Water supply.....	50,000
Roads and walks.....	20,000
Small boat pier and boathouse.....	15,000
Equipment and storage shed.....	15,000
Total.....	5,000,000

I confess, Mr. Chairman, that I cannot get very much excited about this bill. It has been repeatedly stated that there is no intention at the present time of fortifying this island. There is nothing in the bill itself to show any intention of fortification. The President of the United States has been put on record as having stated there was no intention in his mind to ask for the fortification of it. The leading experts of the Navy and those in charge of naval operations have also stated there is no intention in their minds of fortifying the island.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. DREWRY. I cannot yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I just want to correct an error.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. DREWRY. Certainly all of that would indicate that no fortification could be done, especially with such a small sum of money. There is nothing to indicate it. The confusion has been created by those who say that this expenditure of $5,000,000 for the development of this harbor means eventually a large amount of money to be spent for fortification.

The only thing before this House is the question of whether we shall spend this $5,000,000 for the purpose outlined in the bill. You cannot go forward into the future maybe 50 years and say that 50 years from now there may not be some kind of fortification. I do not know whether it will ever be fortified, but I feel that the President of the United States when he says there is no intention of fortifying the island means what he says; and I hope the time will never come when I do not believe any President of this country who makes a statement affecting the country's welfare.

So I cannot get very much excited about this cry of fortification.

It looks like a vain and futile thing to tilt against such a windmill. My view of it may not be worth very much to the House, but I think that as long as the island is a possession of the United States that we have the right to develop it as we see fit; that it is nobody's business but ours; that we are now developing it in a way to make the harbor safe for our airplanes and ships that enter therein, and that if in the future we desire to make other use of it Members of this House at that time will be fully apprised of what is intended to be done and they in their wisdom can then make a decision as to its fortification. At the present time the only decision necessary for you to make with reference to Guam is whether you wish to remove obstructions from the harbor for the better safety of our ships and airplanes.

There is no reason that I can see why there should be any objection on the part of Congress to the development of our naval facilities for the care and maintenance of our fleet as proposed in this bill. There is nothing in this bill that is provocative of war nor a warlike gesture. If anything, it is a gesture to peace, not war; for even the craziest aggressor would hesitate to attack us if he knew we were fully prepared to defend ourselves. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS].

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill to increase our naval aviation strength, our first line of defense, excepting that item which provides additional naval defense facilities for the island of Guam.

I concede that in a normal world the road where great armaments pass is not the ideal way to peace. However, we do not find a normal world around us. Nor in some quarters do we find a peace-loving world. We must acknowledge here that some of the great nations of the earth today know no other language but one of force, acknowledge no instrumentality but force in furthering national aspirations, accept and listen to no reasoning from others unless it be backed by power and force. Convinced of this world condition, I would vote, generally speaking, for a bill increasing our Navy defense facilities to a far greater extent than the bill here provides for. I believe in a broad and elastic interpretation of the term "national defense." I have never subscribed to the doctrine that we should circumscribe the activities of our Army, our Navy, or our air forces by outlining a zone beyond which these branches of our Government could not go if their commanders deemed it wise, in time of war or threat of war, to defend our country on far-flung lines. The Navy is our first line of defense and air strength is the right arm of the Navy.

Should war ever again come to us or should it ever be necessary for us to protect the shores of the United States by armed force or to protect the interest of the United States and its possessions anywhere, a sound national defense policy would require our naval forces to strike the enemy wherever strategically wise. It is an old and true axiom of war that "offense is often the best defense." If this country were in danger of invasion by a foreign power, the best defense would be to destroy the instrument of invasion wherever it can be reached, and that could only be done by our Navy. This line of action has been followed by our naval forces in every defensive war we have ever waged. John Paul Jones followed it; Decatur followed it; and Dewey followed it. It is folly to contend, as some have, that in time of defensive war we should endanger our national existence by dividing our defense forces over thousands and thousands of seacoast miles with a preponderance of strength nowhere—waiting for the enemy to strike.

I have ventured my conception of true national defense because I would not have it thought here that my objection to the fortification of Guam is based on the premise that we have no right to spend millions of dollars to build defense lines even that far from home, should it be for the best interest of our country to do so.

It is true that gentlemen of the Naval Affairs Committee contend that the Guam provision is only a harmless, nonmilitary item to improve normal harbor facilities for handling commercial aviation at one of our possessions. I shall not take the time to argue at length to the contrary. The fact that the item comes to us as part of a naval defense measure rather than through usual channels, and that expert testimony before the committee practically acknowledges this to be the first step in a plan to fortify Guam, disposes of that camouflage.

In a bill calling for so many millions of dollars for naval defense the five millions involved in the Guam naval aviation facilities proposal matters little, so far as the money is concerned. It, however, matters much should we realize that this authorization is only the entering wedge and the forerunner of millions and millions of other dollars to be asked of us in the years to come; and for what? To fortify a tiny island, 3,337 miles from our nearest naval base, making it impossible to defend it against an enemy in the East—to aggravate Japan—to satisfy Great Britain.

Now, let us look at the situation of Guam in relation to the United States. The Hawaiian Islands are 2,081 miles west of the United States. Guam is 3,337 miles beyond Hawaii, making Guam 5,428 miles from the United States. Let us consider this tiny island from the standpoint of military value to the United States in case of war with an eastern power. No high naval officer in the United States has contended that this island can be defended, even should we spend a hundred million dollars to strengthen it, should we get into a war with Japan, for instance. It is too far from any other American supply base.

Its defense in the name of national pride would call for sacrifices far out of line with the value of the island to us either in war or peacetime. The naval experts admit that the island could be defended only for a short time at best. Rear Admiral Arthur B. Cook, Chief, Bureau of Aeronautics, is reported to have testified to the committee that the proposed $5,000,000 harbor development at Guam "will give the Navy an advanced scouting base to give the United States Fleet warning of an attack from Asia." Attacks from whom? Certainly not Great Britain and her possessions in that part of the world. There is no danger of Great Britain waging war against us. There is danger that she will drag us in as her ally should she have to fight. Is it Japan, the admiral fears? If so, he should know that Japan proper lies far to the north of Guam and any line of attack on the United States from that nation would probably be on a line 2,000 miles to the north of Guam and not through the many small Japanese-controlled islands to the south of Guam. There is no danger of attack from an Asiatic power by way of Guam.

Rear Admiral Moreell, Chief Civil Engineer of the Navy, is reported to have testified at the hearings that legislation was not actually necessary for the harbor improvements at Guam as the work could be carried on under general law. He declared that specific authority was asked as the "Navy decided to lay its cards on the table as to Guam." Now, why is this specific authority requested of Congress? Since when did high officials of the Navy Department begin the policy of requesting the advice of Congress on a matter of practical naval strategy when they already have authority by law to decide the question? Is it that Admiral Moreell has grave doubts himself as to the wisdom of the proposed improvements at Guam and that he realizes that the fortification of Guam will bring about a distinct change in the defense policies of the United States Navy, as well as probable changes in the foreign policy of this country.

The admiral as an engineer evidently knows that it is a fundamental of sound defense in wartime not to attempt to defend a vulnerable salient of defense lines when that salient is of no value tactically or otherwise. Guam forms such a salient among our possessions in the Pacific. When the Philippines are given their independence within a few years Guam will be our furthestmost outpost there. The only justification offered for spending this money on Guam, by the evidence, is that a dozen or two planes could be kept there for scouting purposes for a few days after declaration of war and possibly prevent the loss of a few cruisers.

Now, let us consider the plight of the Philippines in this Guam defense scheme. These islands lie 1,501 miles west of Guam. Under the act of 1934 independence will be granted to the Philippines in 1944. We had two reasons for guaranteeing independence to these people of these islands. First, we were morally obligated to do so. Second, we knew the islands could not be defended successfully by us in case of war with a strong power in the Far East. Fortification of Guam as a naval or air base can mean only one thing as to the Philippines, and that is repeal, sooner or later, of the Philippine independence law. Guam cannot stand alone as an American possession in that part of the Pacific. Doubt as to our ability to defend the Philippines against Japan, with the natural defense advantages of these islands, should convince that we could not defend Guam. It is conceivable that we might lose hundreds of millions of dollars in defense equipment and thousands of lives in the name of national pride and honor should we embark on a course leading toward fortification of this island. Guam is of value to us only as an air station in time of peace. In time of war with a great power in the east, that value would cease to exist.

Ladies and gentlemen, it behooves us before voting for the first step leading toward the fortification of Guam to look around us for the source of the movement. As for myself, I can see the fine hand of Great Britain behind the scene. Britain knows there is no danger of war between that great kingdom and the United States—we have too much in common. Britain knows that we want none of her great possessions to the south of Guam. Britain realizes that on account of Japanese encroachment in southern China, and her resulting strained relations with that country, it would be to Britain's advantage for the United States to build a screen of fortifications between Japan and Australia, New Zealand, Singapore, and her other island possessions to the south.

But, mark you, should warlike activities on our part in that sphere of the world bring on trouble with Japan, Britain would run out on us, as she did when a previous administration here sought her hand in protesting against the rape of northern China by Japan—unless it were for the selfish interest of Britain to act otherwise. The whole history of Great Britain teaches us that Britain always acts, in war and in peace, for Britain first and the welfare of the world afterward. The British are great at persuading us to pull chestnuts out of the fire for them. I admire their astuteness along this line. If we fall for their subtle influence in this Guam proposal they are not to be condemned—but we are certainly not to be praised.

Let me say here, lest I be misunderstood, I admire the British people, I admire their democratic institutions, I admire their contributions to civilization, I admire their tenacity of purpose—I do not hesitate even to go so far as to say that, second to this great country, I would rather live under British laws and in the British atmosphere than elsewhere. I admit that should we be ever again drawn into another world war, and God forbid, we would inevitably be lined up with the democracies, of which England is one. But I protest against the fatalistic un-American doctrine now being built up by British influence and through British inspired propaganda, particularly among our high naval officials, that America must fight on Britain's side in any war in which that empire may become involved. We already hear more agitation in this country for the defense of Great Britain than is heard in British dominions. It is incumbent on Britain and British possessions to make that empire their first line of defense. They have the wealth, the resources, and the manpower to defend themselves.

It behooves the British Empire, which owns or controls one-fourth of the land upon the face of the earth and 40 percent of the basic raw materials of the earth, whose flag flies over 500,000,000 people, to defend her own.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is supposed to be a United States defense measure, not a defensive alliance with Great Britain or any other foreign power. This bill pretends to be in accord with the philosophy of the Monroe Doctrine in the Western Hemisphere, but with the Guam provision in it, it advertises to the world that we wish to become a military power in the East. It proposes to prepare our Navy only for defense but, with the Guam provision in it, it suggests imperialistic designs on our part. It proposes to improve facilities at Guam as a defense measure, but at the same time establishes a salient in our defense line that cannot be defended, when considered from purely American defense standpoint.

The proposal should be stricken from the bill and at the proper time I hope to have the privilege of presenting an amendment to that effect. [Applause.]

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] such time as he may desire.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in dealing with this proposed $5,000,000 expenditure on the island of Guam, we are dealing with a fundamental question of our friendly relations with the Japanese nation. In the present state of world affairs, events and incidents assume exaggerated and distorted proportions.

Mr. Chairman, the world is jittery. The fear of war is everywhere. Suspicions between nations are rampant. Rivalries are intense. Under such conditions as these an action, an event, or even an incident which at another time might be of small consequence or importance may at this time be sufficient to frighten some nation into an overt move that may lead to another world war.

The state of international affairs today is much like the state of mind of a group of children on Hallowe'en when the talk is all of ghosts and goblins. At a certain point of psychological strain, under such conditions, it merely requires that someone cry "ghost" to produce panic. This state of mind, even in the United States, was proved by a recent radio broadcast by a youthful actor which threw the whole eastern seaboard into a welter of fear and panic, simply because the purely fictional broadcast was so realistic that hundreds of thousands of people were frightened half out of their wits by the reported attack by men from Mars.

It is in that category of alarming and dangerous developments that this project for the island of Guam falls. In considering this proposition I think we would do well to glance briefly at the historical background and see, if we can, what impression such a move would produce on Japan.

Europe is already highly nervous over our policy of selling our most modern airplanes to England and France. The latest statement by the President that he may have to curtail his pleasure jaunt in the Caribbean because of the seriousness of advices he has received from Europe concerning the possibility of new aggressions, or a war, has produced tremors throughout the length and breadth of Europe. We, in this country, are without any knowledge of the reasons prompting this alarming statement by Mr. Roosevelt. Reports from Europe since the President made his statement indicate that they, too, are in the dark as to what could have prompted such a startling declaration on the part of our Chief Executive.

I cite this incident to show the danger of unwise talk or unwise acts at a time like this.

It seems to me that we can learn much by a brief review of the relations between this country and Japan over the past several years.

For some 15 years prior to the Washington conference of 1921-22 the relations between this country and Japan were undergoing, from time to time, periodic strains. There was a good deal of anti-Japanese agitation in California. The immigration question irritated Japan. Commercial rivalry between America and Japan in Manchuria was another source of irritation to both nations. Japanese threats against the open-door policy in China provided a vast amount of material for friction, which occasionally broke out into serious controversies. Writing on this subject in his Navies and Nations, 1927, page 152, Hector C. Bywater, the British naval expert, quoted Franklin D. Roosevelt as saying:

Outside the executive departments at Washington it has never been known in this country that during 10 nervous days in the early summer of 1908 the United States hovered on the edge of an ultimatum from Japan.

Before and after the World War there was much saber rattling, jingoistic threatening, and alarmist talk of war with Japan. The Magdalena Bay incident of 1911-12 created widespread fears in this country of an intended Japanese penetration into Lower California. The presence of Japanese warships in Turtle Bay, in the same region, at the time of Japan's presentation of the 21 demands upon China in 1915, was viewed as a highly suspicious circumstance in this country. After the World War Japanese-American relations were kept at high tension by controversies over Shantung and other Pacific questions.

Our distrust of Japan was marked in 1919 by the organization of a Pacific fleet made up of the strongest squadrons of the United States Navy, and by preparations to develop a great naval fortress at Hawaii. Japan reacted to these moves by adopting in 1920 a naval building program designed to give her a fleet equal or superior in strength to that of the United States. Bywater, whom I quoted a moment ago, regarded war between this country and Japan as "more imminent in 1921 than was generally realized."

This writer outlined many serious differences which existed between the United States and Japan on various questions, including the treatment of Japanese nationals in the United States, the status of certain former German-owned islands in the Pacific, the open door in China, and, most importantly, the proposed development of naval bases in the western area of the Pacific Ocean. Japan all this time was trying desperately to keep pace with our naval expansion and was struggling grimly under the heavy financial burden which this policy involved. Reserves of coal and oil fuel were being accumulated at naval ports. Shipyards and munition plants were being expanded by aid of Government subsidies. The Japanese, as Bywater pointed out, were going to modernize their coast defense system and fortify new bases at outlying islands.

The only conclusion we can reach, Mr. Chairman, from these extensive preparations is that Japan anticipated war with us in the then near future. This British naval authority expresses his belief that Japan would have made the beginning of work on new American bases at Manila and Guam a cause for war. Many other observers who were in the Far East at that time believed the same thing.

It was while this state of mutual suspicion, affecting Great Britain as well as the United States and Japan, existed that the Washington Conference assembled in November 1921.

At that conference a singular and significant situation developed. The plan for drastic reduction and limitation of naval strength proposed to the conference by Secretary of State Charles Evans Hughes embraced only ships. The Japanese delegation instantly brought up the question of naval bases. They argued that bases were as necessary to naval power as ships and insisted that bases should also be restricted. The late Baron Kato, principal Japanese delegate, took the attitude that unless such restrictions of bases were applied in the Pacific, Japan could not accept any proposed reduction of her naval forces. It is now known that when Japan raised the question of bases, her delegates had specifically in mind the projected American bases at Guam and Manila. It has since been said, unofficially, that the Japanese demand for neutralization of these and other Pacific Fleet harbors met with such resistance from the American naval experts that a deadlock almost resulted. Rather than have the conference fail, the United States yielded on the question of Pacific bases. Japan then consented to limit her strength in capital ships to 60 percent of that of the United States and Great Britain.

The clause covering naval bases was made a part of the treaty for limitation of naval armaments signed on February 26, 1922. Under article XIX of the agreement, the United States, the British Empire, and Japan agreed to maintain the status quo at the time of the signing of the treaty, so far as fortifications and naval bases in certain areas were concerned. This status quo was defined as meaning that no new fortifications or naval bases would be established in certain territories and possessions specified in the agreement; that no efforts would be made to increase the existing naval facilities for repair and maintenance of naval forces; and that no increase would be made in the coast defenses of those territories and possessions.

I will not take the time now to go into a description of those areas, but suffice it to say the United States retained freedom of action at Hawaii but abandoned the right to build up defenses in the Philippines, Guam, and the Aleutian Islands. Singapore, where Britain later developed a great naval base, was just west of the barred zone. The Bonin Islands, 800 miles north of Guam, did lie within the areas embraced in the treaty, but Japan had already completed certain fortifications there before the Washington Conference convened.

No reference was made in article XIX to the former German islands in the Pacific which were assigned to Japan under a League of Nations mandate in 1920.

Elimination of the naval rivalry, together with the settlement of far eastern political questions through the signing of the Washington Armament Limitation Treaty and the Nine Power Treaty, brought an end to the Japanese war scare in the United States. Except for an incident concerning immigration in 1924, the relations between our Nation and Japan were on a friendly basis until Japan began her offensive on the mainland of Asia in 1931. Her action was in disregard of the Nine Power Treaty and upset the balance in Pacific affairs that had been obtained. The failure subsequently to renew the naval treaty restored the old situation existing before the Washington Conference. Our relations with Japan became seriously disturbed as Japan moved to establish control over China. There the situation stands today.

Mr. Chairman, we must not forget that Great Britain has a very keen interest in this whole question, and any fortification of the island of Guam may mean as much to the British as it does to us. It will be recalled that after attempts to bring about a new naval limitation treaty failed because of Japan's determination to have parity with the United States and Great Britain the British Government showed clearly its interest in restricting the southward extension of Japan's naval power. The British sounded out both Washington and Tokyo on a proposal to retain the fortification agreement regardless of the expiration of the other provisions of the Washington Treaty. Neither the United States nor Japan would agree to this. It is clear from certain expressions by leading Japanese that the Japanese Government was not at that time disturbed by any prospects of new foreign bases in the western Pacific. Admiral Nomura, a member of the Japanese delegation at the Washington Conference, is said to have written, in January 1935, that—

World conditions being what they are, I personally cannot consider it very probable that any power would proceed today to build up a huge base in the Orient.

Nomura observed at that time that the United States, since her adoption of the Monroe Doctrine, had made known plainly to all the world that she objects to the establishment of new military or naval bases by foreign powers in her proximity and desires that those already in existence should be limited or reduced.

It was clear that Nomura did not consider it within the bounds of reason that the United States would attempt to contest the balance of power with Japan in her own back yard by constructing huge military establishments, even though she had the right to do so.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with this background, it is not difficult for us today to see that Japan would regard as an unfriendly move the establishment of a great American naval base at Guam. The island of Guam lies almost in the center of the Japanese mandate area. If we do begin to fortify Guam and set up a great base there, we must expect that the Japanese will meet what they would consider a threat by the construction of Japanese defenses in the mandated islands, notwithstanding any treaty commitments to the contrary.

Japan has made it clear that she has no intention of relinquishing these mandated islands, although she resigned from the League of Nations in 1935 and refused to attend the last meeting of the Mandates Commission in November 1938.

Should this situation develop in the way I have outlined, we would at once find ourselves in a nerve-straining race for naval rivalry practically at Japan's back door. Out of such situations grow war.

During the time since the Washington conference we have built up a great naval base at San Diego. It has become the principal operating base for the Navy on the west coast. We have improved the older bases in San Francisco Bay and Puget Sound. Great developments have been carried out at Pearl Harbor in Hawaii, where we have expended approximately $130,000,000 since 1920. We now have several major air bases on the Pacific coast.

The program recommended by Admiral Hepburn provides for 25 naval air bases, 15 of which would be in the Pacific area.

The creation of the proposed air bases, as I understand it, under the Hepburn plan, would establish an American defense line in the Pacific extending in a wide arc from the Aleutian Islands, 2,000 miles north of Hawaii, through Wake Island, 2,000 miles west of Hawaii, to Palmyra Island, 1,000 miles south of Hawaii.

If a base were set up on the Samoa Island, the line would be carried another 1,000 miles south of Hawaii.

The naval experts say that the Wake Island project would make possible defense operations 2,000 miles west of Hawaii. Now, Mr. Chairman, the island of Guam lies still 1,000 miles farther west and is only 1,500 miles from Manila, 1,400 miles from Yokohama, and 800 miles from the Bonin Islands.

The Hepburn Board, in describing the strategic possibilities of Guam, said:

The island is well adapted to the maintenance of an air force equal or superior to any similar hostile force that could be assembled in a radius of twelve hundred miles.

Its natural facilities for development of a submarine base are excellent.

Even without command of the sea extending westward of Midway, the air and submarine strength of the island could be reinforced.

The island could only be reduced or occupied by an enemy through landing operations supported by naval surface operations on a large scale. Hostile air attack alone could produce no decisive effect, and against defenses of the character mentioned (antiaircraft and coast defenses) would be likely to incur heavy and unrequited losses.

So long as Guam existed as a strong air and submarine base, hostile operations against the Philippines would be a precarious undertaking.

The sum of $5,000,000, which we are asked to authorize for the work at Guam, would be expended, we are told, over the next 3 years for harbor dredging, construction of a breakwater, building of hangars, shops, and barracks.

Admiral Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations, has testified that the construction of the air and submarine base recommended by the Hepburn Board would cost $80,000,000. Admiral Hepburn has said the conversion of Guam into an advance fleet base would cost $150,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us look this situation squarely in the face. The establishment of any great naval base on the island of Guam would constitute a direct and continuous threat to Japan. If the $5,000,000 we are asked to expend on the island of Guam will not accomplish anything in the way of its fortification, is it worth the danger we would incur of arousing new hatreds and suspicions in Japan which might impel her to begin the construction of fortifications in the mandated islands, which would, in turn, compel us to begin immediately the construction of a $150,000,000 fortification on the island of Guam, together with other expensive fortifications and bases in the Philippine Islands?

We might just as well have some plain talk about this matter now. This whole question hinges on whether or not we intend to keep the Philippine Islands as a Territorial possession or a protectorate, and whether or not we intend to try to put ourselves in a position of defending those islands against an attack by the Japanese if war between the United States and Japan should ensue.

We are approaching this whole question along dangerous lines. We are going about this whole thing in a way to bring about grave misunderstandings and to give Japan a justified suspicion of our future intentions toward her.

Japan has argued, and not without logic, that our Monroe Doctrine is the very basis for her desire to hold any foreign powers away from her shores. Certainly we cannot argue that the zone of the Monroe Doctrine extends to the islands of Guam and the Philippines.

I have no more sympathy with the Japanese invasion of China than anybody else in this House. But so far as that question is concerned, Japan has made clear her intentions of controlling China; and if we object to that, if we do not want the open door slammed in our face, then, Mr. Chairman, we can prepare to go to war, because that is what we will have to do. If, on the other hand, the American people do not want to go to war over the Japanese invasion of China and if, as I believe they do, our people want to stay at home and mind their own business as long as possible, then we must consider well what it will mean if we embark on a policy of spending money on the island of Guam or in the Philippines, no matter whether we use the excuse of civil aviation or not.

Now, what are we going to do with the Philippine Islands? Are we going to retain them as a Territorial possession and undo the autonomy that has already been granted them? Or are we going to exercise a protectorate over those islands far into the future? If we are going to exercise such a protectorate, do we intend to prepare to defend them against any assault by Japan? If we do, we can prepare to spend plenty of money in fortifications and naval bases, provided Japan is not frightened into striking before we can establish such fortifications and bases.

We should decide all of these questions before we spend $5,000,000 to begin what actually will be improvements on the island of Guam that would have some military significance.

If we are ready to arouse these suspicions in Japan, if we are ready perhaps to frighten Japan into a race in naval bases in the area of the mandated islands, if we are ready to undertake the protection of the Philippine Islands—which some of our military and naval authorities believe we could not protect for a month without enormous expense and far-flung naval operations—then go ahead and spend this money on the island of Guam. If we are not ready to incur those risks, then, whether Great Britain desires it or does not desire it, we ought not to spend this money on the island of Guam.

As a military improvement, or a naval advantage, the spending of $5,000,000 at Guam is meaningless. As a gesture, looking at it from the Japanese viewpoint, it is highly dangerous.

I, for one, am not ready to take the risks, and I think this proposal should be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WHITTINGTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4278) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DISNEY (at the request of Mr. BOREN), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. MOUTON (at the request of Mr. DEROUEN), for 10 days, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan (at the request of Mr. MAPES), for 1 day, on account of illness.

To Mr. DIES (at the request of Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON), indefinitely, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by printing one of my own speeches delivered on the floor of the House in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the bill now pending before the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD]?

There was no objection.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 303. An act for the relief of the Ocilla Star; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 316. An act to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to reappoint David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner as members of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 463. An act for the relief of the Fitzgerald Leader; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 745. An act for the relief of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1315. An act for the relief of the Corbitt Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, February 22, 1939, at 11 o'clock a. m.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Public hearings will continue Wednesday morning, February 22, 1939, at 10 a. m., on social-security legislation, in the Ways and Means Committee room in the New House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m. Wednesday, February 22, 1939. Business to be considered: Continuation of hearing on H. R. 2531—transportation bill.

COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION

There will be a meeting of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation at 10:30 a. m., Wednesday, February 22, 1939.

COMMITTEE ON LABOR

The Committee on Labor will hold a hearing in room 429, House Office Building, at 10:30 a. m., Thursday, February 23, 1939, on H. R. 2990, a bill to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1937, as amended.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

There will be a hearing before the Special Subcommittee on Bankruptcy and Reorganization of the Committee on the Judiciary at 10 a. m. Wednesday, March 1, 1939, on the bill (H. R. 3704) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; room 346, House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m. Wednesday, February 22, 1939, on the bill (H. R. 3576) to make effective the provisions of the Officers' Competency Certificates Convention, 1936.

It is contemplated that the hearing on Wednesday, February 22, 1939, on H. R. 3576 will deal particularly with legislation necessary to make effective the provisions of the treaty and problems arising in connection with the provisions of the treaty.

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m., on the bills and dates listed below:

Tuesday, March 14, 1939:

H. R. 180, H. R. 202, construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 201, additional facilities for Panama Canal; H. R. 2667, construction of a Mexican Canal.

In listing the bills to be heard on March 14, 1939, House Joint Resolution 112 (TINKHAM), to create a commission to study and report on the feasibility of constructing the Mexican Canal, was inadvertently omitted from the notice.

This is to advise all interested parties that House Joint Resolution 112 will be considered at that time with the following bills: H. R. 180 (IZAC), relative to the construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 202 (BLAND), relative to the construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 201 (BLAND), need for additional lock facilities at Panama; H. R. 2667 (TINKHAM), relative to the construction of a Mexican Canal.

Tuesday, March 21, 1939:

H. R. 137, H. R. 980, H. R. 1674, relating to annuities for Panama Canal construction force.

Thursday, March 23, 1939:

H. R. 139, H. R. 141, H. R. 142, H. R. 1819, miscellaneous Panama Canal bills.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

457. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 23, 1939, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and illustrations, on a preliminary examination and survey of the Miami and Erie Canal, Ohio, including a branch canal connecting the Miami and Erie Canal with Lake Michigan, and such other routes between Lake Erie and the Ohio River as may be considered practicable by the Chief of Engineers, with a view to securing a channel 12 feet in depth with suitable widths, or such other dimensions as may be considered practicable, including any recommendation for cooperation on the part of local interests, and waterway from a point at or near Erie Harbor, Pa., by way of French Creek and the Allegheny River, to the Ohio River, authorized by the River and Harbor Acts approved March 2, 1919, and September 22, 1922 (H. Doc. No. 178); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with 60 illustrations.

458. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, recommending the enactment of legislation to authorize the delegation of certain authority within the Department; to the Committee on Agriculture.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. MAY: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 3134. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the temporary detail of United States employees, possessing special qualifications, to governments of American republics and the Philippines, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1933; without amendment (Rept. No. 80). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RANDOLPH: Committee on the District of Columbia. S. 494. An act to name the bridge to be erected over the Anacostia River in the District of Columbia after the late "March King," John Philip Sousa, composer of the Stars and Stripes Forever; without amendment (Rept. No. 81). Referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 649) granting a pension to Charles E. King; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 650) granting a pension to John Powell; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 672) granting a pension to Jesse F. Crawford; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURDICK:

H. R. 4361. A bill to prevent the use of the words "U. S.," "United States," or either of them, in trade names or private business; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CANNON of Florida:

H. R. 4362. A bill providing for an examination and survey of channel and harbor at Everglades, Collier County, Fla.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. COX:

H. R. 4363. A bill to amend section 13 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, approved June 25, 1938; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. DARDEN:

H. R. 4364. A bill to extend the time for filing claims for refunds of amounts collected under the Agricultural Adjustment Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

H. R. 4365. A bill for adjustment of compensation of civilian apprentices employed in navy yards and naval stations of the United States and its possessions from July 1, 1932, to June 30, 1934; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. THOMAS F. FORD:

H. R. 4366. A bill to authorize the payment of additional compensation to special assistants to the Attorney General in the case of the United States against Doheny executors; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HEALEY:

H. R. 4367. A bill to protect American and Philippine labor and to preserve an essential industry, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON:

H. R. 4368. A bill to provide for the use of net weights in interstate and foreign commerce transactions in cotton, to provide for the standardization of bale covering for cotton, for the purpose of requiring the use of a domestic product, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. LESINSKI:

H. R. 4369. A bill for the admission to citizenship of aliens who came into this country prior to February 5, 1917; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. KELLER:

H. R. 4370. A bill authorizing the city of Chester, Ill., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Chester, Ill.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MOTT:

H. R. 4371. A bill relating to the surtax on undistributed profits with respect to certain cooperative associations for the taxable years 1936, 1937, and 1938; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MURDOCK of Utah:

H. R. 4372. A bill to provide for the punishment of persons transporting stolen animals in interstate commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PACE:

H. R. 4373. A bill to provide for the national defense by acquiring stocks of strategic and critical raw materials, concentrates, and alloys essential to the needs of industry for the manufacture of supplies for the military forces and the civilian population in time of a national emergency, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHELCHER:

H. R. 4374. A bill to reimburse the National Guard of the State of Georgia for the loss of certain land formerly used as a rifle range and camp, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GEARHART:

H. R. 4375. A bill to amend section 116 of the Internal Revenue Code; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ALLEN of Illinois:

H. R. 4376. A bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act by defining the term "agricultural laborer"; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. SHAFER of Michigan:

H. R. 4377. A bill to provide that the Government shall supply uniforms to all employees who are required to wear them while performing their official duties; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. PACE:

H. R. 4378. A bill to amend title I, title II, and title IV of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937, relating to the promotion of more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, the correction of the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SHAFER of Michigan:

H. R. 4379. A bill for the relief of the Augusta Public School District, Augusta, Mich.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GEHRMANN:

H. Res. 101. Resolution to make H. R. 70, a bill to provide for liquidating and refinancing of agricultural indebtedness, a special order of business; to the Committee on Rules.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to consider their House Joint Memorial No. 7 with reference to the Lewis and Clark highway; to the Committee on Roads.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANGELL:

H. R. 4380. A bill for the relief of Ernest Clinton and Frederick P. Deragisch; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BATES of Massachusetts:

H. R. 4381. A bill for the relief of the estate of William W. Dutcher; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CELLER:

H. R. 4382. A bill for the relief of Bluma Sakin Silberstein; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

H. R. 4383. A bill for the relief of Dora Zlotnick; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. CURLEY:

H. R. 4384. A bill for the relief of Wilhelm August Schlittenhardt; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. DARDEN:

H. R. 4385. A bill for the relief of John Philip Knecht, Sr.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 4386. A bill for the relief of George T. Easton; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 4387. A bill granting a pension to Constance Eager; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARE:

H. R. 4388. A bill for the relief of James Henry Rigdon; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HART:

H. R. 4389. A bill for the relief of James Havey; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KITCHENS:

H. R. 4390. A bill to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Herbert M. Gregory; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN:

H. R. 4391. A bill for the relief of H. W. Hamlin; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 4392. A bill for the relief of Spring Street Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Charleston, S. C.; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SECREST:

H. R. 4393. A bill granting a pension to Thomas J. McWilliams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee:

H. R. 4394. A bill granting a pension to James G. Bailey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

H. R. 4395. A bill granting an increase of pension to Charles Payne; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

H. R. 4396. A bill granting a pension to Charles Farris; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia:

H. R. 4397. A bill for the relief of Bertha E. Richardson; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 4398. A bill for the relief of Johnny R. Cole; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1244. By Mr. HANCOCK: Resolution adopted by the Onondaga County Pomona Grange, North Syracuse, N. Y., favoring a fact-finding commission to study monetary policies; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1245. By Mr. HARNES: Petition of the Order of Railway Conductors of America, Atlantic Division, No. 120, Huntington, Ind., protesting against any Federal legislation designed to regulate the miles or hours of men in train and engine service on the railroads of the United States; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1246. Also, petition of the railway trainmen of Frankfort, Ind., who are members of various branches of the brotherhoods, asking for passage of House bills 2298 and 2313, providing for voluntary retirement of railway employees at the age of 60; and mandatory retirement at the age of 65, with certain exceptions; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1247. By Mr. HARTER of New York: Petition of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, Buffalo division; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1248. By Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY: Telegram from the chairman of the New York County executive committee of the American Labor Party, urging the appropriation of $150,000,000 asked for by the President for Works Progress Administration in view dire need of millions unemployed American citizens; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1249. Also, resolution passed by the Railway Mail Association, New York City Branch, second division, requesting that hereafter substitutes in the Postal Service shall be rated as employees and be given the same rights and benefits that accrue to regular employees in proportion to the time actually employed; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, February 20, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Albert Joseph McCartney, D. D., minister of the Covenant First Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Seek ye the Lord while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near. Let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, for He will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon.

Let us pray.

O merciful Father, who in compassion for Thy sinful children didst send Thy Son, Jesus Christ, to take away the sin of the world, we join with our fellow believers everywhere on this Ash Wednesday in humbling ourselves before Thee. Grant us grace to acknowledge and lament our share in the evil that besets this unhappy world today. Help us by self-denial, prayer, and meditation to prepare our hearts for a deeper penitence and a better life.

And now upon this day, dedicated to the first President, we remember in gratitude those who with him fashioned our Government and established for our state the foundations of civil and religious liberty. We bless Thee for the glorious heritage of faith and freedom. Help us to be true to the great ideals for which they stood, and may our country ever be the home of justice, liberty, and true brotherhood, and may the President of the United States and these Thy servants, and all our citizenry, hear in the memory of the one whose name we honor today the strongest summons to be good and true.

This we ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, February 21, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Caloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4011) to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] are detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is unavoidably detained.

Mr. WALSH. I announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is absent because of a death in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under an order made by the Senate in 1901, the Chair has designated the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to read George Washington's Farewell Address on this day. If the Senator from Ohio will approach the desk and perform that duty, the Senate will be obliged to him.

Mr. TAFT advanced to the desk and read the Farewell Address, as follows:

To the people of the United States.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those, out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you, at the same time, to do me the justice to be assured, that this resolution has not been taken, without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that, in withdrawing the tender of service which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest; no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness; but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to the last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations, and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence, impelled me to abandon the idea.

I rejoice that the state of your concerns external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety; and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country, you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust, were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust, I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed towards the organization and administration of the government, the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset, of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience, in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and, every day, the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more, that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is to terminate the career of my political life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country, for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment, by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging—in situations in which not unfrequently, want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism,—the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts, and a guarantee of the plans, by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence—that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual—that the free constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained—that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue—that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these states, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation, and so prudent a use of this blessing, as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which cannot end, but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people, is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence; the support of your tranquility at home: your peace abroad; of your safety; of your prosperity; of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But, as it is easy to foresee that, from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth; as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed; it is of infinite moment, that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can, in any event, be abandoned; and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth, or choice, of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have, in a common cause, fought and triumphed together; the independence and liberty you possess, are the work of joint counsels, and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest.—Here, every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The north, in an unrestrained intercourse with the south, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter, great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise, and precious materials of manufacturing industry.—The south, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the north, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the north, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes, in different ways, to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength, to which itself is unequally adapted. The east, in a like intercourse with the west, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water, will more and more find a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad, or manufactures at home. The west derives from the east supplies requisite to its growth and comfort—and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions, to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the west can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength; or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While then every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined cannot fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts, greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations; and, what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union, an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves, which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same government; which their own rivalry alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues, would stimulate and embitter. Hence likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments, which under any form of government are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is, that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind and exhibit the continuance of the union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union, affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who, in any quarter, may endeavor to weaken its hands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union, it occurs as matter of serious concern, that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations,—northern and southern—Atlantic and western; whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts, is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You cannot shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heart burnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head: they have seen, in the negotiation by the executive, and in the unanimous ratification by the senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at the event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the general government and in the Atlantic states, unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties, that with Great Britain and that with Spain, which secure to them everything they could desire, in respect to our foreign relations, towards confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such they are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your Union, a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute; they must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances, in all times, have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay, by the adoption of a constitution of government, better calculated than your former, for an intimate union, and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and maintaining within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government.—But the constitution which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power, and the right of the people to establish government, presuppose the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberations and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency.—They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government; destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Towards the preservation of your government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite, not only that you steadily discountenance irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however spacious the pretext. One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system; and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments, as of other human institutions:—that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country:—that facility in changes, upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion, exposes to perpetual change from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion: and remember, especially, that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours, a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular references to the founding them on geographical discrimination. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind.—It exists under different shapes in all governments more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism.—But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result, gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual; and, sooner or later, the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purpose of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind, (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight) the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils, and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foment occasional riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which finds a facilitated access to the government itself through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true; and in governments of a monarchical cast, patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose. And there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent it bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions of the others has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern; some of them in our country and under our own eyes.—To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the constitution designates.—But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? and let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true, that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric?

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering, also, that timely disbursements, to prepare for danger, frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions, in time of peace, to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should co-operate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is essential that you should practically bear in mind, that towards the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper object (which is always a choice of difficulties,) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue, which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice towards all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct, and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt but, in the course of time and things, the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it; can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan, nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others, should be excluded; and that, in place of them, just and amicable feelings towards all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges towards another an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another, disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times, it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty of nations, has been the victim.

So likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducements or justifications. It leads also to concessions, to the favorite nation, of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions, by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils!—Such an attachment of a small or weak, towards a great and powerful nation, dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, (I conjure you to believe me fellow citizens,) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake; since history and experience prove, that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another, cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith:—Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon, to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation, when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion, it is unnecessary, and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, and a liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary, and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view, that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance, it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect, or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish; that they will control the usual current of the passions, or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations, but if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism; this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far, in the discharge of my official duties, I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is, that I have, at least, believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe; my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both houses of congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound, in duty and interest, to take a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct, it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without any thing more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity towards other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me, a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress, without interruption, to that degree of strength, and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration, I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence; and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service, with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love towards it, which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations; I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize, without alloy, the sweet enjoyment of partaking, in the midst of my fellow citizens, the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors and dangers.

GEO. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES,
19th September, 1796.

Mr. KING. Mr. President after listening to the patriotic and immortal address of the Father of his Country it seems to me appropriate that we supplement it by having read into the Record his prayer for the United States of America. I ask unanimous consent to have the clerk read the prayer of General Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the prayer will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON'S PRAYER FOR THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

(The concluding paragraph of the circular letter addressed by General Washington to the Governors of all the States on disbanding the Army. Issued at headquarters, Newburgh, June 8, 1783)

I now make it my earnest prayer that God would have you, and the State over which you preside, in His holy protection; that He would incline the hearts of the citizens to cultivate a spirit of subordination and obedience to government; to entertain a brotherly affection and love for one another, for their fellow citizens of the United States at large, and particularly for their brethren who have served in the field; and, finally, that He would most graciously be pleased to dispose us all to do justice, to love mercy, and to demean ourselves with that charity, humility, and pacific temper of mind, which were the characteristics of the Divine Author of our blessed religion, and without an humble imitation of whose example in these things, we can never hope to be a happy nation.

CONTINUANCE OF FUNCTIONS OF THE R. F. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1102) to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That (a) section 1 of the act approved January 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 5), is hereby amended by striking therefrom "June 30, 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1941"; (b) section 1 of the act approved March 31, 1936 (49 Stat. 1186), as amended, is hereby further amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "June 30, 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1941"; (c) section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act (47 Stat. 9), as amended, is hereby further amended by inserting after the second sentence thereof the following sentence: "Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the Corporation as provided by section 4 hereof."; and (d) the act approved February 11, 1937 (50 Stat. 19), as amended, is amended by striking from the first sentence "$20,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$40,000,000"; and by striking from the second paragraph "or 1938" and inserting in lieu thereof "1938, 1939, or 1940."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May we have an explanation of the amendment?

Mr. GLASS. The amendment simply increases the amount of the capital stock of the Disaster Loan Corporation from $20,000,000 to $40,000,000, and extends the authority for loans because of floods or other catastrophes through the year 1940.

I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Kanawha County Industrial Union Council, Charleston, W. Va., protesting against the enactment of the so-called Walsh-Green bill, being Senate bill 1,000, to amend the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of Puerto Rico, praying that the United States adhere to the general policy of neutrality as enunciated in existing law and extend the law to include civil as well as international conflicts, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Washington (D. C.) Alumni Chapter of Kappa Alpha Psi, praying for the taking of measures to increase Negro personnel in the Regular Army and integrate it into all branches of the Military Establishment, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GIBSON presented a petition of several citizens of Poultney, Bridgewater, and Proctorsville, in the State of Vermont, praying for the enactment of House bill 11, a general-welfare bill providing old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Vermont, praying that necessary action be taken to prevent the resources of the Government and American citizens from being used directly or indirectly to aid Japan in her operations in China, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MEAD presented a memorial of sundry citizens of New York City and vicinity, remonstrating against amendment or repeal of the neutrality law, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented memorials, numerous signed, of sundry citizens of the State of New York, remonstrating against the imposition and collection of a processing tax on wheat, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a paper in the nature of a petition from Major Sebastian Baumann Unit, No. 998, of the Steuben Society of America, Huntington Station, N. Y., praying for the adoption of the so-called Ludlow war-referendum resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented memorials, numerous signed, of sundry citizens of the State of New York, remonstrating against the enactment of House bill 1, the so-called Patman bill, imposing taxes upon chain stores, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. MINTON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Muncie and vicinity, Indiana, praying for the enactment of House bill 11, a general-welfare bill granting old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions, numerous signed, of sundry citizens of the State of Indiana, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the advertising of intoxicating beverages by press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MILLER:

S. 1541. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GUFFEY:

S. 1542. A bill to authorize the Director of the Geological Survey, under the general supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, to acquire certain collections for the United States; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 1543. A bill for the relief of the Wilson Co., a New Mexico corporation; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1544. A bill to require an 8-hour day for seamen on merchant vessels of less than 100 tons gross; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MURRAY and Mr. McCARRAN:

S. J. Res. 76. Joint resolution to authorize the Postmaster General to withhold the awarding of star-route contracts for a period of 60 days; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON FINANCE

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 86) extending the time for filing of a report pursuant to Senate Resolution 303, Seventy-fifth Congress, a resolution establishing a Special Committee on the Taxation of Governmental Securities and Salaries, reported it without amendment.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR PEPPER BEFORE NATIONAL CANNERS' ASSOCIATION

[Mr. ELLENDER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD excerpts from an address delivered by Senator PEPPER before the National Canners' Association at Chicago, Ill., January 24, 1939, which appear in the Appendix.]

BITUMINOUS-COAL INDUSTRY—ARTICLE FROM BLUEFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article with reference to the bituminous-coal industry, published in the Bluefield (W. Va.) Daily Telegraph of February 21, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADMISSION OF GERMAN REFUGEE CHILDREN

[Mr. WAGNER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Let Them Come In," from the February 25, 1939, issue of Pathfinder, which appears in the Appendix.]

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI, so that the amendment offered by him yesterday may be in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, yesterday I made a point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, upon information which at the time I believed to be accurate and reliable. Upon further investigation I find that in some important respects that information was erroneous. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. BYRNES. Then I withdraw my motion to suspend the rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

No part of any appropriation contained in this or any other act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, shall be available for the payment of enlistment allowance to enlisted men for reenlistment within a period of 3 months from date of discharge as to reenlistments made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, notwithstanding the applicable provisions of sections 9 and 10 of the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922 (37 U. S. C., 13, 16).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. On behalf of the committee, I send to the desk an amendment providing a title for the last portion of the bill. I ask to have the amendment stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 56, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the caption "Emergency agencies."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer (Mr. KING in the chair) appointed Mr. GLASS, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. McCARRAN, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

SOIL-CONSERVATION PROJECTS—AMENDMENT

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit at this time a proposed amendment to a House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, this amendment is intended to be proposed to the Emergency Relief appropriation bill. I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment printed in the usual form, printed also at this point in the RECORD as part of my remarks, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There being no objection, the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. LEE was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, ordered to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. LEE (for himself and Mr. MILLER) to the bill (H. R. —), the Emergency Relief appropriation bill. At the proper place insert the following:

"Sec. —. Not to exceed $— of the sum appropriated to the Works Progress Administration by section — of this act, may be expended for the prosecution of projects sponsored by soil conservation districts established under State laws and involving the carrying out upon any lands included within such districts of practices designed to conserve the soil and water resources of such lands. In the case of projects under this section the Soil Conservation Service or other appropriate agency in the Department of Agriculture shall be responsible for supplying technical guidance and supervision in planning and performing the work to be done and for making recommendations to the W. P. A. upon proposed projects. In the prosecution of any such project, the Works Progress Administration shall not enter, or perform labor, upon any privately owned land without the consent of the owner of such land."

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, in brief, the amendment provides that W. P. A. labor may be used, under the supervision of the Soil Conservation Service, within legally established soil-conservation districts to conserve the soil and water resources on any land within such districts. In other words, under the proposed amendment W. P. A. labor could be used to build terraces and small reservoirs on farms within such conservation districts.

During the early stages of the Soil Conservation Service, when demonstrational areas were established in the various States for the purpose of putting into practice the comprehensive soil-conservation and water-control program of the Department of Agriculture, the Works Progress Administration officials approved a Federal project which gave the Soil Conservation Service the benefit of W. P. A. labor to be used within the confines of these demonstrational areas.

Since the expiration of this Federal project the Works Progress Administration has not felt that it had authority to approve projects initiated by local soil-conservation districts. The amendment which I propose gives the W. P. A. such authority.

In 26 States of the Union, State legislatures have enacted legislation providing for the establishment of soil-conservation districts. One hundred and nineteen districts have been established in the 26 States as of January 1, 1939, and approximately 30 more are now being organized. In my own State of Oklahoma 25 districts have been established. These 25 districts are located in all sections of the State. The object of establishing the district is that by cooperative effort the land owners within the confines of the district may, under the supervision and the assistance of the Soil Conservation Service, carry out sound land- and water-conservation practices.

If this amendment is enacted by the Congress, it will then be possible for a soil-conservation district to initiate and sponsor a W. P. A. project in the same manner in which the county commissioners, school boards, and so forth, have been sponsoring projects since the inception of the W. P. A. The technical supervision will be furnished by the Soil Conservation Service and the labor will be supplied from the regular work rolls of the W. P. A.

I have long advocated spending Government funds for soil-conservation purposes as a sound investment. For every dollar spent, an equal amount of wealth is returned in the improved fertility of the soil.

While we are spending huge sums for the construction of giant flood-control projects, which I have consistently favored, we should give equal consideration to projects that tend to keep the water on the land where it falls, and save the rich topsoil from eroding and washing.

Such a program would be encouraged by the proposed amendment. It would give the farmer the help he wants. It would speed up the program of conserving the soil of the Nation. It would give W. P. A. officials sound constructive projects on which to furnish W. P. A. labor. It would give employment to the unemployed on projects that will merit public approval.

Therefore, I hope the Congress will give serious consideration to this amendment when the emergency relief appropriation bill is considered.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk call the calendar for the consideration of unobjectioned-to bills. I adopt that procedure at this time for the reason that the Committee on Finance this morning ordered a report on the bill recently passed by the House of Representatives taxing certain State salaries and other income affected by the sixteenth amendment. Also, I am informed that the Committee on Military Affairs may today report the national-defense bill. In view of that fact, we probably shall have some business for the next few days; and I think we might clean up the brief calendar at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Without objection, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of unobjectioned-to bills on the calendar, and the clerk will state in order the bills on the calendar.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States in claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico, was announced as first in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1093) for the relief of Mike Chetkovich was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 58) providing that a calendar day's notice shall suffice in connection with suspension of a rule, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 74) providing for a Committee on Civil Aviation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 884) for the relief of disbursing officers and other officers and employees of the United States for disallow-ance and charges on account of airplane travel was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair will ask that the bill be passed over.

The bill (S. 1367) to extend the time for making loans by the Disaster Loan Corporation and increasing its capital stock was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LT. MALCOLM A. HUFTY, UNITED STATES NAVY

The bill (S. 1115) for the relief of Lt. Malcolm A. Hufty, United States Navy, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of Lt. Malcolm A. Hufty, United States Navy, for refund of $285.52, in full satisfaction against the United States for the cost of commercial transportation furnished this officer on a foreign registered vessel, in accordance with orders issued by the commander in chief, United States Asiatic Fleet, and subsequently deducted by the General Accounting Office in settlement of the amount awarded this officer pursuant to judgment on another claim.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 828) to permit the President to acquire and convert as well as to construct certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 829) to authorize alterations and repairs to certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] not being in the Chamber, the present occupant of the chair takes the liberty, as if he were on the floor, to ask that the bill go over.

The bill (S. 1045) to give effect to the International Agreement for the Regulation of Whaling, signed at London, June 8, 1937, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PREVENTION OF STREAM POLLUTION

The bill (S. 685) to create a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair will ask that the bill go over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish, if possible, to dissuade my friend from Utah, who is now in the chair, from objecting to the present consideration of this bill. It is similar to a bill passed in the last Congress, practically unanimously, by both Houses but which was vetoed by the President because the provisions of the bill did not require the appropriation authorized to go through the Budget. For that reason alone the President vetoed the bill. The bill has been reintroduced in terms which were agreed to by the conference committee after long deliberation between the two Houses at the last session of the Congress.

The question of stream pollution and the purification of water to be consumed by the people on our navigable streams has become very acute in many sections of the country. I do not wish to designate any particular locality, but there are some localities whose sanitary officers and public-health agencies have practically condemned the use of the water taken from large navigable streams. In those localities both the municipalities and the private streams that have contributed and are now contributing to the pollution of the streams do not have the facilities at hand with which to inaugurate purification plans or to install purification devices.

There is nothing compulsory about this bill. It authorizes two or more States to enter into compacts providing for the mutual purification of their streams. It authorizes the appropriation of $300,000 for the administration of the act. It authorizes setting up in the Public Health Service a Division of Water Pollution Control. It authorizes a study of the question. It authorizes cooperation between the Public Health Service, through the Division to be created, and public-health agencies in counties, cities, and States.

It further authorizes loans and grants to cities and to private industries up to one-third of the cost of the installation of devices designed to bring about purification of water. There is a total appropriation of $700,000 a year for that purpose, making a million dollars in all.

This bill was agreed to, I may add, in the last Congress after long study by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House and the Committee on Commerce of the Senate. The then Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Loneragan] was greatly interested and had been for years interested in legislation of this character. The real outstanding difference between the advocates of the bill was the degree of compulsion which should be included so far as the Federal Government is concerned. We finally eliminated that controversy by providing that there should be no compulsion; and there is no compulsion under the bill, either by criminal process or by injunction, against any city or any industry. It is a purely cooperative measure, making a modest step in the direction of trying to purify our streams, which are the source of the drinking water in many cities and communities throughout the country.

I do not see how there can be any objection to the bill. I am anxious to have it passed so that it may go to the other House and be considered there by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, in order that the proposed legislation may be enacted. It would now be a law if we had not made what the President thought was a mistake in not providing that the appropriation authorized should go through the Bureau of the Budget instead of going around the Budget Bureau. We have accepted the President's conclusions about that and have modified the bill accordingly.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I should like to know how the bill would affect a situation in Virginia. There has been intense complaint against the pollution of the waters of Hampton Roads, the claim being made that it has largely impaired, and in some respects destroyed, the oyster industry. I should like to know how this bill would affect that situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill by its terms provides that it shall not only apply to purification of water for human consumption but shall have regard also to the effect upon the aquatic life within the waters themselves. For instance, under the bill, the local sanitary or health officer would cooperate with the Bureau of Public Health through the Division of Water Pollution Control. If, in Hampton Roads or any of the cities along the shores of Virginia or in Maryland, it is desired to install facilities for the purification of the water, they could cooperate one with another to bring about a plan by which it would be done through the Division of Water Pollution Control in the Public Health Service, subject, of course, to the regulation of the Army engineers with respect to navigation, for that is always to be considered. They could install such devices or such plants if they were able financially to do so, or the municipalities involved or the corporations involved in the pollution of a stream, if not wholly able themselves to bear the expense, could apply to the Division of Water Pollution Control for loans and grants up to one-third of the cost, and proceed to install them.

Mr. GLASS. But if there is no compulsion, as the Senator says, of what worth would it be?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is a legitimate question, but, frankly, we could not secure the enactment of legislation that carried compulsory provisions. We have got to make a beginning; and it is hoped that the experience of this modest beginning in voluntary cooperation among the States and the Federal Government may bring about the gathering of experience that may enable us to take a further step later on when we find, from the experience gained and from the administration of the proposed law, that it is necessary. However, the compulsory feature had to be eliminated in order that we might make a start in cleaning up the rivers by voluntary cooperation.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Hatch in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I note on page 5 of the bill a provision authorizing the making of grants and loans in aid of the construction of necessary treatment works by private individuals. It is my understanding that no individual and no corporation has a right to pollute a stream. I know that is the case in my section of the country, where stream pollution has been stopped by injunctive process.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is, of course, probably under the laws of the State; but, as a matter of fact, without intending to do it, for I do not think that anybody would deliberately and with premeditation pollute the waters of a stream which is the source of water consumed by people generally, in many States the character of manufacturing being carried on and the disposition of waste which finally finds its way into the streams result in pollution. Some of the streams are wholly within one State, while others are boundaries between States, and the latter, of course, are subject to the control of the Federal Government. If in such cases, without intending it by design, private industry is operating in such a manner as to pollute a stream, the object of the provision of the bill referred to is to help private industries install such devices as will enable the stream to be purified without requiring them to put up the entire amount of money in cash at the time of the installation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly to differ from my distinguished leader, whom I am always anxious to follow, but this is a very important bill; I have one or two amendments as a result of some suggestions which I have received which I should like to have considered, and I ask my friend not to press the consideration of the bill at this time. I will be perfectly willing at the next meeting of the Senate to have the bill taken up for consideration. So I now object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well; let the bill go over, under the circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 439) to confer the Distinguished Service Medal on Col. Richard C. Patterson was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1084) to continue the function of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I also ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CLAIMS OF TURTLE MOUNTAIN BANDS OF INDIANS, NORTH DAKOTA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 88) referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for finding of fact and recommendations to the Congress, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota, including the band of Chief or Thomas Little Shell and other isolated bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota and Montana, of whatsoever nature, not heretofore determined and adjudicated on their merits by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States, arising under or as the result of violation of any treaty, act of Congress, agreement, Executive order, or treaty with any other tribes or nations of Indians, or relating to, affecting, or otherwise violating the land occupancy or other rights, as recognized by the officials of the United States, of said band or bands of Indians are hereby referred to the Court of Claims; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said Court of Claims to proceed, according to the principles of law and equity, to find the facts with reference to any claim or claims presented hereunder and report the same to the Congress, together with recommendations hereinafter referred to. The said court shall consider all such claims de novo, without regard to any decision, findings, or settlement heretofore had in respect of any of such claims.

SEC. 2. That any and all claims against the United States under this act shall be forever barred unless the said Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Indians shall within 3 years from the date of the approval of this act file a petition or petitions in said court setting forth said claims. The claim or claims of the band or bands aforementioned may be presented separately or jointly by petition or petitions, subject, however, to amendment in the discretion of the court at any time prior to final hearing in the matter. The petition or petitions shall be verified by the respective attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract with the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, as provided by law. Official letters, papers, documents, reports, and records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence; and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said Turtle Mountain Band or Bands to such treaties, agreements, papers, reports, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys of said band or bands of Indians.

SEC. 3. That said court shall determine the facts as to all claims submitted hereunder, and shall make findings of fact and recommendations to the Congress thereon, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation; any payment which may have been made by the United States upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as a set-off; and the United States shall be allowed credit for any sum or sums proved to have been heretofore paid or expended directly for said band or bands of Indians, subsequent to the date of any law, treaty, agreement, or Executive order under which the claims arise.

SEC. 4. That said court is hereby authorized and empowered to make findings of fact and to report the same to the Congress of the United States, together with recommendations, (1) relative to any loss sustained by said Indians by reason of the delay in ratification of the agreement of 1892 (33 Stat. 189); (2) as to the acceptance of the amendments made by Congress to said agreement of 1892, whether the acceptance of said amendments by the Indians was voluntary or whether made under compulsion or duress, and as to the loss or damage sustained by said Indians by reason of any action on the part of the United States in securing said acceptance; (3) whether said agreement of 1892 was consented to and ratified by the band of Chief or Thomas Little Shell and the amount of any loss to said band resulting from actions taken under said agreement without the consent of said band; (4) whether said lands to which the band of Chief or Thomas Little Shell had title by occupancy were taken from it without the consent of said band and the value thereof; (5) as to any losses, as near in amount as can be determined, sustained by said Indians by reason of the appropriation of lands ceded by said agreement of 1892 prior to its ratification, and the failure of the United States to reserve sufficient lands to enable the said Indians, including the band of Chief or Thomas Little Shell, to obtain suitable and adequate allotments as provided in said agreement; (6) the costs incurred by said Indians in acquiring allotments on the public domain as a result of any violation of said agreement; (7) as to whether, under said agreement of 1892, the said band or bands of Indians by mistake or otherwise ceded lands which were intended to be retained as a reservation, in particular an area lying about 30 miles west of Red River, being 15 miles in width, for a distance of 65 miles along the Canadian border, and the value of said tract at the time of said cession; (8) as to whether the United States, by Executive order, set aside approximately 1,000,000 acres of the territory occupied by said Indians as a reservation for any other Indian tribe or tribes, without compensating said Indians for the land so taken; (9) whether said Indians had legal or equitable title to said lands so set aside for any other tribe or tribes of Indians, and the reasonable value of said lands at the time of the issuance of the said Executive order; (10) as to the negotiation and execution of said agreement of 1892, and whether the United States obtained cessions of land thereunder from said band or bands of Indians in violation of or contrary to the terms of said agreement authorizing said cession of lands; (11) whether the United States obtained lands from said Indians under mistake of fact; (12) whether the consideration paid by the United States under said agreement of 1892 was adequate and whether any lands were taken from said band or bands of Indians without paying any consideration therefor. Said court shall make its findings with respect to all claims presented hereunder, including any and all other claims which may be presented to the court by said band or bands of Indians not specifically hereinabove set forth, and shall report said findings to the Congress, and shall determine the value of said lands under said claims at the time they were ceded to or taken from said Indians by the United States, and shall recommend to the Congress such amount as may appeal to the conscience of said court under the principles of equity and justice as proper to be paid to said band or bands of Indians in payment for the lands so taken, and damages suffered, including interest thereon from the date of such taking, and in full satisfaction of all claims determined pursuant to this act.

SEC. 5. Upon the final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to recommend a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 percent of the recovery in each instance, together with all necessary and proper expenses incurred in preparation and prosecution of the suit or suits, to be paid to the respective attorneys employed by the said band or bands of Indians under contracts approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as provided by law, and the same shall be included in the findings of said court and shall be paid out of any sum or sums appropriated by the Congress pursuant to this act. The court shall have jurisdiction and is hereby further authorized to determine and recommend to the Congress what amounts, if any, shall be awarded to the respective bands who bring suit or suits hereunder.

SEC. 6. The Court of Claims shall have full authority by proper orders and process to bring in and make parties to such suit or suits any other tribe or band of Indians deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of the matters in controversy. A copy of the petition or petitions shall, in such case, be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and represent the interests of the United States in such case.

SEC. 7. The proceeds of all amounts, if any, found to be due said Indians and duly appropriated by the Congress, less fees and expenses, shall, upon said appropriation, be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the said band or bands of Indians as found by said court to be entitled thereto.

Mr. KING. I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this bill refers to the Court of Claims the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota. A similar bill passed the Senate at the last session of Congress, but, owing to the lateness of the session, did not get through the other House. The bill is approved by the Department. It merely allows the Indians to go into the Court of Claims to establish their claims against the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, doubtless the Senator has heard the statement repeatedly made—and it is authentic—that we have passed so many Indian claims bills that the amount of money involved, if liability were established, would aggregate several billion dollars. I have felt—and I am in part responsible for some of the bills—that we have been rather too inconsiderate of the Public Treasury and have not devoted sufficient consideration to the merits of the claims which are considered. I do not think we ought to devolve upon the courts long suits and protracted litigation when there is no warrant for such action.

Mr. FRAZIER. In this particular case, Mr. President, a treaty was made with the Indians, and it was agreed that they would be given sufficient land to provide for homes for all of them. The treaty was held up by the Congress for several years. I do not remember all the circumstances; but, in the meantime, the white settlers have come in and homesteaded the lands, and now there are 4,000 Indians on two townships of land. The treaty never has been carried out. They have not sufficient land, nor have they an adequate number of schools to educate their children.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand the Senator, it is contended that the Government has violated a treaty with the Indians, has taken their land, and has made no compensation for it.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is an absolutely correct statement.

Mr. KING. Is this bill only for the purpose of determining the damages, if I may use that expression, to which the Indians would be entitled by reason of having been deprived of their property in contravention of the terms of the treaty?

Mr. FRAZIER. The bill is to establish the facts in the matter; to show what the Indians are entitled to, if anything.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIANS OF FORT BERTHOLD RESERVATION, N. DAK.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 414) for the relief of the Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation in North Dakota, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000 in full and final settlement of all claims and demands of the Indians of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation in North Dakota, composed of the Arickarees, Gros

Ventres, and Mandans, which claims are based upon stipulations of an unratified treaty dated July 27, 1866 (Kappler's Laws and Treaties, vol. 2, p. 1052): Provided, That the amount when appropriated shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation and shall draw interest in accordance with existing laws: Provided further, That not to exceed 10 percent of the amount herein authorized may be used by the Secretary of the Interior for payment of fees and expenses of attorneys employed under contract approved in accordance with existing law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is this bill in the same category as the former one?

Mr. FRAZIER. No, Mr. President. The bill is similar to one which was passed at the last session, but the situation is a little different.

The Government agreed to pay these Indians, for the use of their lands, $20,000 a year for 20 years. It has never been paid. Another claim was paid to the Indians, but this amount was not considered at the time. The Department feels that they are entitled to it. A similar bill was passed by the Senate last year, and was reported by the Indian Affairs Committee of the other House and placed on their calendar, but did not pass the House.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator how much is involved in this claim?

Mr. FRAZIER. In this bill, $400,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CROW TRIBE OF INDIANS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 45) to amend the act of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Crow Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes" (44 Stat. L. 807), was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Dakota how much is involved in this joint resolution?

Mr. FRAZIER. This is a Montana case. I have forgotten the particular facts involved.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that a number of measures dealing with the Crow Indians have been before the Senate.

Mr. FRAZIER. This measure also is similar to one which was passed last year.

Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

That completes the calendar.

DISASTER LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, unfortunately I was detained before coming to the Senate Chamber. I understand that during my absence Senate bill 1367 was reached on the calendar, and an objection was made to its consideration. Is the Senator present who made the objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator who made the objection is not present.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, does the record indicate who objected?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] objected.

Mr. McNARY. He is absent; so, of course, we would not want to take action during his absence.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, as the Senator will remember, last year and the year before we passed bills similar to this by unanimous vote of both Houses. The bill deals with the Disaster Loan Corporation. I suppose, in the absence of the Senator who objected, we cannot do anything about the matter; but the difficulty, if I may explain it, is that there is no authority to make loans for any of the disasters as a result of floods since January 1, and there have been some recently. Applications are pouring in to the R. F. C. in very distressed cases.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I supported the original legislation.

Mr. WAGNER. I know the Senator did.

Mr. McNARY. I am in favor of its continuance. I have sent a messenger for the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and he will return to the Chamber in a moment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that either the Senator from New York, or the report of the committee, or some Member upon the floor of the Senate, stated that the funds heretofore appropriated had not been exhausted; and I was wondering whether there is any necessity of augmenting the fund by $20,000,000 when the $20,000,000 heretofore appropriated has not been exhausted?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the other day, when this matter was brought up, I stated that the original $20,000,000 which became the capital of the Disaster Loan Corporation had not all been exhausted; but this increase is made necessary because of the desirability and necessity of making loans in New England to take care of timber which was destroyed or blown down by the recent hurricane. The amount of money necessary to do that is about $15,000,000, so that makes up the large item of increase made necessary. Of course, in some cases involving floods, loans ought to be continued, which would absorb the balance of the amount. It seems to me to be a very worthy thing, and the Disaster Loan Corporation has served a good purpose in that regard. The bill only provides for the capital stock which was originally contemplated when the Disaster Loan Corporation was created.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, supplementing what has been said, permit me to add that it is estimated that more than $15,000,000 in the way of loans will be required to take care of the down timber in the New England States. About 3,000,000 feet of timber is down as a result of the hurricane. Twenty million dollars is not sufficient to take care of loans already made and those which it is contemplated to make to the timber owners, particularly of the New England States. If the timber is to be salvaged at all, it must be done at once, so that it will reach the water by the summertime.

I know that all the States, and particularly the New England States, are very much concerned in this proposed legislation. Furthermore, there have been some floods since January 1, and a hurricane occurred just the other day. I am informed that there are some very distressed cases as the result of those particular disasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from New York will permit the Chair briefly to explain the parliamentary situation, which has arisen probably without the knowledge of the Senator, the Chair's attention has been called by the clerk to the fact that the text of this identical bill has been added by the House to a Senate bill as an amendment, and the Senate today concurred in the amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That action was taken earlier in the day. That amendment being identical with the measure about which the Senator is now speaking, has been concurred in by the Senate. This bill, therefore, probably should be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WAGNER. Has the Senate bill, with the House amendment, been considered and passed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been.

Mr. WAGNER. Then, if that be so, I suppose a motion would be in order to postpone indefinitely the consideration of Senate bill 1367. I make that motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. The amendment was reported to the Senate earlier in the day. It was not generally known what its terms were, or that it applied to this situation. The bill is a Senate bill which was amended in the House, and the Senate concurred in the House amendment, so that it is now a part of the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well. I may say that portions of the House amendment are identical with a bill which the Senate has already passed extending the power of the R. F. C., so, in concurring in the amendment, we were not considering entirely new legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] to postpone indefinitely action on Senate bill 1367 is agreed to.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION—EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, earlier in the day a message was received from the House of Representatives announcing the passage of a bill extending the time for the operation of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank. The Committee on Banking and Currency has favorably reported a similar measure. I suggest that it is not necessary to refer the House bill to the committee, but that it may go to the calendar, in view of the action already taken on the Senate bill of similar import.

Mr. WAGNER. I suggest that the House bill, which is identical with the bill reported yesterday by the Committee on Banking and Currency, be placed upon the calendar, so that when we consider the subject matter we may consider the House bill instead of the Senate bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; that is the suggestion I have just made.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that is extraordinary unless the bills are identical in language. It is always customary to refer House bills to the committee having jurisdiction. The action proposed could be taken if the bills are identical, and I should have no objection if I knew positively that there is no difference at all.

Mr. WAGNER. I give the Senator my assurance that the bills are absolutely identical.

Mr. McNARY. Has the Senate bill been favorably reported?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senate bill has been favorably reported and is upon the calendar.

Mr. McNARY. And it is identical with the House bill?

Mr. WAGNER. It is absolutely identical with the House bill.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator now desires to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill?

Mr. WAGNER. For the present, let us leave both upon the calendar.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

Mr. WAGNER. Then when we come to consider the subject matter we will consider the House bill. Would not that be the better procedure?

Mr. BARKLEY. That was the suggestion I made.

Mr. McNARY. The procedure would be in this fashion: We have placed both of the bills on the calendar, without objection; and when we come to consider the subject matter we will substitute the House bill for the Senate bill, if that is the Senator's desire.

Mr. WAGNER. That is what I propose to do when we take up the subject matter for consideration.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to that procedure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4011) to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and ordered to be placed on the Calendar.

AUTHORIZATION FOR COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS TO REPORT BILL

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am informed that the Committee on Military Affairs probably will very soon vote out the bill recently passed by the House, authorizing certain national-defense expenditures. I ask unanimous consent that during the adjournment or recess of the Senate the committee may be authorized to report the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the request if it is coupled with an understanding that if any Senator desires, the bill shall go over for the usual time, 1 day, before its consideration. I make this statement for the reason that I think the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye] would like to be present when the bill is considered, and I am informed he is out of the city today. If he is present tomorrow and is prepared to go forward, I will have no objection to the request.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no desire to press consideration of the bill tomorrow unless it is agreeable to all Senators.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. If that is the mutual agreement and understanding, I have no objection to the committee reporting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Kentucky is agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Kentucky. As the Senator knows, there is on the calendar a bill to continue the function of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington. I take it that there will be some controversy over the proposed legislation, and I wondered whether the Senator from Kentucky had determined when we should consider it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill was objected to when it was called on the calendar today. It may be possible to take it up tomorrow, if we have a session tomorrow.

Mr. WAGNER. A number of Senators are absent today. Would it be possible to have the bill set down for a definite time; say, Monday?

Mr. BARKLEY. The difficulty about that is that if the Committee on Military Affairs reports today or tomorrow on the national-defense bill, we will probably want to take it up not later than Monday. In addition to that, the Committee on Finance has today ordered a report on a bill recently passed by the House of Representatives providing for the taxation of State salaries and other income of that sort involved in the sixteenth amendment. That bill will be on the calendar tomorrow, and it may be desirable to consider it. I am anxious to get the bank bill through, and we may be able to consider it tomorrow, if it is agreeable.

Mr. WAGNER. It is agreeable to me. I was wondering whether the Senator knew how many Senators would be absent. It is a controversial matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Tomorrow will be Thursday, the middle of the week. I do not know that there will be an unusual number of Senators absent.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I do not think it will be possible to take up the tax bill tomorrow, because the hearings will not be printed until at least day after tomorrow, and it is going to take a little time to prepare the report, as the subject is more than usually complicated. I do not think the bill could be considered tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may say to the Senator from New York that probably we can take up the Export-Import Bank bill tomorrow, and I do not think there will be so many Senators absent as to affect the situation. I think we can take it up and dispose of it, either on a call of the calendar or the Senator may move to take it up.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if that bill is taken up, if any hearings have been had, either in the House committee or in the Senate committee, I submit that Senators ought to be advised of that fact and have an opportunity to examine the report of the hearings.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know there were hearings in the Senate committee. Mr. Jones made an exhaustive statement about it, as I think he did before the House committee.

Mr. WAGNER. We had hearings on two different days. We concluded hearings yesterday. We had a hearing a week ago, a very complete hearing, with a full attendance of the committee, the subject matter was thoroughly discussed, and the bill was reported without a dissenting vote, so far as I recall.

Mr. KING. Of course, we have a great deal of respect for Senate committees, and give to them due consideration, but it seems to me that in matters of great importance, if testimony has been taken to fortify the bills themselves, we ought to have an opportunity to read the testimony. If hearings have been had, I respectfully submit to the Senator that he make a report of them available at the earliest possible moment, so that some of us who may not have the knowledge he and his committee have concerning this important measure may have the benefit of the hearings.

Mr. WAGNER. If it is to be necessary to furnish printed transcripts of the hearings, I am afraid that cannot be done by tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. A report of the hearings which were had yesterday might not be ready by tomorrow, but I am sure a report of the hearings before the House committee is available.

Mr. WAGNER. That may be.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 80) thereon.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nominations of sundry persons for appointment as Foreign Service officers, unclassified, vice consuls of career, and secretaries in the Diplomatic Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Mabel Gittinger to be collector of customs for the collection district of Des Moines, Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Joseph J. Cunningham to be collector of customs for the collection district of Providence, R. I.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Public Health Service.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Public Health Service be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Public Health Service are confirmed en bloc.

ADJOURNMENT

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, February 23, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 22 (legislative day of February 20), 1939

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS

Mabel Gittinger to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 44, with headquarters at Des Moines, Iowa.

Joseph J. Cunningham to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 5, with headquarters at Providence, R. I.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Albert T. Morrison to be surgeon.

Langdon R. White to be surgeon.

John D. Lane, Jr., to be passed assistant surgeon.

LXXXIV—110

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1939

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Reverend Joseph M. M. Gray, D. D., Litt. D., chancellor of American University, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we give Thee thanks for all those great spirits who in the past determined the national ideals by which we have been led, for all those adventurous minds who across the years have given our accomplishments distinction. Today particularly we remember that tall figure standing at the beginning of our national history, a light of shelter and of hope. On this his natal day we pray Thee refresh our recollections with new impulses of Thy spirit that something of the dignity which he conferred on public service may be regained in our less reverent and sober day, that something of his far sight may be vouchsafed to these who lead us within the American fashion of our modern world that our national path may be more clearly seen, and that something of his wisdom may preserve our legislators, our executives, and our courts from the confusions born of strife of tongue.

Renew, we pray Thee, to those who govern us the graces of devotion and to us who are governed the patriotism of fortitude and patience. Teach us to incarnate in a bickering generation the truth that no man is alien who is at one with Thy purposes. Inspire our citizenship with tolerance and reinforce our institutions with human sympathy. Keep us aloof from the avarice of banded forces, national and individual. Let us associate with all motions for righteousness throughout a world to which no peoples can be immune. In reverence and in courage sustain us on the path of our noblest aspirations.

We ask in the name of our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 95

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the business authorized by House Resolution 60 incurred by the Select Committee on Government Organization, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $5,000, including expenditures for the employment of experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, signed by the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. That the official committee reporters may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia if not otherwise officially engaged.

SEC. 3. The head of each executive department is hereby requested to detail to said select committee such number of legal and expert assistants as said committee may from time to time deem necessary.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MALADMINISTRATION OF W. P. A.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I have been calling attention to the abuses of spending W. P. A. funds from time to time. Today I wish to move from Cleveland, which I discussed yesterday, to Racine, Wis.

I hold in my hand a list showing the names of 138 aliens who are employed at this city by the W. P. A., with their certificate numbers, and the numbers of the projects on which they are employed. I understand that there are 65 veterans who are eligible for employment in that immediate territory.

Of course, we understand that aliens have been given preference for employment with the W. P. A. in many places in this country. It is a most ridiculous situation, and now that the law prohibits it—but it is still being done—the aliens on the rolls should be taken off and we should clean up that situation. It will readily be seen that if we get rid of the alien cases who have no place on the roll and clean up the W. P. A. rolls, there will be plenty of room and money to take care of needy citizens and let us save $150,000,000 out of the $725,000,000 which was appropriated instead of asking for more money.

If Mr. Roosevelt wants specific examples of how relief money has been wasted, here it is. Let him come forward with clean hands when we attempt to tackle a permanent relief policy later on in the session. Otherwise, his recommendations will be entitled to no consideration from anyone. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and include therein some short statements concerning bills of interest to the people of Puerto Rico now under consideration by committees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Commissioner from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the press of recent days has been carrying considerable self-praise dished out by Attorney General Murphy, the one-time Governor of Michigan; the gentleman who, after 2 years' silence, brought to light a letter which he said he had written but never sent to Homer Martin and John L. Lewis, advising them that the law, which their sit-down strikers had defied for 40 days, must be obeyed—the letter former Governor Murphy, now Attorney General Murphy, said he read to Lewis, although he never has announced that he read or delivered it to Martin, a day or two before the plants at Flint were evacuated by Lewis' sit-down strikers.

The ex-Governor also ignored the fact that, at the time, reserve officers were being sworn in at Flint, with the avowed purpose of ejecting the sit-down strikers by force and that his course of maintaining the sit-down strikers in possession of Flint factories, with the aid of State police and 3,700 National Guardsmen, was about to be challenged and his bluff at law-enforcement called.

Not so long ago the Governor let it be known that he had breakfast with Judge Manton and that, following that breakfast, the judge had retired. Again the failure of the Attorney General to announce all the news was most significant. He neglected to say that a district attorney in New York had previously made an investigation of Manton's conduct and had called the attention of Federal agencies to the judge's misconduct. He let it be inferred that the judge resigned, not because of District Attorney Dewey's investigations, but because he, Murphy, after breakfast, had advised the judge that such a course would be advisable.

On another recent occasion we learned through the papers that Attorney General Murphy was about to create a separate bureau in the Department of Justice to protect the civil liberties of American citizens.

Probably no one in Michigan knows more about the violation of civil liberties, with the protection of the law-enforcing agencies, of which Governor Murphy was the head at the time, than Governor Murphy. If ever any man in high official position winked at the violation of, and connived with those who were depriving citizens of, their civil liberties, that man is Attorney General Murphy.

The press of this morning carries the further notice that Attorney General Murphy, now in Florida—and he seems to be one of those who makes a practice of serving the Government at some place other than the seat of government—has generously announced that J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, will not be fired, but will be permitted to retain his office. Now, is not that generous of Murphy?

Some others would doubtless be pleased with the firing of Edgar, notably Al Capone. But the firing of Hoover is one job Murphy had better forget; and talking about retaining him, when even Murphy would not dare fire him, is a cheap way of assuming a pious attitude.

He might, however, suggest to Hoover that he or some of his agents investigate and determine just how much of the salary which Murphy drew as High Commissioner of the Philippine Islands while he was electioneering as a candidate for Governor in Michigan should be returned to the Federal Treasury.

Murphy poses—and it is a pose—as a friend of civil service. In that connection, let me here quote what was said in the Times-Herald this morning by George D. Riley on the spoils system. He writes:

MURPHY IGNORES STAFF FOR "MAN BACK HOME"

There are two forms of spoils system. One political. One personal. They are identical in the broad aspect, for each gravitates around a personal acquaintance or attachment basis. Neither system is a merit system, for we are told merit means advancement and recognition of one within the service who rises on the basis of true worth.

Thus, when the Attorney General sees fit to reach outside, back home, to bring into Justice a personnel director, he pursues an ancient type spoils system—personal patronage. He knew William G. Brownrigg, his State employment-service commissioner. He now takes aboard for duty here the same man he knew "back home."

The Rockefeller Fueled Civil Service Assembly would never open sessions unless Brownrigg were present. He is a dynamo in this subsidized group, another of the organization darlings of the Brownlow get-up.

We do not question Brownrigg's plentiful abilities and energies. But we do question the propriety of ignoring every man and woman in the Federal service and practicing just what the Rockefeller crowd refer to as local patriotism, which is just what Mr. Murphy does when he appoints one he "knew when."

Scratch some progressives and you find deep-dyed conservatives. The Rockefeller program means inculcation of the so-called British civil-service system, a caste system which permits only the elite to rise within the service. Mr. Murphy has made a great start toward keeping his personnel "heads down" by going back home to the man he "knew when." It all becomes the more sanctified when we know that it is Michigan, the Attorney General's own home State, which ranks tops in this open competitive examination.

These are the physical aspects. The Attorney General may care to explain what really happened. We fail to see how Mr. Murphy can make his selection endure past his own regime.

If Mr. Riley was as well acquainted with Murphy's "sayings" and "doings" as are the people of Michigan, he would realize that, when Murphy talks, an avalanche of pious platitudes flows forth; but when he acts, citizens lose their civil liberties if Murphy's political fortunes demand that course.

Murphy thought he could make the people of Michigan believe he was Little Red Riding Hood's grandmother, but they learned what he really was long before election day and, on that day, they gave notice to the Nation that Michigan wanted him no longer.

In Roosevelt's official family, he is in congenial company and he and his chief are now in a position to carry on the activities of their mutual admiration society without running up a $2,000 telephone bill for Michigan taxpayers to liquidate.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the Record and include therein a short article from this morning's edition of a Washington paper with regard to the spoils system.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in order that all Members may have an opportunity to hear the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] read Washington's Farewell Address, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House. A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 17]

Allen, Ill.	Dickstein	Kennedy, Michael	Rutherford
Andrews	Dies	Knutson	Sabath
Austin	Dingell	Kocialkowski	Sacks

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-four Members have answered to their names—a quorum.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, and by designation of the Speaker, the Farewell Address of President George Washington to the American people will now be read by the Representative from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM read Washington's Farewell Address, as follows:

To the people of the United States.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those, out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you, at the same time, to do me the justice to be assured, that this resolution has not been taken, without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that, in withdrawing the tender of service which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest; no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness; but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of, and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me, have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty, and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to the last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations, and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence, impelled me to abandon the idea.

I rejoice that the state of your concerns external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety; and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country, you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust, were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust, I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed towards the organization and administration of the government, the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset, of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience, in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and, every day, the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more, that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is to terminate the career of my political life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country, for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment, by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging—in situations in which not unfrequently, want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism,—the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts, and a guarantee of the plans, by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence—that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual—that the free constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained—that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue—that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these states, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation, and so prudent a use of this blessing, as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which cannot end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people, is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence; the support of your tranquility at home; your peace abroad; of your safety; of your prosperity; of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But, as it is easy to foresee that, from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth; as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed; it is of infinite moment, that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can, in any event, be abandoned; and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth, or choice, of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have, in a common cause, fought and triumphed together; the independence and liberty you possess, are the work of joint counsels, and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest.—Here, every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The north, in an unrestrained intercourse with the south, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter, great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise, and precious materials of manufacturing industry.—The south, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the north, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the north, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes, in different ways, to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength, to which itself is unequally adapted. The east, in a like intercourse with the west, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water, will more and more find a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad, or manufactures at home. The west derives from the east supplies requisite to its growth and comfort—and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions, to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the west can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength; or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While then every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined cannot fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts, greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations; and, what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union, an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves, which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same government; which their own rivalry alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues, would stimulate and embitter.—Hence likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments, which under any form of government are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is, that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind and exhibit the continuance of the union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union, affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who, in any quarter, may endeavor to weaken its hands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union, it occurs as matter of serious concern, that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations,—northern and southern—Atlantic and western; whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts, is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You cannot shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heart burnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head: they have seen, in the negotiation by the executive, and in the unanimous ratification by the senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at the event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the general government and in the Atlantic states, unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties, that with Great Britain and that with Spain, which secure to them everything they could desire, in respect to our foreign relations, towards confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such they are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your Union, a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute; they must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances, in all times, have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay, by the adoption of a constitution of government, better calculated than your former, for an intimate union, and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and maintaining within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government.—But the constitution which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power, and the right of the people to establish government, presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberations and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency.—They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government; destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Towards the preservation of your government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite, not only that you steadily discountenance irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretext. One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system; and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments, as of other human institutions:—that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country:—that facility in changes, upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion, exposes to perpetual change from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion: and remember, especially, that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours, a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular references to the founding them on geographical discrimination. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind.—It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism.—But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result, gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual; and, sooner or later, the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purpose of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind, (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight) the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils, and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foment occasional riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which finds a facilitated access to the government itself through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true; and in governments of a monarchical cast, patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose. And there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent it bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions of the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern; some of them in our country and under our own eyes.—To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the constitution designates.—But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? and let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect, that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true, that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric?

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering, also, that timely disbursements, to prepare for danger, frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions, in time of peace, to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should co-operate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is essential that you should practically bear in mind, that towards the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes, that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper object (which is always a choice of difficulties,) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue, which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice towards all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct, and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt but, in the course of time and things, the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it; can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan, nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others, should be excluded; and that, in place of them, just and amicable feelings towards all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges towards another an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times, it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty of nations, has been the victim.

So likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducements or justifications. It leads also to concessions, to the favorite nation, of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions, by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils!—Such an attachment of a small or weak, towards a great and powerful nation, dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, (I conjure you to believe me fellow citizens,) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake; since history and experience prove, that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another, cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith:—Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon, to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation, when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion, it is unnecessary, and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, and a liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand: neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary, and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view, that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance, it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect, or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish; that they will control the usual current of the passions, or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations, but if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism; this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far, in the discharge of my official duties, I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is, that I have, at least, believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe; my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both houses of congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound, in duty and interest, to take a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct, it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without any thing more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity towards other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress, without interruption, to that degree of strength, and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration, I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence; and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service, with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love towards it, which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations; I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize, without alloy, the sweet enjoyment of partaking, in the midst of my fellow citizens, the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors and dangers.

GEO. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES,

19th September, 1796.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

BIRTHDAY CAKE OF MAINE POTATOES

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I cannot, in the spirit of this nonpartisan occasion, offer the House a birthday cake today, but perhaps something better. It is a great pleasure for me on this anniversary to commend the wisdom of the present administration in selecting 1,000,000 pounds of Maine potatoes to feed our fighting men down in the Caribbean. These potatoes may now perhaps be properly known as "the fighting Irish." Since we are not able to be with them and their distinguished Commander in Chief today on the high seas, the State of Maine has been most happy to enable you to share their fare by providing an ample supply of Maine "bakers" for the House restaurant today. [Applause.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of business on the Speaker's table and the legislative program of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Wednesday, after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and the legislative program of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address I delivered last Sunday on national defense.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech by the Honorable Harry Woodring, Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 3743. An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. GLASS, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. McCARRAN, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1102. An act to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes.

NAVAL AVIATION FACILITIES

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4278) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4278, with Mr. WHITTINGTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed, out of order, on a nonpartisan, patriotic subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, the birthday of George Washington is a proper time to observe that only two nights ago in the city of New York, where George Washington took the oath of office as the first President of the United States, there occurred a mass demonstration of aliens, many of them wearing the military uniform of a foreign dictator, the greatest enemy in the world of everything that George Washington stood for and of everything that America typifies. Men of the blood and fealty of the hired Hessians of the Revolution. Men of the blood and fealty of the German Embassy at Washington prior to the World War, plotting to incite the sister Republic of Mexico to make war on this country and sabotaging American industry, until they were officially driven from our shores.

Every man in that mass meeting who was in sympathy with it is a traitor to American democracy and government, whether he is still an unnaturalized alien or was born on American soil. In the World War their fealty was to the Kaiser. Now it is to Hitler.

Among other delusions growing out of the World War was the delusion that it had rid us of the hyphenated American, only to find that we have in his place the 100-percent hun, on whose lips the words "my fellow Christian Americans" is nothing less than a barefaced mockery. "My fellow Christian Americans" are the words taken by the press from the lips of the fuhrer in America of a pagan dictatorship which has denied God, suppressed the Bible, persecuted Christianity, and reviled the founder of the Christian religion as "a dirty Jew pig."

They have no more conception of democracy than if no such political philosophy existed in the minds of men, and it is their sworn mission to destroy that Americanism and to destroy that democracy. They are the blood-bound, oath-sworn enemies of everything sacred to America. Article I of the Nazi creed is that "once a German, always a German"; that there are no national boundaries, only racial; and they are carrying on in this country a system of pressure proselyting to effect the unity of their blood for nazi-ism and against America. "The time will come," the American agent of Hitler is quoted as saying at the meeting, "the time will come when no one will stand in our way."

The American fuhrer would do well to recall the famous rejoinder of Ambassador Gerard to the threat of the Kaiser, that 500,000 loyal Germans in America were ready to spring to the defense of their fatherland. "Yes," said Gerard, "and there are 500,000 lampposts in America."

Said Theodore Roosevelt in 1917:

We can have no 50-50 allegiance in this country. Either a man is an American and nothing else, or is not an American at all.

Says Foreign Nazi-ism (KNSAP) in 1939:

Today we know that the German is a German everywhere. Not countries or continents, not climate or environment, but blood and race determine the German mentality. We only know the concept of the complete German who as a citizen of his country is always and everywhere a German.

When I saw the pictures of these uniformed and swaggering minions of an alien dictator on the pages of the morning papers, and read what they said, I felt that if I had the power not one of them would be breathing the free air of America in 24 hours. A man would have to pinch himself to see if he was awake and in the United States. They cheered the names of misguided Americans who are lending aid and comfort to nazi-ism and they jeered and booed the President of the United States and every spokesman of democracy who has incurred the wrath of Berlin. I had rather my name remained forever unknown than to have it acclaimed by such a gathering. If these misguided men who are giving aid and comfort to the enemy were in Berlin and pursued the same attitude toward nazi-ism that they do toward their own Government they would be in concentration camps, or decorating stone walls.

Shades of Washington, must such things be tolerated in the name of liberty on the free soil of America? God save America from Nazi Christian Americanism!

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I want to talk about the problem that we have before us from perhaps a different standpoint from that that has been presented here today. For my own part, I have had 10 years' experience upon the Naval Appropriations Subcommittee, 4 years upon the Military Appropriations Subcommittee, and 6 years' experience upon the Deficiency Appropriations Subcommittee. I have been in close touch with the operations of the Army and the Navy. I have been in close touch with the situation that was presented here immediately after the World War. I have seen how, in connection with that World War, our defense strength was wasted and spent upon projects that could not possibly be of any use to us in that undertaking. In 1917 and 1918 we spent millions upon millions of dollars building ships that could not possibly be of use to us in the war, that could not possibly be finished in time to be of use to us in the war. We spent millions upon millions of dollars building warships that could not possibly be of use. They were poorly constructed, they were poorly designed, they were not effective. What is the situation that is presented to us by the committee that has come in with this bill? If we are facing an emergency, then we are facing an emergency that is not 2 years hence, but that is current. What should we be doing if this bill is to prepare America for defense against such an emergency? We should be confining our efforts to those things that can be and absolutely must be done if we are to meet a trouble of that kind. We should not be embarking upon a program which cannot be of service to America for defense purposes until 2 or 3 or 4 years hence. For my own part, I think it is time to take stock of our situation and devote our energies to those things that can be useful. Take this Guam situation.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. Yes; for a question.

Mr. SIROVICH. The distinguished gentleman from New York calls attention to the millions of dollars that we spent in building a merchant marine during the last World War. Am I correct in that?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. If we had not been so niggardly in our attitude toward the merchant marine for 30 years before that time—

Mr. TABER. Oh, the gentleman's question is not pertinent to this bill and I decline to yield further. The gentleman entirely misses the point of this bill, he entirely fails to grasp that this is a bill to spend a lot of money on such a proposition as this Guam harbor matter, where it cannot possibly be of use for current defense purposes, and cannot possibly be got into shape where it could be useful for 3 or 4 or 5 or 6 years. Referring to a policy with reference to building up the merchant marine for years back in the 1900's does not possibly have any bearing on this situation.

Mr. SIROVICH rose.

Mr. TABER. I decline to yield further. Let me say to the gentleman that this idea of spending $5,000,000 on developing the harbor of Guam at this time is embarking on a program that will take at least 2 years to fix up the harbor. You cannot spend that amount of money in that kind of place and get anywhere in less time. You are just tying yourself into something that if we are facing an emergency is a waste of funds and of energy. When it comes to these stations on the mainland, in Hawaii, and out in the Pacific not so far, you are in a little different position, but when you come to go along and embark on a proposition that cannot be ready to use in an emergency, then you are wasting your money and spending your energy upon something that is absolutely useless and is a waste. I hope when we approach the problem of voting on this bill, and the items in it, that we will consider the question of national defense, that we will consider the question of coordinating our efforts and confining them to those things that can be prepared and fixed up so that they would help us to meet such an emergency.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman explain to the House how he sponsored the other day the staggering of the production of airplanes for 3 years?

Mr. TABER. Because I know and the gentleman knows that we cannot go ahead and build 5,500 airplanes in less than 3 years and have them good and have them efficient. I did that in the interest of national defense. The gentleman supported the position he did in pursuance of that 1917-18 policy of waste and scattering our resources so that our defense could not be as effective as it would if we had a better quality of planes.

That is the situation, and I hope that the gentleman will coordinate the efforts that he makes in his committee to get things in shape so that the defense can be effective and not scattered all over the lot. You cannot go ahead and build a lot of planes right off the bat and step up your production and get the kind of planes that we ought to have in the Army and the Navy. We cannot scatter our efforts all over the lot and do a lot of things that cannot be done in time to meet an emergency, and at the same time do the things that need to be done and that can be effective for defense. I hope the gentleman in the future will follow that kind of policy instead of a policy of driving ahead and spending money regardless of whether it is effective or not.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is arguing now that we should not do this work at Guam because it will take 3 years. The gentleman is by no means consistent with his vote in staggering the building of airplanes.

Mr. TABER. I am entirely consistent, because a staggered production would provide all of the production that we can get out efficiently. The proposition in Guam is something that has nothing whatever to do with defense, and we should not go into that sort of thing.

We should coordinate our resources and get them in shape where we can make defense effective and not wasteful and extravagant, and destroy the effectiveness of it.

I hope the Committee, when it comes to vote, will have some of these things in mind. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 9 minutes.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELOSON].

Mr. THORKELOSON. Mr. Chairman, yesterday a few of my Republican and Democratic colleagues appeared to be apprehensive and expressed fear that Japan might not look favorably upon breakwater construction, dredging, and harbor improvements in the island of Guam. This improvement is to cost $5,000,000. As I sat by, listening, to the many objections of this sound policy, I wondered where our national courage had gone. It took me back to the days when one of our admirals said, "Damn the torpedoes! Go ahead!" I also recalled 1898, when Admiral Dewey signaled to the German commander at Manila to move his fleet from the line of fire or take the consequences. It was on June 21, 1898, when the cruiser Charleston captured the island of Guam. Neither one of these commanders cared about Japan or anyone else, for they had a united Nation behind them. That is what we need today, a united Nation, and united representatives in this Congress to work for the greater interest of the United States instead of raising party animosities. I have no patience when anyone plays party politics for the purpose of establishing a record to prove at a later date that one party was wrong. It is well for my colleagues to bear in mind that the Republican Party is not free from blunders, and that the Democratic Party is wearing the same garment.

The abject fear of those who felt that harbor improvements in Guam was paramount to carrying a chip on the shoulder to invite war with Japan is incomprehensible to me. Japan did not ask the permission of the United States when she sank the Panay, destroyed American property, wounded and killed American officers. Japan did not ask the permission nor did she consider the United States when she destroyed American property in China—yes, in a nation which has been the best customer of the United States.

Yet here we are, cringing and creeping before Japan, when in reality we ought to tell Japan to mind her own business and keep her nose out of ours.

The assumption by some of my colleagues that the road to peace lies in retreat is not supported by history. All nations that have adopted a policy of peace at any price are pitiful objects of past glory today. No nation has been less offensive and more peaceful than China. Where is she today? I may say the same of Ethiopia, of South Africa, of Australia, of Spain, of the past splendor of Greece, and, if you please, the richness and splendors of Egypt. All those nations were active at one time, and willing to maintain the standard before the people, during which period they were prosperous and secure. When they struck the flag and stored their armaments, they destroyed national pride and they left themselves open to attack.

Gentlemen, the President is not an issue with me, and I hold no malice toward him. If his policy is sound, he shall have my support, and if it is unsound, he shall not fail to receive my condemnation. This policy of colonial improvement is not the policy of President Roosevelt. It is instead a national policy in which every farmer, businessman, and laborer in the United States is interested because of greater distribution of farm and manufactured products.

The policy of arming colonies is not the policy of President Roosevelt. It is instead a national policy in which every citizen within the United States is interested. Armed colonies protect foreign markets, protect our merchant marine, furnish safe harbors for repair and ports for redistribution of merchandise for the greater advantage of our own business people. It furnishes employment for our idle men and women, and establishes national pride and greater opportunities for those who possess the courage to go forward.

Armed colonies are the most convincing argument to maintain peace, and the only one that aggressive nations understand today. If we arm the Philippines and plant the Stars and Stripes forever on the rocks of the islands, we have in such action discouraged attack on our own coast to any oriental power which might feel so inclined. Every nation with conquest in mind will think several times before it tries to pass our armed colonies to attack either our coast line or the Panama Canal. This is particularly true of the Canal, because it offers the only route for our fleet from one coast to another.

The President of the United States believes in a good neighborly policy. I believe in the same thing, if everybody understands it. But unfortunately, it is often considered by others as a sign of weakness, and I believe that is clearly evident in the recent Mexican fiasco. That nation confiscates our property, hits us first on one cheek, then on the other, and then kicks us out of Mexico.

I realize that this is not the issue for consideration today, but I do want to call your attention to the fact that nothing is gained by waving the white flag, for the best way to maintain peace is to discourage the other fellow from making war, and you cannot do that with a powder puff.

My reason for deviating from the subject which is actually under discussion is due to the attitude my colleagues assumed on the floor here yesterday. I shall now return to the subject under consideration.

Let us get this thing straight—the Navy is not asking for $5,000,000 to arm Guam, it is only asking for an appropriation to improve harbor facilities for a new mode of transportation, the new commercial air lines. Such request is not unreasonable, particularly if we bear in mind that this little island is paying its own expenses. Guam earned in 1938 $14,166.73, and it bought from the United States $275,000 worth of merchandise, and from other countries an additional half a million more. So it is a good investment.

The United States owns a number of these islands, including 7,083 in the Philippine group, more than 7,100 islands altogether.

I am not in sympathy with attacks on the President, for after all he is not responsible. I am agreeable to cooperating with all the Members of Congress for the general welfare of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to have this opportunity of speaking to the Members of the House on the value of colonies as a market for our products. We are, indeed, in need of colonies and should foster trade with them instead of setting them free and turning their markets over to other nations.

Holland, Belgium, and Portugal—three countries no larger than our smaller States—are prosperous because they own colonies. Japan, France, Italy, and England cannot exist as first-class powers without colonies.

I do not believe anyone here will question this statement, nor disagree with me, when I say that colonies should be acquired and held by us as important outlets or markets for our products and sources of raw materials.

It is, therefore, obvious, that colonies are needed if we contemplate remaining a strong and vigorous commercial nation. Overseas or colonial trade assures us of a permanent and steady market for our production.

Movement of merchandise to foreign markets stimulates our transportation system on land, as well as on the ocean. Stimulation of foreign and colonial trade keeps our railroads busy hauling our merchandise to coastal shipping points, where it can be reshipped by our merchant marine to its destination. Such transportation should be encouraged by Congress because it places each transportation system in its proper sphere of operation—the railroads and inland transportation within the continental limits of the United States and marine transportation from export centers to other countries. In this manner vicious competition between the shipping industry and transcontinental railroads is minimized or eliminated.

Our colonial policy is open to the most severe criticism and the release of colonies is not for the general welfare of the United States but is instead for the welfare of the larger American exploiters, who carry on trade with the United States after such colonies are set free. In other words, our own people are victimized when we abandon colonies because we no longer share in the profits which accrue from trade with them, but we become instead a market for such colonies, after they are free, at the expense of our own producers. That situation is true in Cuba and is evidenced in the large importation of sugar to the United States from American-owned companies operated by American capital at the expense of our own sugar producers throughout the United States.

The fact that our colonies, after being released, can sustain themselves and become prosperous is evidence that colonies are valuable. The fact that they are handled improperly is due to our colonial policy, which is established by Congress, and should not be charged to colonial possessions; so, looking at it again from a selfish viewpoint, after we develop colonies, a certain group of our so-called money changers begin to agitate for their independence, hoping that they may retain their interests and operate free from American regulations, and at the expense of the American producers.

We, the people of Montana, ensconced in the Rocky Mountains far removed from salt water, realize the value of colonies—not only as outlets for our farming and mining production, but as valuable outposts for the protection of our shipping industry. We also appreciate the value as a protection for an important source of food supply; that is, the salmon industry and other fishing industry in Alaska. We also understand that the Pacific islands may become a potential source of food supply in the development of their fishing grounds, and we are in accord with a policy which has for its purpose the fortification of the island of Guam, and its development as a protective base for the islands of Hawaii, and other important points in the Pacific Ocean.

I am not only in favor of spending $5,000,000 for the improvement of the harbor to facilitate shipping, but I am in favor of spending sufficient money to fortify this outpost as a permanent protection for the Panama Canal, the west coast of the United States, and Alaska, including our commercial air routes.

There is no sound reason why the United States should accede to or comply with the wishes of any oriental power that does not live within its own promises and guaranties to nations that have always been friendly with them. I am not looking for war, but we may expect one of two things—submergence by aggressor nations, like Japan and Germany, or combat if we do not develop sufficient strength to maintain peace. So let us add $5,000,000 in addition to that which is now requested, and nail the Stars and Stripes permanently to the masthead in the island of Guam.

I am sure the citizens of Montana are in favor of a first-class Navy and bases from which such ships may operate to the greatest advantage and for the general welfare of the United States of America. I am sure that those of you who are living on the coast of the United States realize the truth of my statement, coming as it does from one who is not in danger of naval attack.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THORKELSON. I yield.

Mr. COLE of New York. When the gentleman says he is in favor of fortifying the island of Guam I wonder if he realizes just what it would cost to do that.

Mr. THORKELSON. It would not cost very much, because Guam can be used only for one purpose, a submarine base.

Mr. COLE of New York. Of course, the evidence showed that it would cost $200,000,000 to fortify the island.

Mr. THORKELSON. It would not cost that much to use it for a submarine base.

Mr. COLE of New York. But the gentleman said he favors fortifying the island, which is much greater than a submarine base.

Mr. THORKELSON. I understand that, too. It is also the duty of Congress to provide for such protection, and justification for such expenditure may be found in the Constitution. Congress, of course, has the power to declare war, but Congress cannot always control and maintain peace, so it becomes the duty of Congress to maintain sufficient military and naval forces to assure peace. Realizing the danger of unpreparedness, the Constitution makes it obligatory upon Congress—

To raise and support armies; to provide and maintain a Navy; to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces; to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions; to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia.

These powers are very important for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

I cannot fail but to remind Congress that it is justified in dredging harbors and maintaining navigation in the island of Guam, and that there is no reasonable excuse for Congress to neglect its responsibility in this respect.

The Marianas Islands extend in a line almost north and south for a distance of some 420 miles, between the thirteenth and twentieth parallels of north latitude, along the one hundred and forty-fifth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich. The 17 islands of the group are of volcanic origin, but the southern members have long been free from volcanic action. Guam, at the southern end of the chain, is the largest and most populous of the group. It lies about 5,100 miles from San Francisco, 3,400 from Honolulu, 1,500 from Manila, and 1,400 from Yokohama. Guam is a possession of the United States, while the remainder of the Marianas Islands are governed by Japan by League of Nations' mandate.

This island has an area of about 225 square miles, being about 30 miles in length and from 4 to 8½ miles in width. The southern part is high and mountainous with a range of hills along the west coast ranging from 700 to 1,300 feet in height. Numerous rivers, with their tributaries, rise in this ridge and empty into the sea on the east coast. The northern part of the island is a plateau ranging from 200 to 600 feet in elevation, with only a few small brooks near Mount Santa Rosa on the northeast coast.

The anchorage in Apra Harbor is 8 miles from Agana, the capital. It is approached by a channel through coral reefs, and with a moderate amount of dredging and the construction of a breakwater it will make an excellent harbor for the operation of both naval patrol planes and commercial air liners.

The population of Guam on July 1, 1938, was 22,314, divided as follows: Native born, 20,880; foreign-born and their families, 755; naval establishment, 679, including families.

The Governor of Guam is a naval officer appointed by the President. The system of government is predominantly naval in character, with a garrison of approximately 570 marines and sailors stationed on the island. The naval government activities of Guam are financed chiefly by the revenues from taxes paid by the citizens of Guam.

Located at Guam is the important cable station of the commercial Pacific Cable Co. It is from here that messages from San Francisco are relayed to the Philippines, China, and Japan.

The Globe Wireless Co. maintains a radio station at Guam, and communication with the United States, the Hawaiian, and Philippine Islands, and Guam are possible through this system.

According to statement rendered, the island is not an expense to the United States, but is, instead, able to maintain itself. Guam imported, in 1938, $635,112.42. Our share in these imports to the island amounted to $274,687.85. We should, of course, strive to obtain as much of the total imports as possible.

The island exported to the United States in 1938 $117,282.18, so that shows a favorable trade balance.

The agricultural products of Guam are copra, alligator pears, bananas, pineapples, oranges, lemons, mangoes, papayas, breadfruit, coffee, limes, cacao, grapefruit, corn, taro, sweetpotatoes, yams, tobacco, rice, cassava, arrowroot, sugarcane, and kapok.

Copra is the principal crop of the island and is the main item of export, although soap, coconut oil, and "aggag" woven products are showing healthy increases. The rapidity of jungle growth over most of the island makes constant clearing necessary, and in the northern part, although the soil is fertile, it is shallow.

It is my desire to enumerate the possibilities that may be developed in this island as a market for our production, and I am sure that, if the island is operated under a colonial policy, similar to that employed by Holland in the regulation of its colonies, the island will show a profit to the United States.

I shall now discuss its greater and more important value to us, namely, that of protection.

Guam is vitally important to the United States from the standpoint of naval and commercial aviation; it is an essential link in any overseas movement of naval patrol planes to the Philippines as well as an important stepping stone in the commercial air and submarine base from which to protect our oversea commerce from the Dutch East Indies, where essential strategic raw materials necessary to maintain our industries are obtained; it is of value as the site of a possible naval station to support the Asiatic Fleet when the United States withdraws from the Philippines in 1946; its strategic position in the western Pacific makes it of inestimable value to the United States as a possible defense base which would act as a strong deterrent to any Asiatic power contemplating a hostile move toward the Hawaiian Islands or the American continent.

It is my desire to call Congress' attention to the value of the Philippine Islands, which we contemplate setting free in 1946. This will be another blunder, which generations hence will regret. A base in the Philippine Islands is absolutely necessary for the development of oriental trade, and Congress should under no circumstances set these islands free without military control over the islands. Much of the production in the Philippines is of inestimable value to the United States, but their most important value rests upon their position in relation to oriental trade and as a protection for the trade routes to the Orient. The Philippine Islands can be developed and become producers of silk and other raw materials which we need in the United States.

The greatness and strength of our Nation depends upon its vigor in trade competition. To sit idly by while other nations absorb foreign markets and even invade our own markets can only end in total loss of foreign trade. It follows, therefore, that if we resign ourselves to the same indifference which has prevailed in China, India, and Africa, the ultimate result can be no different than that which has befallen these nations.

We must, therefore, carry on in the same spirit as our forefathers by establishing markets abroad and protecting our markets at home. To carry this to a successful conclusion, we must promote trade and protect our trade lanes for the general welfare of our own people.

As justification for such policy we need go no further than the Orient. China has been satisfied for several centuries to exist as a recipient of such trade as could easily be procured without any particular effort on her part. In this indifference, national deterioration has been constant—to the point where the people have lost interest in their own land. They have not maintained an army or navy, either for home protection or for protection of their shipping, because they have been indifferent to both. The result of that indifference is evident today by the invasion of Japan and in destruction of life and confiscation of property in China.

Our greatness will, therefore, depend largely upon the interest we take in international affairs and the force we use to establish international respect for our people and for our flag. It follows, therefore, that we cannot retreat, but must instead go ahead as other nations have done before us. We must maintain and operate colonies on a protective basis instead of political expediency.

The income derived from colonies is not different from that earned at home, but it is of greater value to us because it creates wider distribution of our products and aids in the development in land and water commerce.

The nation with the largest merchant marine and with colonies upon which the sun never sets is the most prosperous and secure nation in the world. This is particularly true and applicable to the United States because of its greater land area in North America. We should, therefore, try to secure colonies so that we will be placed in the position of being the most prosperous and secure, instead of trying to get rid of them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Montana has expired.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. THORKELOSON. Mr. Chairman, the island of Guam is 13 miles long and from 8 to 4½ miles wide. There is considerable export trade from the island. The harbor that we are preparing there is the harbor of Apra. It is on the north side of the island. There is a reef lying to the north of it, and with a breakwater on it it will make a very good harbor. As far as fortification goes, which seems to be the fear of the gentlemen here, I can only say that it is not going to be fortified with large guns or any other guns. I want you to bear in mind that the Navy is not asking for money to fortify this island. They are simply asking for money to build a breakwater on the northern side of the harbor so the ships can land without bouncing around in rough seas. That is all the Navy is asking for. They are not asking to place guns on this island. They do not want to use it for an armed base. They want to use it as a safe harbor for the landing of aircraft, and they are entitled to have that.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THORKELOSON. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Is it not planned by the Hepburn Board to completely fortify Guam, and is not the building of a breakwater and the dredging of the harbor the beginning of the fortification works?

Mr. THORKELOSON. It is not.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. What else is it?

Mr. THORKELOSON. It is as I said. The only purpose is to provide a harbor for the landing of aircraft.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That will not be necessary if we are going to completely fortify the island.

Mr. THORKELOSON. We are not going to fortify the island.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Upon the recommendation of the Hepburn Board we are to fortify the island in the future.

Mr. THORKELOSON. I beg to differ with the gentleman. That was not the recommendation of the Hepburn Board. The recommendation is to build a breakwater at the northern side of this harbor so that airplanes may be able to land here, and that is all.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. THORKELOSON. I would prefer to finish about this harbor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana declines to yield.

Mr. THORKELOSON. This harbor is 15 fathoms deep. Toward the shore half of it is only 2½ or 3 fathoms deep. That is from 12 to 18 feet deep. They cannot dredge this harbor because it is filled with coral reef and it cannot be prepared for large craft and large warships. So the only purpose for which it could ever be used would be for ships of light draft. But the purpose of this improvement in the harbor is not for that. It is simply to build a breakwater here so that these ships can land without injury or danger of stoving in the hulls of the ships and the loss of the lives of the passengers.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. THORKELOSON. I yield briefly.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. In the fortification of Guam is it not necessary to deepen to quite a considerable extent, 25 or 30 feet, in order to get your supply ships into the harbor, and is that not a part of the program?

Mr. THORKELOSON. That is not a part of the program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Montana has again expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY].

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, I think I may submit to this House that from the Farewell Address of George Washington and the implication of all his actions as President and as Commander in Chief of the Continental Armies, there must be two conclusions: One, opposition to permanent alliances for ordinary emergencies, and the other, permission or approval of "temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies." I think his references to his profound aversion to "artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes" of Europe's politics and the "ordinary combinations of her friendships or enmities" are well stressed, but I submit his recognition of the fact that there may be permissible departures for our "safely trusting to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies."

May I submit also that the foreign policy of our Government may be divided into two classes? One concerns its detail and content; the other its negotiation or management. In our history there have been three men with a commanding, superb knowledge of foreign affairs. The first President of our country had the benefit of the advice and genius of two of them—Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin. The third is the present occupant of the White House. [Applause.]

It is my opinion that when the merciless sandblasts of history remove the veneer of superficial criticism and display the awful background of world affairs with which he has had to deal that it will accord to him this accolade of worthy placement with those magnificent figures of our colonial, continental, and constitutional development—Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin.

It will be my purpose to bring to you the uncommon sanction from the highest judicial tribunal of our land in the matter of Presidential powers in foreign affairs. That judicial imprimatur of those powers will point out to you the unique avenues of the President's information, unavailable to you and to me. It will give to those extraordinary privileges of his a recognition that will be hardly expected by most people. This will be doubly surprising, for the Court that accords this high prerogative is not the so-called liberal bench with the acquisitions of Justices Black, Reed, and Frankfurter, but the equally so-called conservative tribunal with the predecessors of these new additions—the famous 5 to 4 bench.

To my mind there is nothing so terrifying or so solemn in its functioning as the reception of news, opinions, trends, analyses that pour into our State Department by the minute from every part of the world. For one man to take those with an appraising eye in these days requires rare courage, restraint, poise, and understanding. Much as I may differ with the administration on its foreign policy, I can never adequately point out its rights under the Constitution and the restraint with which it has acted under the most parlous circumstances in our history. To me those hectic hours are far more challenging, far more threatening than the pre-World War days, because we have the horror of that war's diplomacy to give us thoughtful pause.

I would add that despite this tremendous authority in the President, with the exalted endorsement of our Supreme Court, he has employed restraint and caution. Few men in all our history could have been energized, as he must have been in his Chicago speech, to recommend such drastic action; yet once he found the reaction of his people, accept their decision. He has tried to lead, but never has he forced us into acceptance of his ideological beliefs. I am thus confident that once the epidermis of artificial glosses, partisanship strategy, and superficial reactions are examined he will emerge as a superb example of one who had a thorough understanding of foreign affairs.

I departed from my original speech on the rush of thoughts that came to me in the reading of the Farewell Address by my distinguished and learned friend from Fort Worth, Tex., Representative FRITZ LANHAM. I did this so that I may point out the practical implications of President Washington's understanding of the danger of permanent alliances for temporary emergencies and his sufferance of "temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies."

Let me remind you that President Washington was well aware of our diplomatic relations with France. He knew the price we were obliged to pay for the vital clinching assistance that came to us at the Battle of Saratoga from the French. He knew the degradation into which world diplomacy had fallen in his day, and he knew that caution, prudence, and a price were necessary. He, probably as well as all the affected leaders of our country, had little hope that we could obtain a unilateral treaty from France giving us recognition and military assistance. With all the knowledge that those great men had of France's hatred of England they never hoped to drive such a one-sided bargain. They did not.

We paid the price in the treaty of amity and commerce and the pact of a conditional and defensive alliance in anticipation of any war between France and England. In the latter contingency we would fight with France and neither would capitulate with the enemy without the formal approval of the other. On their side France would continue the fight until our independence was won. That aid won the Battle of Saratoga. That help really gave us recognition. These treaties meant eventual victory. I should like to develop the difficulties of these treaties later.

The problems of those alliances are in many ways similar to those of our own day. Within the last month we have seen the air redolent with bristling charges, fantastic inferences, but small proof. Even today in the course of this debate we hear references to foreign policy and what the President says and does not say.

Mr. RICHARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANLEY. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RICHARDS. I want to ask my distinguished friend from Connecticut whom I consider to be one of the foremost authorities on foreign affairs in this House whether or not the House has had any word, or the country has had any word, from President Roosevelt to the effect that he would endorse the proposal to fortify Guam?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANLEY. I yield to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs in whose hands the control of this debate has been placed.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say to the gentleman from South Carolina that the mere fact that bill is here answers his question.

Mr. RICHARDS. I am asking the gentleman from Connecticut his viewpoint on that subject. I do not think the fact that the bill is here is any proof of that.

Mr. SHANLEY. I must concur in the belief of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I suppose that he must have had some contact with the occupant of the White House. I suppose also that in dealing with this Hepburn report there must be an implication that the White House has some belief in its necessity for Guam; and when I use the word "fortify" I probably should add parenthetically that I shall vote for the $5,000,000 carried for Guam in the bill, because I believe it is necessary as an adjunct to our air-commerce stepping stones across the vast Pacific, but not to fortify Guam.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SHANLEY. I yield.

Mr. RICHARDS. The gentleman is aware of the fact that in 1934, I think in March or April, the President sent a message to Congress indicating his policy to be that of abandoning all fortifications in the Philippines. This is correct, is it not?

Mr. SHANLEY. Absolutely.

Mr. RICHARDS. If it is the intention of the President to abandon any idea of fortifications in the Philippines or if it is his idea not to establish fortifications there, is this position with reference to the fortification of Guam tenable?

Mr. SHANLEY. Of course, we are going to withdraw from the Philippines but withdraw where? I do not think the President specifically specified to what island or group of islands we would use as a continental or insular frontier.

Mr. RICHARDS. May I ask the gentleman one further question? Does he not think it is entirely possible that the fortification of the island of Guam would tend toward a change in our foreign policy on account of the fact it tends toward a direct line of defense between the United States and Great Britain's possessions in the Far East?

Mr. SHANLEY. I think if we are going through with complete fortification, which, according to my understanding, means an expenditure of $220,000,000, and making it completely impregnable such as Hawaii, it would result in a change in our foreign policy, the creation of a quasi British Far East Gibraltar.

Mr. RICHARDS. It is reasonable to suppose, then, that we are not going to stop with an expenditure of $5,000,000 for the island of Guam?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes; I think so. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to vote for this $5,000,000. Frankly, I have doubts as to the implications of any further expenditure. The mere fact that it is going to take 2 years to complete, as everyone admits, gives us the opportunity for a breathing spell. No one can speak for the White House, and I think it is a dangerous thing anyway; but we must assume that the heads of our various committees, whether it be the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, or the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, must have some idea that what they are doing will not be displeasing to the President, the Commander in Chief of all our forces.

Mr. RICHARDS. But it is inconsistent with his former statement in reference to establishing defenses in the East if the President does approve this.

Mr. SHANLEY. Only if we assume an implied withdrawal to Hawaii. I appreciate the gentleman's concern.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. May I say to the gentleman that the proposition in reference to the island of Guam has nothing to do with the Philippines. The Navy Department, according to the testimony given before our committee, is of the opinion that if Guam is established as a semi- or quasi-military base, any hostile power advancing across the Pacific would of necessity have to submerge and take Guam before they could move any farther east; therefore the Navy Department believes Guam is a necessary link, like the Alaskan chain, the Johnston Island chain. The Philippines are absolutely removed from any consideration, and I may say that Guam is not a protection to the Philippines.

Mr. RICHARDS. You cannot remove the Philippines from the consideration of this matter.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Navy Department has its expert testimony.

Mr. RICHARDS. If the gentleman will examine the testimony given by the officials of the Navy Department from beginning to end, he will find the Navy Department does not remove the Philippines from consideration because it is elementary that we cannot keep Guam if we give up the Philippines. We have promised to give up the Philippines, so that if we fortify Guam the conclusion to be arrived at is we are going to abandon what we have already promised.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANLEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. In view of the magnificent contribution the gentleman is giving to this interesting discussion, may I call his attention to the fact that we never had a foreign policy until the Spanish-American War, in which we took over the Philippines.

Mr. SHANLEY. I thank the gentleman. That was called the "great aberration" of our foreign policy. The students of our foreign policy, such as Prof. Samuel Bemis as well as Professor Griswold, termed our acquisition of the Philippines the "great aberration" and a blunder. They consider that was one of the great mistakes so far as the American far eastern policy is concerned. May I say that no foreign policy can be definitely stated? There must be some elastic authority given the President. You cannot put him out there with his hands tied. When I am critical I want to be traversing safer ground than exists at the present time.

Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, I wish to yield as much as possible, but may I develop my thought further on the tremendous powers given to the President?

May I say right here and now that we ought not to be deceived by those who charge usurpation of those powers, for there is resident within the control of the Chief Executive more constitutional prerogatives than perhaps in any other branch of the Government? That amazing field of power has been sanctified by a score of Supreme Court decisions. President George Washington fought for those powers just as President Herbert Hoover asserted their possession in 1930. Those powers are unique and unprecedentedly unchecked so far as our system of checks and balances goes, but they are the President's.

There was a time when Daniel Webster could well say that "Politics ends at the water's edge." That time has passed. Today there is as much partisanship in foreign affairs as in farm relief or the tariff. But fortunately the oft-dusted-off doctrine "the defense of States' rights" and "usurpation of power" cannot enter into our international relations. That is fortunate. But let us look at our foreign policy in the light of its historical constitutional development. It should be remembered that prior to the Constitution there was a vast general conglomeration of domestic powers possessed by the confederated States themselves. In essence the establishment of the Constitution meant a practical surrender of various powers to the contemplated Central Government. That is the philosophy of the enumeration of powers. The Federal Government only got what was given specifically and such implied powers as are necessary and proper to carry out the purposes of those surrendered. But this is not so in external affairs.

In their very able book on the Constitution, Magruder and Clair have this to say about the genesis of Presidential powers in the Constitutional Convention and even before that in the Articles of Confederation:

The President has power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur. Congress possessed the sole power of making treaties under the Articles of Confederation. It was necessary for nine States to concur. In the Constitutional Convention there was difference of opinion as to whether the treaty-making power should be vested in the President, the Senate, Congress as a whole, or in the President and Senate. The last view prevailed. The difficulty which has been experienced in getting treaties approved by the Senate after they have been negotiated may reasonably lead to the belief that even the provision which was adopted was an unreasonable check on the power of the President.

But these several States prior to the Constitution never possessed international powers. They could not surrender what they did not have. Whence comes the power of the Federal Government to conduct diplomatic relations?

The Colonies did not have it. It therefore belonged in no uncertain way to the Crown and passed to the Colonies in their collective and corporate capacity. Sovereignty over external affairs never did pass to the Colonies or their later political successors, the States. Sovereignty went to the Union, and this Union was in existence before the establishment of the Constitution, for in the preamble we read: "We the people, in order to form a more perfect Union," certainly a presupposition of a prior union which needed shoring.

It is enlightening to note the use of the word "United" in our early history. In the Declaration of Independence we are "the representatives of the United States of America"; "that these United Colonies." In the Articles of Confederation it is "the delegates of the United States of America"; "the United States in Congress assembled shall have the sole and exclusive right and power of determining on peace and war"; of "sending and receiving ambassadors"; "entering into treaties and alliances"; all of the attributes, as we shall see, of sovereignty in international relations. Yes, we signed the treaty of peace in 1783 with His Britannic Majesty as "the United States of America." Never the "several States," always the "United."

Sovereignty or supremacy in external or foreign affairs means the right to form alliances, conclude treaties, make war or peace, maintain diplomatic relations, acquire territory, by discovery and occupation, speak and hear as a nation, expel aliens, and in our later developments conclude agreements with other nations not amounting to treaties. Of course, all foreign agreements are not treaties. Here is what one authority says:

When our President agrees upon a mutual action with the chief executive of another country without the authority of the Constitution or of Congress, the agreement is not legally binding; it is merely a sort of gentlemen's agreement. For instance, when the Senate refused to ratify a treaty with Santo Domingo providing that officials appointed by our President should collect the customs due in Santo Domingo and pay the debts of the country to prevent European intervention, President Theodore Roosevelt accomplished the same by an executive agreement with the President of Santo Domingo. The arrangement worked so well that the Senate subsequently ratified a treaty making the arrangement legally binding upon subsequent Presidents as well as President Roosevelt. Likewise, President Roosevelt agreed with Japan that he would discourage interference with Japanese immigration to the United States if Japan would refuse passports to coolies. Though this agreement, too, was not legally binding, subsequent Presidents abided by this arrangement until the Immigration Act of 1924, when Congress ignored the wishes of our Chief Executive.

This was a convenient usage adopted by the Chief Executive to overcome a halting tempo in the Constitution itself. It is also interesting to read, in connection with this, the really remarkable, even if indirect, authority in the President.

I quote from The Foreign Relations of the Federal State, by Harold Stokes:

The Constitution of the United States does not describe the organization which shall carry on relations between this country and foreign states, nor does it outline in detail the extent and limits of the powers to be exercised. It vests in the President, as the representative authority of the Nation, the power to appoint Ambassadors, ministers, and consuls, and, with the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senate, to make treaties. He also is the representative of the United States in receiving all ministers and diplomats from foreign countries.

A number of other powers which the President possesses gives him an additional influence over the foreign relations of the Nation. As Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy he may bring the United States into intimate and perhaps dangerous contact with other governments. He may dismiss the diplomatic representative of another nation and thereby affect our relations with the nation concerned. His power of receiving diplomatic representatives may be the means of recognizing a new political community or government—a means which has been employed a number of times.

But the most formal, definite, and solemn recognition of this comes from the early and modern United States Supreme Court. I might say it is the same modern Court that stood the brunt of the reorganization plan, the Court that in comparison to the present Court must be fairly termed conservative—the Court of Sutherland, Stone, Roberts, Hughes, Van Devanter, McReynolds, Butler, Brandeis, and Cardozo. It has said:

In this vast external realm, with its important, complicated, delicate, and manifold problems, the President alone has the power to speak or listen as a representative of the Nation.

It quoted Chief Justice Marshall, architect of our wide centralized power, to this effect:

The President is the sole organ of the Nation in its external relations and its sole representative with foreign nations.

This quotation of Chief Justice Marshall, coming as it did in the beginning of the nineteenth century, and this latest one of our highest judicial tribunal, brackets the great history of our country in a judicial sense. The similarity is astonishing.

If more is needed, we quote:

As Marshall said in his great argument of March 7, 1800, in the House of Representatives, the President is the sole organ of the Nation in its external relations and its sole representative with foreign nations. He is responsible to his own conscience and discretion and the remote electoral vote.

Coming down to the twentieth century to the Curtiss-Wright case, from which we extracted the quotation above, I continue in the Supreme Court's quotations from the famous United States Senate Reports of the Committee on Foreign Relations and their statement, the most thorough study of foreign affairs in our history. They say this about the powers of the President:

He manages our concerns with foreign nations and must necessarily be most competent to determine how, when, and upon what subjects negotiation may be urged with the greatest prospect of success. For his conduct he is responsible to the Constitution. The committee considers this responsibility to be the surest pledge for his faithful discharge of his duty. They think that interference of the Senate in the direction of foreign negotiation calculated to diminish that responsibility and thereby to impair the best security for national safety. The nature of the transaction with foreign nations, moreover, belies caution and unity of design, and their success frequently depends on secrecy and dispatch.

Not content with a quotation on the importance of secrecy and dispatch, the Court elaborates on the exceptional, surpassingly unique power of the President as the sole organ of the Federal Government in the field of international relations. It warns that unless serious embarrassment is to be avoided there must "often be given to the Chief Executive a degree of discretion and freedom not admissible in domestic affairs." Then they come in with the killing blow that seals the knock-out of senatorial participation and congressional curiosity:

Moreover he, not Congress, has the better opportunity of knowing the conditions which prevail in foreign countries; and especially is this true in time of war. He has his confidential sources of information; he has his agents, in the form of diplomatic, consular, and other officials. The secrecy in respect of information gathered by them may be highly necessary and the premature disclosure of it productive of harmful results.

They refer also to the refusal of President Washington to permit the House and Senate to see the instructions, correspondence, and documents relating to the legitima of the Jay treaty. Does anyone doubt that wisdom as elaborated by President Washington?

I personally think this thought of the President as important as that outlined in his Farewell Address. Recall that he had come through one of the greatest and certainly the earliest crisis in our constitutional history—the decision on what to do about the French alliance—the pact that had resulted in rushing to America those indispensable needs for the early campaigns and the aid that clinched Saratoga. Recall also that we hated to enter any agreement involving a tie-up with Europe, but we wanted a recognition of our independence, and we were in deadly need of military aid and protection. We were forced to pay the price—the treaty of "amity and commerce" and the "conditional and defensive alliance," the latter providing that in case war should break out between France and Great Britain we should join arms and pledge to make a treaty only with the formal consent of France. That left a shackled future.

What would happen in case of war between France and England? War came on February 1, 1793. We decided on neutrality. Hamilton desired to suspend the treaties, but Jefferson insisted on their sanctity. Genet came. But France did not decide to invoke the alliance, for a benevolent neutrality was better to France. Genet's activities are too well known to need repetition, but fortunately for us his actions alienated many of those who were naturally predisposed toward France. We squeezed out of a very awkward situation.

Then followed the Jay treaty, which caused an uproar from those who were interested in France. Washington felt these attacks and knew the dangers of foreign sympathy and entanglements. When the House of Representatives demanded the correspondence and documents dealing with the Jay treaty, he refused. Here is his ringing statement of Presidential power and prerogative:

The nature of foreign negotiations requires caution, and their success must often depend on secrecy; and even when brought to a conclusion a full disclosure of all the measures, demands, or eventual concessions which may have been proposed or contemplated would be extremely impolitic; for this might have a pernicious influence on future negotiations, or produce immediate inconveniences, perhaps danger and mischief, in relation to other powers. The necessity of such caution and secrecy was one cogent reason for vesting the power of making treaties in the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, the principle on which that body was formed confining it to a small number of members. To admit, then, a right in the House of Representatives to demand and to have as a matter of course all the papers respecting a negotiation with a foreign power would be to establish a dangerous precedent.

Over a hundred years later President Herbert Hoover, facing the same type of demand, made this reply:

I have received Senate Resolution No. 320, asking me, if not incompatible with the public interest, to submit to the Senate all letters, cablegrams, minutes, memoranda, instructions, and dispatches, and all records, files, and other information touching the negotiations of the London Naval Treaty.

This treaty, like all other international negotiations, has involved statement, reports, tentative and informal proposals as to subjects, persons, and governments given to me in confidence. The Executive, under the duty of guarding the interests of the United States, in the protection of future negotiations, and in maintaining relations of amity with other nations, must not allow himself to become guilty of a breach of trust by betrayal of these confidences. He must not affront representatives of other nations, and thus make future dealings with those nations more difficult and less frank. To make public in debate or in the press such confidences would violate the invariable practice of nations. It would close to the United States those avenues of information which are essential for future negotiations and amicable intercourse with the nations of the world. I am sure the Senate does not wish me to commit such a breach of trust.

My present problem, however, is to only point out the absolute constitutionality of everything the President is doing in the very mooted questions of foreign policy. To my mind, no better preparation for the study of this decision is possible than this book of former Justice Sutherland.

In his last chapter, in a reflective sense on the lessons of the war, he adds this significant chapter:

In this broadened field of endeavor we must cease to think in terms of States and State rights and think only in terms of nationality. We must cease to measure the authority of the General Government only by what the Constitution affirmatively grants, and consider it also in the light of what the Constitution permits from failure to deny. There is no danger that we shall thereby destroy the reserved rights of the States or overrun the domain of local government—against these unfortunate consequences we must always be on our guard—but we shall avoid the unspeakable absurd confusion of having an agency to speak for us upon all matters of legitimate international concern with a vocabulary so limited that upon some of them—and, in the light of our expanded world relations, not inconceivably the most vital of them—it cannot speak at all.

He adds later that—

The complete overthrow of the Central Powers will be followed by an indefinitely long-continued period of peace. * * * The causes of war among nations and peoples lie very deep in the nature of mankind—far deeper than armaments, or land hunger, or kings, or capitalists, or forms of government * * * they are protean * * * they frequently spring from sentiments of the most sacredly justifying character. * * * The fighting spirit is one which it is to be hoped we shall never lose. * * * It is not enough for a nation to desire justice; it must have the will and, when needed, the power to enforce it. * * * It is right to teach the desirability of peace * * * but we should keep before ourselves always the clear danger of war, and at our peril be prepared to meet it. * * * The dove is a pacifist; the eagle is not. * * * The dove falls a victim to rapacity; the eagle is immune. * * * Yield nothing to the aggressor.

He has placed in the book what he thought should be the judgment of history upon our countrymen:

They respected the liberties of others because they were just, and kept their own because they were strong and resolute.

He quotes:

It is highly desirable that we should keep alive the new spirit of nationalism, which has been born of the war, and which is fast fusing the heterogeneous groups of German-Americans and Irish-Americans, and other hyphenated tribal collections, into a homogeneous body of American citizens who are for the first time beginning to realize their essential unity. If no other benefit should result from the dreadful struggle, the firm establishment of this new spirit of national concord would justify every sacrifice we have made, or might have been called upon to make, however terrible; for it is certain that only thus have we been brought to an understanding of, and a deliverance from, the sinister peril of a divided allegiance which threatened our very existence as a separate and independent people.

Here is a quotation from the Curtiss-Wright case which, I believe, will cause more difficulty in its interpretation than anything else:

When the President is to be authorized by legislation to act in respect of a matter intended to affect a situation in foreign territory the legislator properly bears in mind the important consideration that the form of the President's action—or, indeed, whether he shall act at all—may well depend, among other things, upon the nature of the confidential information which he has or may thereafter receive, or upon the effect which his action may have upon our foreign relations.

The decision, of course, was written by Justice George Sutherland, who was a former Senator from Utah, and author of Constitutional Power and World Affairs, a book written in 1919, right after the World War, and obviously in the shadows of extraordinary and remarkable powers of the President.

The book itself has a chapter on War Powers: Nature and Distribution, and another one on War Powers: Extent and Limitations. It is submitted that Justice Sutherland in his book brought out to the fullest that the advice and consent of the Senate only considers the power of the President to make, not to negotiate, treaties. He does admit that the Senate may initiate the first step by passing a resolution requesting the Chief Executive to begin such negotiations by a declaration, but the President consults his own views.

In his opinion—

Negotiation with foreign governments is a matter of such delicacy that it can be carried on far better by a single person, like the President, than by a large number of officials, like the Senate; while the combined judgment of the larger number—including both President and Senate—respecting the value and wisdom of the result of the negotiation will generally prove a safer reliance.

It will be found that much of the philosophy and, in fact, the very wording of his book is duplicated in the decision. I want to say, as a matter of fairness, that constitutional lawyers are somewhat dismayed by the tremendous expanse of the power thus given to the President by this decision. As I said in the earlier part of my speech, it may be necessary to place brackets upon these powers at some future date. For those of us who believe that the Treaty of Versailles fastened upon the defeated nation intolerable financial burdens, unfair unilateral disarmament mandates, and a rapacious handling of colonies, these thoughts of his are illuminating:

The world has grown to a condition of vast complexity, with a multitude of diverse and conflicting interests. Some nations have all the territory they wish and are anxious only to be left undisturbed. Such is the case of Great Britain; such is our own case. Other nations living in cramped quarters are land hungry and long for expansion. Such was the case of Germany; such is the case of Japan. The pressure for an outlet for the surplus populations of growing countries of limited area is not likely to become less, and will always constitute a possible incitement to warlike aggression. There is the problem of the uncivilized and partially civilized races; the problem of the small and the submerged nationalities, and a vast number of other problems which have vexed humanity from the beginning and are not likely to be eliminated in the near future. It is greatly to be desired that some feasible method should be devised for a peaceful determination of international disputes arising out of these and similar conditions whenever they become acute; but the method must be practicable as well as righteous. We would better endure the ills we have than accept any plan, however alluring, whose highly probable failure would result in a revival of the old conditions in perhaps an intensified and more stubborn form. It is preeminently a time and situation for the sort of action which will take us forward securely, even if slowly, rather than to a doubtful ending in great haste. I think, therefore, we shall, in the long run, secure better and more lasting results by a gradual extension of the principles and plans already initiated by the Hague Conferences than by adopting the more ambitious and more adventurous plan now suggested for the League of Nations, including as its distinguishing feature the use of some form of international force. Few countries were ready for such a plan before the war, and there is grave danger that any radical provision for peace enforcement adopted under the present tense and excited condition of world thought will be found unworkable after we shall have returned to a normal state of mind.

I call to your attention that there will be a problem coming before this America of ours within a few years, if not sooner, when there will have to be a determination of how far prerogatives in foreign affairs can be given. I may say that our failure to write into the Constitution something about the right of secession brought on the Civil War. Let me say now, with all the emphasis and stress that I can, that the President of the United States has acted within every one of those proud privileges and prerogatives. I ask any man to show me where the President of the United States in attempting to lead us—although we may consider the path a little devious—has ever pushed us. I have to be convinced that there is any better residence for the control than in the hands of the President. But I will listen—

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan, for I know the question of Guam is uppermost.

Mr. DONDERO. I recognize the gentleman as an authority on this question, but may I ask him this question? Suppose the conditions were completely reversed, and that Guam was a Japanese possession near our shores. Suppose that Japan proposed to do what we are proposing to do. What does the gentleman think the attitude of this Nation would be under those circumstances?

Mr. SHANLEY. A Gibraltarlike fortification I submit would be unwarranted.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield to me also on that question?

Mr. SHANLEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. We have 96 islands, called the mandated islands, that belong to Japan. When the treaty was made Japan promised never to fortify those islands. She will not permit an American to go over there to see them, because she has fortified them in order to be able to make any further excursions into the Pacific which she may deem necessary.

Mr. DONDERO. Was that in violation of a treaty agreement?

Mr. SIROVICH. That was in violation of a treaty agreement.

Mr. SHANLEY. Permit me to quote some authorities on this subject:

Prof. A. Whitney Griswold has this to say in his Far Eastern Policy of the United States, page 317:

By promising not to fortify Guam, Pago Pago, the Philippines, and the Aleutians, the United States virtually ruled out the possibility of conducting offensive naval operations against Japan in her own waters. The same was true of the British promise regarding Hong Kong. Under these circumstances Kato was willing to accept the inferior capital-ship ratio allotted him by the naval treaty. He could do so in the comforting knowledge that the inferiority would tend to disappear should either the United States or Great Britain, or both, attempt to attack Japan from California, Hawaii, or Singapore, their nearest bases.

On the other hand, Secretary Stimson, in speaking of the Washington Conference of 1922, has this to say:

It must be remembered also that this treaty was one of several treaties and agreements entered into at the Washington Conference by the various powers concerned, all of which were interrelated and interdependent. * * * The willingness of the American Government to surrender its then commanding lead in battleship construction and to leave its positions at Guam and in the Philippines without further fortification was predicated upon, among other things, the self-denying covenants contained in the Nine Power Treaty, which assured the nations of the world not only of equal opportunity for their eastern trade but also against the military aggrandizement of any other power at the expense of China. One cannot discuss the possibility of modifying or abrogating those provisions of the Nine Power Treaty without considering at the same time the other promises upon which they were really dependent.

[Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SHANLEY. I thank the generous chairman for this additional 3 minutes. I thought he was most gracious in his first allotment of 15, but this additament is indeed most generous.

Frank Simons, in his American foreign policy in the post-war years, has this to say, that Japan surrendered the Anglo-Japanese alliance in return for a Japanese-British ratio of 5-5-3 and a renunciation by the British of the right to extend her fortifications in Hong Kong and our promise not to expand in the Philippines, Alaska, or Guam. He said:

Thus, in fact, the Japanese threw the British back on Singapore and the Americans on Hawaii as advanced naval bases, and deprived both of them of the power to interfere with their Manchurian demands. Nominally, to be sure, the Japanese tied their own hands by signing the famous Washington treaty, which pledged each of the signatory powers to respect the rights of each other, and China was a signatory power, and to come to council in case any country broke its solemn pledge. In reality, however, at the price of a scrap of paper Japan acquired for herself a free hand in our foreign dealings with China * * *. In some ways therefore the results of the Washington conference were twofold. Japan acquired tactical supremacy in the Far East for her navy. Great Britain rid herself of the danger of sinking to second place in the battleship line without resigning her decisive hold in cruisers, but thereafter there was no reason possible for the United States to defend the Philippines, and it had not yet acquired parity with Great Britain in naval strength.

This served also to reestablish the conviction that American diplomacy had been outgeneraled by American innocence; that Balfour had been able to outgeneral Hughes in Washington as Lloyd George did Wilson in Paris. However, the London Naval Conference of 1930 saw the settlement of the parity issue. This was effected by a conference in advance between Ramsay MacDonald and Herbert Hoover on the Rapidan. The terms of the resultant agreement imposed upon the United States the way of spending approximately $1,000,000,000 in attaining the long-sought equality.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANLEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. Is it not correct that the treaty of which the gentleman is now speaking expired by its own terms in 1936?

Mr. SHANLEY. Under right as a signatory to the Washington Treaty, Japan in December 1934 gave formal notice of the cessation of any continuation of that agreement after its lifetime. Japan, of course, bolted the conference in London in 1935.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANLEY. Would the gentleman permit me to proceed?

I have never approved of what we have done. The Japanese have been the target of every irritant we could possibly throw their way, but they have not been fair either. I do not defend their actions, neither do I defend the blunders we have made in our diplomatic missions. The errors have been made by all administrations. The history of our diplomacy is a reversal of position from one administration to another, because every President and every Secretary of State—and they are all honest, sincere, and logical men, attempting to protect this country—make mistakes. In view of what we did to Japan when we refused at Versailles to give the Japanese racial equality and when we refused to give them naval parity in 1935, I do not believe what we propose to do at Guam can be regarded as an attempt to thrust a dagger into the breast of Japan. We are not making an impregnable fortress of Guam, as the British have in the Far East, especially if only dredging a harbor is considered. [Applause.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, it is a peculiar coincidence that the present bill, suggesting, as many of us feel, a distinct change in our traditional foreign policy, should be under consideration on the day we celebrate the birth of our first President. George Washington's advice is as timely today as it was in the early days of the Republic. His words, "Cultivate peace and harmony with all," command our attention as ominous signs appear of indiscretions which may disturb our friendly relations with other nations.

The bill now before us comes from the Committee on Naval Affairs. It authorizes the Navy Department to establish, develop, or increase naval facilities for the purposes of national defense pursuant to the recommendations of a special board of naval officers headed by Admiral Hepburn.

There appears to be little objection to the bill as a whole. Considerable controversy has arisen, however, over one item, the proposed expenditure of $5,000,000 for naval facilities at the island of Guam, which is within 1,500 miles of Japan. The implications of such a move are apparent. When the reports of the Government's intention were made public they caused immediate and widespread protests at home and repercussions abroad—to such an extent, in fact, that a very large part of the hearings held on this bill were devoted to a discussion of this one item and the part Guam would play in the national-defense plans. The protests are based upon two meritorious objections, the first of which is admitted by naval experts, and the other evident to every impartial observer. The first objection is that Guam is not a necessary link in the defensive system of the country. This is the uncontroverted testimony of Admiral Hepburn, who was appointed by the Secretary of the Navy to head the special board to investigate the needs for national defense. The second objection is that the proposal would be a provocative act, conducive to international ill will and an irritant to the preservation of world peace. No one can deny that it would have the effect of aggravating a situation already tense and delicate.

LXXXIV—111

As a result of the hostility of public opinion to the undertaking, the committee attempted to sugar-coat the distasteful proposal by resorting to the subterfuge that the project was nothing "more than is done year after year by this country in improving our harbors." That contention, I submit, Mr. Chairman, is untenable. Surrounding circumstances, attendant conditions and page after page of the hearings on the bill refute this alleged purpose. Common sense tells us that if this were a river and harbor project, the proposal would come not from the Committee on Naval Affairs but from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, with the Army engineers in charge of the operations. All of us know that the item originated in the Navy Department and that the witnesses urging the proposal were not Army engineers or representatives of commercial airlines or spokesmen for the Civil Aeronautics Authority. Who were the witnesses? Let us call the roll—the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of Naval Operations, the Chief of the Bureau of Naval Aeronautics and the head of the special naval board appointed to recommend improvements for our national defense. Moreover, the expressed purpose of the bill, including this item, is to carry out the recommendations of the Hepburn Board, the board created not for the purpose of river and harbor improvements but charged with the serious obligation to investigate and report on the need for purposes of national defense, for the establishment of additional submarine, destroyer, mine, and naval air bases on the coasts of the United States, its Territories, and possessions. These are the circumstances and conditions, Mr. Chairman, which give the lie to the contention that the proposal is "no more than is done year after year by this country in improving our harbors." Were these circumstances and conditions not enough to refute the sugar-coating effort, we might turn to the hearings on the bill where more than ample corroboration can be found of these convincing circumstances and conditions. Time will not permit quotations at great length from the hearings, but from the lips of the Chief of Naval Operations we learn that the purpose of the item for Guam is among other things, "for the construction of initial shore facilities." The word initial can have but one meaning. Other shore facilities are to follow, and mark you they will be facilities for naval operations. Intelligence and honesty can come to no other conclusion. Read for yourself page after page of the hearings as one after the other of these naval experts, witnesses from the Navy Department, point out the part which they plan for Guam to play in the event of war. I submit, Mr. Chairman, there is something more sinister than the improvement of rivers and harbors in this proposal. Let us clear away the fog and put the question where it really belongs—right into our national-defense program. How does Guam fit into our national defense? It is a small island in the western Pacific, more than 6,000 miles from our mainland and more than 3,800 miles from our Territory of Hawaii. On the other hand, it is but 1,500 miles from Yokahama.

Our concern is primarily with the defense of continental United States. We have been led to understand that our line of defense in the Pacific is just west of Hawaii. With that object in mind, we have developed Hawaii as a great military and naval base. No expense has been spared to make it a powerful base of naval operations. That our defense line was heretofore just west of Hawaii was established a year ago by the present Chief of Naval Operations when he testified before the Naval Affairs Committee that—

The defensive line of the American Navy at the present time reaches from the Aleutian Islands to the Hawaiian Islands, to Samoa and to the Canal.

Guam, you will recall, is more than 3,800 miles beyond Hawaii. What, we ask, has happened to change that line? Why should we have an outpost 3,800 miles beyond an outpost?

The members of the Naval Affairs Committee who have undertaken to justify this intrusion into the Far East made desperate efforts during the hearings to have it appear that Guam was "a necessary link in the defensive system of the country." But their efforts fell flat. Even though they resorted to the most leading questions, trying at every turn to put words into the mouth of the witness, and even though the witnesses were their own selection, the best they could get was that "it would greatly simplify" the national defense. Admiral Hepburn's opinion gave the proposal a body blow when he said Guam was "not essential" to our national defense. To add insult to injury he subsequently testified that the improvements proposed for Guam "were not necessary for defense." I contend, Mr. Chairman, that if this proposal had any justification as a necessary part of an adequate national defense, the very able chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, devoted as he is to the Navy, would not have to hide behind the sugar-coating process of a rivers and harbors project. He would not strike his colors. His flag would be flying. An adequate national defense cannot by any stretch of the imagination require proposals that are not essential nor necessary.

Before embarking on this project we should be mindful that it is but the first step—the Chief of Naval Operations used the word "initial"—in the development of Guam as a naval base, which would involve the expenditure of at least $150,000,000. A recognized authority on national defense takes exception to the use of the word "base" in describing the place Guam would occupy. He declares it to be an advanced salient, which Gen. Hugh Johnson describes as "something like a nose or thumb stuck into the enemy's mouth, where he can bite it off without much effort." [Applause.] At all events, whether it be a base or an advanced salient, it involves the expenditure of a large sum of money for a project neither essential nor necessary to national defense. Mr. Chairman, I have supported consistently every measure looking toward the establishment and maintenance of an adequate national defense. I shall continue to do so. But to embark on the expenditure of $5,000,000 as the initial cost of a project which will cost $150,000,000, and which is not essential nor necessary to our national defense, cannot be justified. Every dollar that is needed for the defense of the Nation should be spent—but not one cent more.

One of the gravest dangers that we face today is the enthusiasm of extremists—pendulum pullers. They are a real peril. They are active and articulate, especially on matters of national defense. There are pacifists who would scuttle every armed vessel carrying our flag. There are those who go to the other extreme. I submit, Mr. Chairman, a wise course will be a more cautious course, a course which will avoid either of these extremes. To maintain armed forces less than those which are necessary for the adequate defense of the Nation invites disaster. To maintain more than is necessary will place us inevitably in the category of an aggressor, creating as it must the suspicions and fears of other nations. And we know only too well that suspicions and fears lead to but one thing—and that is war. [Applause.]

There is but one basis upon which we can justify authorizations for national defense, and that is national need. Authorizations for armed forces beyond the point of national need destroy the hopes and yearnings which our people have had for a pathway of peace. By so doing we join hands with the other maddened war lords in a campaign of carnage and destruction. Is this our mission? By so doing the aspirations which we have cherished and which I believe millions of our people still cherish, for the amicable adjustment of differences between nations are dashed to the ground. Is this our purpose? Have we forsaken our faith that "righteousness exalteth a nation"? Professions of peaceful intentions, no matter how pious and profuse, become shameful insincerities by the establishment and maintenance of armed forces greater than our national need. Again I repeat, what is not essential nor necessary is outside the limits of our national need.

All of us are aware of the tense world conditions. It is not an overstatement to say that they are extremely delicate. Shall it be said that we intend to aggravate the international situation by initiating a project such as this? Are we to contribute an irritant to efforts to preserve world peace? Would it be a peaceful gesture or a provocative move? These are questions that should concern us. They are tremendously important. This is the nub of the whole matter. I believe the overwhelming majority of the American people want peace and that they charge us with the responsibility of maintaining peace so long as our rights are recognized and our good name is respected by other nations. [Applause.] The devastations and disasters of war challenge us to be cautious and considerate today.

Let me fortify my position on this phase of the subject by calling as a witness, Maj. Gen. William C. Rivers, a brilliant Army officer, whose lifetime experience in the Army stamps him as an authority on national defense. In a letter to Senator Borah, he said, "For the United States to establish a naval air, submarine, and destroyer base at Guam near and on the strategic flank of Japan would be, I believe, the most markedly aggressive and provocative military step of the kind which I have seen on our part in the fifty-odd years since I entered West Point." Mark well those words, markedly, aggressive, and provocative. Shall we be considerate or shall we plunge headlong?

Do we intend to accelerate the surge of suspicions, hates, and ill wills which can lead to but one thing—ultimate disaster? Are we to blindly follow the lead of other nations whose courses of hostility threaten our civilization? Dare we no longer be a leader among the nations of the world to translate the emotions of peace and good will into realities? Have we forsaken the faith that was ours that the moral forces of friendliness can be more persuasive than the welter of war? These are the issues involved here today. There is no middle ground. By the approval or disapproval of the project at Guam, we shall make commitments on our national policy which will need no interpretation. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKEKELSON].

Mr. THORKEKELSON. Mr. Chairman, I can see no reason for shedding tears about spending $5,000,000 to improve the harbor at Guam. The Navy Board has stated distinctly the purpose of this expenditure. It is to build a breakwater in the harbor so commercial air-line planes may land without destroying the hulls of the ships.

Commerce is not provocative of war. Commerce is productive of friendship and establishes friendship between nations. The building of a breakwater and dredging of the harbor in no sense can be understood as a measure to promote war.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THORKEKELSON. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Can this expenditure be justified from the standpoint of expanding the commerce of the United States?

Mr. THORKEKELSON. Yes, it can be so justified. It is for that purpose.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it in the picture as far as preparing ourselves for defense only is concerned?

Mr. THORKEKELSON. It is not in that picture at all, because no guns are to be placed on the island. The harbor is not to be dredged to a point where it can take care of large craft. The only purpose of this expenditure is to build a breakwater for the protection of the harbor. This cannot be classed in any sense as a war measure, except for the fact that we have there an air-communications station and a cable station.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman has served in the Navy?

Mr. THORKEKELSON. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And the gentleman has been in that territory?

Mr. THORKEKELSON. Yes; I have.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Are Navy men agreed that this improvement at Guam should be made?

Mr. THORKEKELSON. They are, for the simple reason that we must have some means whereby we can take care of our commercial air lines. We must have harbors where the ships can land. That is the purpose of this improvement. It is not for war purposes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. What is the extent of our trade with Guam?

Mr. THORKELSON. In 1938 we sold to Guam $275,000 worth of merchandise, and Guam bought approximately $500,000 worth of merchandise from other countries throughout the world. Guam pays its own operating expenses each and every year. Last year it earned $14,000 above the ordinary running expenses which are required to maintain the government of the island. This little island bought $275,000 of merchandise from the United States, which comprises farm and other products. It is an aid to the farmers, an aid to the producers, and of general benefit to all business within the United States. Such trade should be encouraged instead of being destroyed. The building of a harbor will not only benefit the people who are living at Guam but will be of inestimable value in delivering our merchandise safely to the shores of the island.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THORKELSON. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to ask the gentleman if there was any testimony before the committee from any representative of a commercial air line and also in what way this breakwater would aid a commercial air line using Guam.

Mr. THORKELSON. I do not know whether there was any testimony of that sort before the committee or not.

Mr. MILLER. The second question is in what way can this breakwater aid commercial air lines using Guam.

Mr. THORKELSON. The harbor is a half moon, and there is a reef lying to the north of it, and at high tide the water will break over and be rough in the harbor itself. When the ships land they land reasonably fast, about 70 miles an hour, and if they hit high waves there they are liable to destroy the hull of the ship or they might develop a leak or even capsize.

Mr. MILLER. That has not happened as yet?

Mr. THORKELSON. It has not happened yet, but evidently they have trouble at times in landing, and the purpose of their building the breakwater is to make it a quiet harbor. That is all. The real value of the island is in the recent expansion of commercial air lines, and air line traffic is not provocative of war but is instead a measure toward peace.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON].

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Chairman, just a word concerning the remarks of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELSON], who preceded me. He said that this was something in the nature of a base for commercial purposes. If it is not a gesture of war, then it is a subsidy for private enterprise, and I want to say to you that one is bad and the other is worse. [Applause.]

Home caucuses of American families are being held nightly all over the United States, and the subject under discussion is, surely Congress will not do anything that will throw our boys into the hell of European or Asiatic war. The voting of the appropriation for Guam at this moment will cause almost every father and mother to have the jitters.

This body, if polled, would be found overwhelmingly against war. If it is against war, how can it explain itself when it makes gestures that may lead to war?

Remember that one of the nations engaged in slaughtering human beings at this moment will not permit you to reach the stage where you will vote "yes" or "no" on war. This particular nation will start its war without a declaration and dispose of it as an "incident." Hence, we should give that nation no excuse for the explanation that war was started because of our own aggressive acts.

THE PHILIPPINES ENTITLED TO INDEPENDENCE

Let me discuss the Philippines question just a bit. It became an American question during the first administration of William McKinley. He insisted that we were in the Philippines only until such time as they were qualified to take over their own government. This declaration, similarly made by all Presidents, reached its acme when Woodrow Wilson, in 1920, said:

Allow me to call your attention to the fact that the people of the Philippine Islands have succeeded in maintaining a stable government since the last action of the Congress in their behalf, and have thus fulfilled the condition set by Congress as precedent to a consideration of granting independence to the islands. I respectfully submit that this condition precedent having been fulfilled, it is now our liberty and our duty to keep our promise to the people of those islands by granting them the independence which they so honorably covet.

Only yesterday on the floor of this House a Member declared, in defiance of all statements made by all administrations, that we have got to hold the Philippines, meaning thereby that Congress should make the appropriation which will lead eventually to an attempt to fortify Guam.

THE FOREIGN POLICY OF OUR FOUNDING FATHERS

I long for a leadership that will bring us back nationally to the doctrines of the founders of this Republic as to our foreign policy. I want our leaders to feel on the subject just as George Washington did. I want them to feel just as Thomas Jefferson felt. We think of savages over there in the Far East, but remember that Jefferson once referred to European war lords as cannibals and said, "The cannibals are eating each other again." He had reference then to Turkey and Russia. Jefferson and Washington warned us to keep out of foreign affairs except peaceful pursuits. We want, today, a leadership that will make us isolationists of the kind that Thomas Jefferson and George Washington were. [Applause.]

In making the peace settlement with Spain, our Government paid $20,000,000 in cash for the cession of the Philippines, Puerto Rico, and Guam. Guam was the only one of the Ladrone Islands ceded by Spain to the United States. Subsequently Spain sold the other Ladrone Islands to Germany for $4,875,000.

Following the World War, the islands thus acquired by Germany were mandated under the Versailles treaty to Japan, which has since exercised jurisdiction. It is significant that high naval officers appearing before the House Naval Committee were unable to say whether or to what extent Japan has fortified them.

JAPANESE REACTION TO WASHINGTON TREATY OF 1921

It is unfortunately true that our relations bearing upon Asiatic situations have consistently given affront to the Japanese. They have never forgiven us for the Exclusion Act. They blame us for the peace following the Russo-Japanese War. They blame us for the Washington Treaty of 1921 at which the 5-5-3 naval ratio was agreed upon.

Of Japanese reaction to the Washington treaty, we learn from Powerful America, a book written by Edward J. Young, of the staff of the New York Times, that—

The Japanese delegates went home to be met with a riotous demonstration of patriots who believed they had betrayed their country. They became marked men, the targets of the nationalists, militarists, and navalists, who refused to accept the settlements as binding in the future, and regarded them as arrangements to be upset as soon as Japan could make itself strong enough to defy Britain and America.

Are the problems of today the fruit of secret understandings reached in the past? The late Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of the New York Times, had conferred prior to the Washington treaty with Lord Lee, of England, and was "startled" when told that the English Government "would wish to have it unofficially communicated to Washington that they were prepared to abandon their traditional policy of a two-power navy and enter into an agreement with the United States for equality."

Lord Lee discussed with Mr. Ochs "the fear of the United States of a possible conflict with Japan," saying that, "under such an arrangement as he proposed, the United States could, if it thought necessary, concentrate its Navy in the Pacific Ocean and the English Navy could be relied on for protection in the Atlantic Ocean."

It was the recognized pro-English attitude of the New York Times that encouraged Lord Lee to suggest this naval understanding to the American publisher.

Mr. Young suggests in his book that "other revelations on the secret negotiations attending the conference will come in time."

PHILIPPINES CANNOT BE SUCCESSFULLY DEFENDED

On the question as to whether or not the Philippine Islands can be successfully defended by the United States in the event of a war with Japan, it is worth while to consider their location, characteristics, and their vulnerability.

The Philippine Archipelago consists of 7,083 islands, 4,622 of which are unnamed, and the coasts of many of which are uncharted. Only 342 are inhabited; 462 have an area of more than 1 square mile, and 6,621 have an area of less than 1 square mile. The total land area is 114,400 square miles. These islands extend 1,152 statute miles north and south, and 682 miles from east to west. They have a coast line of 11,444 miles, compared with the 13,000-mile coast line of the United States and the 18,000-mile coast line of Japan. There are 21 fine harbors and 8 landlocked straits. The coasts are, as a rule, bordered with coral reefs, and but few of the harbors are easy of access. The largest, Manila Bay, has an area of 770 square miles and a circumference of 120 square miles. It is too wide for safe anchorage and would be difficult to adequately fortify. An aggressor nation could easily seize and fortify several of the principal harbors, and it would be practically impossible to prevent an invasion and exceedingly difficult to dislodge the invader.

For every square mile of territory there is a mile of coast line to defend. The invaders could quickly lay mines in the entrance to the harbors and along the lanes of ocean traffic. It would not be difficult to place long-range guns on the shore which could be utilized with telling effect on our vessels should we attempt to displace the invaders.

It would cost at least $5,000,000,000 to fortify a few of the larger islands if we are to prevent their capture in the initial stages of a war with any first-class power. It would also be necessary to station in the Far East a naval force largely in excess of our present entire Naval Establishment. Reference has been made to the fact that Great Britain has, at an expenditure of several hundred million dollars, fortified Singapore, but that was child's play compared with adequately fortifying the Philippine Islands so as to resist the attack of a world power. The location of Singapore is ideal for defense, and at a comparatively small expense it can be made invulnerable. Singapore contains only 206 square miles, with a short shore line, a small territory in one block, well adapted for a safe naval and military base. But, as I have pointed out, the Philippines have a shore line of 11,444 miles, and the territory to be defended contains 114,400 square miles, and covers an area 1,152 miles long by 682 miles wide. In all the tide of time, no nation has ever attempted to fortify such a large area, and not only would the cost be a tremendous burden upon the American people, but the construction of these defensive works would require at least a quarter of a century.

It will not be denied that practically all students of military and naval affairs, and all other persons who have made a study of the subject, agree that the United States cannot defend and hold the Philippines should we, unhappily, become involved in a war with Japan. A few years ago Gen. James Parker, of the United States Army, spoke of the Philippines as a "strategic weakness" easily "captured from us." Gen. Enoch H. Crowder, who served in the Philippines, 1898-1901, and who during the World War was provost marshal general in charge of the selective draft system, stated that in case of a war with Japan there would be no attempt on the part of the United States to protect the Philippines, and if they should be captured we could not retake them without too great a cost. Frank G. Carpenter, the world traveler and a newspaper correspondent of international reputation, in a syndicated article published a few years before his death, stated that in the event of war between Japan and the United States the former would overrun and occupy the Philippines, and that the United States could only overcome that by the expenditure of at least $50,000,000,000 and the loss of perhaps two or three million American lives. I am quite confident that he underestimated the price the American people would have to pay, in money and blood, to hold these faraway possessions.

In recent years the great weight of opinion among high-ranking officers of the Army and Navy is to the effect that it would be practically impossible for us, in a war with Japan, to hold the Philippines; that they could not be recovered without an expenditure of blood and treasure unparalleled in the history of mankind.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANNON. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Does the gentleman recall the historic incident of President Roosevelt writing a letter to Secretary Taft, who was then, I believe, Secretary of War and had been Governor General of the Philippines, telling him to get out of the Philippines as soon as possible?

Mr. SHANNON. Yes; I do.

Mr. CULKIN. I think that letter is in the RECORD.

Mr. SHANNON. I think I have it in the speech I have here.

Mr. CULKIN. He stated it was impossible to defend that line because it was too long.

Mr. SHANNON. Yes; and many others like him have said the same thing.

Mr. CULKIN. That was Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. SHANNON. That was Roosevelt No. 1.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANNON. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman feel or believe that the Philippines are fully cognizant of the situation which the gentleman is so well describing, and does the gentleman not also think that the Filipinos have reconciled themselves to the philosophy that in case of trouble the United States will not protect them, and for that reason they are proceeding to ally themselves with Japan just as rapidly as they can?

Mr. SHANNON. The gentleman did not say that yesterday in his speech. What the gentleman said was, get us in.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Oh, I did not say that, and I challenge the gentleman's statement.

Mr. SHANNON. What is it the gentleman did say?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask the gentleman to read the RECORD.

Mr. SHANNON. I heard the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is in the RECORD, and he does not have to dispute it. The gentleman can take the facts out of the RECORD.

Mr. SHANNON. I am opposed to Guam being in this bill. It means trouble, regardless of what we say or what is said in the Philippines.

OUR "HEEL OF ACHILLES"

This is what President Theodore Roosevelt said:

Any kind of position by us in the Philippines merely results in making them our heel of Achilles if we are attacked by a foreign power. They can be of no compensating benefit to us. They are a source of weakness to us.

Secretary of War Garrison and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge in 1915-16 declared that the Philippines are a military liability to the United States. Gen. J. Franklin Bell declared in 1913:

The possession of the Philippine Islands is not in the slightest degree necessary to the welfare of the United States insofar as the military or strategical requirements are concerned. They are an absolute military weakness to the United States.

And Secretary of War Weeks declared in 1924:

If I were going to view this question entirely from (the standpoint of) military or other benefits to the United States, I would say, let the Philippines go.

For many years the Navy League crowded the columns of our newspapers with articles in which it was boldly asserted that in a war with any great foreign power our loss of the Philippines would be inevitable, and while much of this publicity was designed to stimulate public sentiment in favor of the building of a United States Navy comparable with that of any other nation, still no thoughtful student of Philippine affairs and of world conditions has ever denied our absolute helplessness and inability to hold the Philippines in the event of a war with Japan.

JAPAN A VIOLATOR OF TREATIES

I quote from testimony in a hearing before the House Committee on Insular Affairs in 1924:

How can they have forgotten, or how can anyone forget, that during the life of those who are still children, Japan, within 6 years after solemnly guaranteeing the integrity of Korea, absorbed and subjected that country of 15,000,000 people as completely and ruthlessly as did any monarch in the ancient world.

And the record of Japan in Manchuria, and later in China, further convincingly demonstrates that no nine-power pact, no solemn treaty or national pledge of any character, will be kept by Japan in its unalterable determination to ravish the Orient and establish unchallenged Japanese supremacy in the Far East.

As Cochin China or French East India, Singapore, and Netherlands India at the present time constitute a barrier to Japan's penetration of the East Indian Archipelago, in like manner the Philippines are directly in the path of the Japanese march toward the Tropics, and sooner or later the United States will find itself in a war with Japan over the possession of these rich but defenseless islands.

The Japanese statesmen consider the Philippines as the sword pointing at the heart of Japan. I quote from Parker Thomas Moon, who, in Imperialism and World Politics, said:

The Philippines were in Japanese eyes a naval outpost which could be only of use against Japan in an offensive rather than defensive operations.

Undeniably, Japan is very much concerned over Great Britain's fortification of Singapore, and if we should foolishly determine to fortify the Philippines, Japan would undoubtedly take measures to prevent our successful consummation of such a project.

Obviously, in the event of a war in the Orient, the Philippines would be a liability rather than an asset. The initial expenditure of $5,000,000 in Guam is a foolish waste of money unless the American people are prepared to tax themselves to the extent of many billion dollars and to sacrifice several million American lives to hold these oriental possessions.

Yesterday a Member of this House, in speaking on behalf of the Guam project, remarked:

Why, just think; there would only be $5,000,000 involved at the outmost.

AMERICAN LIVES MORE IMPORTANT THAN DOLLARS

I have something far more precious than dollars in mind; I am thinking of the lives and welfare of American boys who may become involved through this seemingly innocuous proposal.

We are told that the construction of these "improvements" at Guam would have no warlike significance. Why, then, was it incorporated in this naval bill, and why was it sent to the Naval Committee for consideration? Ordinary improvements of this nature are properly matters of consideration by the Rivers and Harbors Committee, a committee with no military implications.

Guam is only a relatively short distance from Japan. What would be the reaction of the American people if Japan were to undertake the preparation for military purposes of an island so close to our shores? This Government would, I feel sure, lose no time in massing its naval forces to prevent such a threat to its safety. To me it seems obvious that we are about to do the thing which we would not permit Japan to do.

Every American boy will have a right to hold his Congressman responsible for his attitude on this question. He must look to his Congressman for representation, and he will wonder why common sense was not used, first, in the selection of the bill in which to include this project; and, second, in the selection of the time for improvements at Guam. He will wonder why a time was selected when such improvements would inevitably be looked upon as an unfriendly act; a time when the whole world trembles lest war be in the making.

This boy stands ready to do his duty, to defend his country in time of need. But would he not be justified in feeling that his Congressman had failed him if he voted for a project of this kind at a time when ordinary common sense should warn him of its dangers?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANNON. Yes.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I appreciate the interest of my colleague in the cause of peace and ask him what he would suggest that we do with Guam, which is a part of our country.

Mr. SHANNON. I refer the gentleman to what every President, up to and including the present one, has said about Guam. The gentleman can get his information there as to what we should do with Guam and the Philippines both. I cannot make it clearer than they did. If the gentleman wants me to answer it, I will answer it in this way: I heard John Sharp Williams one day in the United States Senate talk on a similar question. It was a naval question like this. We were having trouble in Mexico at Tampico. The American fleet went into that harbor and was not given the customary salute. Naval officers took exception to this lack of proper respect. Now, Mexico at that time was not even recognized by us as a government, yet the naval group wanted this country to go to war with her because of this affront. John Sharp Williams said, "You do not recognize Mexico as a government, yet because you were not given a proper salute you want us to fight." And I say to the gentleman as my answer to him about Guam, what John Sharp Williams said on that day of long ago: "All the naval punctilio this side of hell, and Guam itself, are not worth one American boy's life." [Applause.]

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. That does not quite answer the question.

Mr. SHANNON. I know, but I have answered it in my way.

Of course, the Congressman does not know who injected the Guam issue at this particular time.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANNON. Yes.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. And who does the gentleman say did inject it?

Mr. SHANNON. Wait until I have finished my speech and the gentleman will get it. That information is withheld from him. And his response to the boy can only be, "I answered the call of the man whose name I do not know, and he was simply relaying the call from French Cochin China, fairly well fortified; the Dutch East Indies, not fortified at all; Australia, well fortified; and Singapore—oh, ever so well fortified. And I answered the call of ever so many dependencies of Great Britain. I answered the call by putting Guam in this bill.

"But I haven't forgotten you. I will remember you in time." Of course that will be later and will be somewhat similar to the bankers' meeting held in my community. They had a magnificent spread and after they had well wine and dined, one banker arose and said, "Mr. Chairman, we have forgotten something." The chairman asked, "What is it?" The banker answered, "We have forgotten the poor."

The chairman said, "Yes, indeed. And what would you suggest?" The banker replied, "I suggest we give three cheers for the poor."

And so, when the boy answers the draft, he will not be forgotten. Oh, no. And when the boy marches away to the hell of war in Europe or Asia, the Congressman will be there to pat him on the back and say, "Three cheers to you, brave fellow." [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Izac].

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, in the last session of the Seventy-fifth Congress we passed an act, section 10 of which reads as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board consisting of not less than five officers to investigate and report upon the need for purposes of national defense for the establishment of additional submarine, destroyer, mine, and naval air bases on the coast of the United States, its Territories, and possessions.

(b) The Secretary of the Navy is further directed to cause a report of the board authorized by this section to be transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives during the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

We have before us, at least I am sure every one was given a copy of the letter from the Secretary of the Navy transmitting this report, and it will be noticed that this report is signed by six or seven high ranking naval officers, several of whom I know personally. When Congress assigns a job to a board of naval experts, you can be assured of one thing, and that is that the board is going to come back with a report that is absolutely honest and has the best interest of the country at heart. So I suggest that everyone read the letter of the Secretary of the Navy and the report of this board. However, to refresh your mind on one of the points raised about this question of Guam—and Guam, as you know, is one of the stations recommended for an initial development—we find on page 28 of the report a statement that on December 18, 1919, in other words, a few months after the close of the World War, when we still had the lessons of that war vividly before us, a joint Army and Navy board recommended that Guam be fortified and garrisoned adequate to its defense against any force that could be brought against it, and that a first-class naval base be prepared in Apra Harbor.

Three years later we decided that only one thing more was needed to make the world safe for democracy, and that was the disarmament conference which was held in the city of Washington. In that conference we did our part. This country, in fact, did more than its share. It not only agreed to the destruction of many of the finest men-of-war that any nation had ever projected or built, but we also entered into a treaty that said "we would not fortify Guam." Mind you, in the opinion of the people of this country who have the best understanding of national defense it has always been considered that Guam should be fortified; but we were willing to sacrifice that, because it would make for good feeling among nations, and especially would it appease Japan.

I have been hearing that Japan will have its feelings hurt if we should go into Guam and dredge out a harbor sufficient for a few submarines and seaplanes and the like. But let me point out to you that Japan utterly ignores the Nine Power Treaty. She utterly ignores the fact that she may be acting ill-disposed toward other nations. I do not see for the life of me why she should contend at this time that we were doing something that was unfriendly and that it would make her any more angry toward us than apparently she is at the present time, because, if she wanted our good will, all she would have to do would be to live up to the provisions of the Nine Power Treaty, keep open the open door to China, and just treat the rest of the nations that agreed on the integrity of China as they ask that they be treated.

Now, let us look at the situation of this island of Guam. Do you realize that Guam lies 1,450 miles from Tokyo? Do you also realize that the Azores are nearly that far distant from the city of Washington? Still, if Portugal happened to be a first-class nation today and wanted to fortify the Azores and put them athwart the air line and the sea line of Europe, we could not say a word about it. I grant that Guam lies on the flank of Japan. It will nullify any attempt of hers, if we want to use it, looking to the reduction of the Philippines. But I am not so much interested in the Philippines, because if this country wants to give complete independence to the Philippines, wash our hands of their affairs, I am perfectly willing to go along; but I would still be in favor of this base at Guam, and I will tell you why. All of us hope there will be no wars—certainly not in our day. I want to calm the feelings of the American people by saying I do not think there is going to be any war in the near future in which we will have to engage. I cannot see it at all. So what I say is not predicated on the fact that I think we are going to have a war in the very near future; but if there comes a time when we do have to go to war, I will say to the gentleman from Missouri, for whom I have the greatest respect, that he will save American lives by having that outpost of Guam, because that outpost means that no oriental power will ever cross that line until the outpost is reduced. That outpost is not going to be reduced, because if we fortify it properly it will hold out until the American Fleet places itself in front of the enemy. Why do we have the American Fleet? It is to interpose itself between the enemy and our beloved country. Its objective is to search out and sink the enemy wherever it may be found. I want that enemy to be found as far away from the shores of this country as is possible. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman would agree with the philosophy that if Germany was our enemy, the Rhine should be our frontier?

Mr. IZAC. I should say yes, if some friendly country on the west of the Rhine would like to go over and rescue us from the necessity of sending our boys over there. I would be glad to have them do it. [Applause.]

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I will ask the gentleman if John Paul Jones did not ride into the English Channel and carry the fight of the Revolutionary War to England, and that probably won the war because we had sunk their shipping?

Mr. IZAC. Rather than on the shores of the United States; yes. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. COLE of New York. The gentleman has referred to the membership of the Hepburn board which made the recommendation to fortify Guam, and apparently has complete confidence in the expert opinion and judgment of the membership of that board. I wonder if the gentleman is familiar with the fact that the chairman of the board, Admiral Hepburn, himself recommended that if anything is done in a military way at Guam it should be done to the limit rather than piecemeal, as is provided for in this bill?

Mr. IZAC. I agree with the admiral's findings. I should say that while we are engaged today in a discussion of only the dredging and preparing of a harbor, let us say, for seaplane, submarine, and tender occupancy, nevertheless we have there a wonderful asset. Guam is a wonderful asset, and if we feel that the keeping of foreign war away from our shores is worth a quarter of a billion dollars, I believe this country is going to spend that amount of money and properly fortify it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a great deal of misunderstanding about the item of Guam in this bill, and I think we are making a mountain out of a molehill. A great deal has been said about the foreign policy involved. As a matter of fact, no foreign policy is involved in this legislation at all as proposed.

The bill is before us because of the action of the Congress last year in expanding the aviation arm of the Navy. We required that there should be not less than 3,000 airplanes in the Navy. In order to build up to that program it is necessary that the Navy provide the air bases from which these planes will train and operate. It is unfortunate, perhaps, that Guam is included in this particular bill, because it is not the intention nor the proposal to establish a naval air base at Guam. The proposal to dredge the harbor of Apra and build a breakwater, which is all that is involved in this bill so far as Guam is concerned, was recommended by one of the bureaus of the Navy to the Navy Department 3 years ago, long before the Hepburn Board was ever created or conceived.

Guam is one of the regular stops on the trans-Pacific air line. Pan-American is the only line now operating in the Pacific, but there will undoubtedly be competitors as time goes on. Guam is one of its regular stops. They have built a hotel at Guam and it is a regular overnight stop of the Pan-American route.

America has pioneered in the merchant marine of the air, and we are proud of our trans-Pacific and South American service. Soon we are to have a trans-Atlantic service. If America is to continue to keep her superiority in the air and maintain it, it will be necessary that we pay the bill, as proposed in this item. While Pan-American ships are able to operate at the harbor of Guam now, with the newer type of ships they intend to put into service it will be no longer possible for them to operate on this harbor unless some dredging is done and unless a breakwater is built, because these big ships cannot take off from this harbor. There are coral heads in the harbor that will have to be removed, for these ships need from 3 to 4 miles in which to take off. Such a free seaway does not exist today because of these coral heads.

There is no proposal to make a naval base out of this island. There is no proposal even to establish a naval aviation squadron there. What we are proposing to do is absolutely essential, independent of everything else, if we are going to continue to have trans-Pacific airplanes operate.

We all recognize the necessity of increasing our aviation facilities. We recognized this last year. I think it is just as essential today to have an adequate air force as part of the Navy as it is to have any other element in the Navy. There is no departure in national policy to dredge a harbor at Guam as a civil project and then permitting naval planes to go there, when the harbor is dredged, in their training program. They can go any place in America today. There is no foreign policy involved in that. Much mystery seems to be implied because of the fact that the Navy is going to do this dredging, and sinister purposes are attributed to the fact that this item is in a Navy bill. If you will only understand that the island of Guam is a naval island, you will understand why it is put in this bill. Guam has a peculiar status in our American body politic. There is no civil administration in the island of Guam. It is a naval island. Every bit of public works done in Guam is done by the Navy. Any relief administered in Guam is administered by the Navy. Any work of any kind in Guam is done under the administration of the Navy. It is a naval island, and the Governor of the island is a naval officer. There is nothing new about this fact, because for 40 years Guam has had this status and no question has been raised about it. If the harbor is dredged, it should, of course, be dredged by the Navy. I do not intend to stand before you and say that this project is self-liquidating. It will not be, because the expenditure of $5,000,000, while it will be of tremendous assistance commercially in our airplane traffic through Guam, will not pay its own way. It will, however, be very cheap expenditure to provide the additional training facilities for our naval planes in time of peace.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. If the dredging at Guam has to be done by the Navy, I do not understand why similar dredging at Midway was done by the Army engineers.

Mr. MAAS. I will explain that. We had two treaties with Japan. One was a specific treaty between the United States and Japan which had nothing to do with the arms-limitation conference, which was entirely independent of that and which still is in effect, which prohibits the fortification of the mandated islands; the other, the Washington treaty, prohibited our making any improvements in our island possessions excepting Hawaii. Midway is considered a part of Hawaii, but to lean over backwards, so there would be no question about it, that work at Midway was done by the Army engineers. It could have been done by the Navy, but the treaty was still in effect, and to eliminate any possible question of doubt the Army did it. The Army could do it in Guam. The proper procedure in the case of Midway, of course, would have been for the Navy to do it, but in order to avoid any possible implication the Army did it; we leaned over backwards so as to comply with both the spirit and the letter of our treaty obligations.

Mr. COLE of New York. Can the gentleman give us any other instances where the Navy has dredged a harbor purely for the accommodation of commercial traffic.

Mr. MAAS. No; I do not think the Navy has previously done it. There are only a few islands controlled by the Navy.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. HESS. Is not the reason that this item is contained in this bill, a naval bill, not only because there will be dredging of the harbor but construction of shore facilities for the Navy?

Mr. MAAS. No; that is not true. There are no shore facilities of any peculiar use to the Navy. They are necessary for any operation of the harbor even commercially and they could just as well be built by the Army engineers; but the proper, the fair, the square way to do it was to have it done by the Navy; and the Navy came forward without subterfuge and put their cards on the table, and told us what they wanted to do. Do you want them to trick us and hide their purpose from us?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. I refer the gentleman to the bill we had before the committee, H. R. 2880. That is the only bill we had before us in the committee. I refer particularly to the language at the top of page 2:

Toward accomplishing the recommendations made by the board pursuant to section 10 of the act.

Section 10 has to do with the board known as the Hepburn board. Does the gentleman mean to say here that in view of the statement of the chairman yesterday, namely, that paragraph 1 of that report authorized the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain aviation facilities in line with the recommendation of the board of officers appointed in accordance with the act of May 17, 1933—

Mr. MAAS. I know the gentleman's point. I get his point.

Mr. CHURCH. Does that mean, in view of the testimony of Admiral Hepburn, that all of this should be done?

Mr. MAAS. I hope the gentleman will not take any more of my time. I will explain that. The Hepburn Board recommended something entirely different from what the committee is proposing. The Hepburn Board went way beyond what the committee is recommending. True, the board's proposal would require the work the committee is proposing, in any event. That would be part of it. But the committee did not bring in a bill to carry out the Hepburn Board's recommendation. That is not the bill the committee brought forward at all. We brought in a new bill, a committee bill.

Mr. CHURCH. But that is the report before the House now?

Mr. MAAS. The gentleman is correct. It is in line with it; but "in line with it" does not mean it follows it to the letter, and we did not follow it to the letter.

Mr. CHURCH. It says "toward accomplishing that purpose."

Mr. MAAS. Yes; toward accomplishing that purpose; but not in itself the complete accomplishment of the purpose.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. I believe every Member of this Congress concedes that America does not desire to take one inch of land that belongs to Japan. Why should Japan or any other country object to us fortifying our own islands in order to protect our own country and to see that no one takes one inch of land that rightfully belongs to us?

Mr. MAAS. Of course, Japan knows we are not going to invade it. Japan ought to know that we are not going to interfere with her affairs in China. What Japan does fear is that we may attempt to hold them to their treaty agreements for an open door in China. Whether we ought to or not—we probably will not—but that is what they fear.

Let me explain that there can be no possible threat to Japan or any other nation on earth by the little simple dredging that is proposed by this bill. Even if we were to fortify it and make a Singapore out of it, that would not be a threat to any other nation on earth unless such nation had sinister designs toward us.

Mr. Chairman, you do not invade a nation with fortifications. You protect a nation with fortifications. The Siegfried and the Maginot lines are no aggressive threat to either country. They are only a threat against aggression by the other nation.

Mr. COLE of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. Is it not possible, however, to invade a nation from a naval air base?

Mr. MAAS. No; absolutely not. The gentleman gives those of us who are aviators too much credit. From a naval air base you cannot invade anything nor anywhere.

Mr. COLE of New York. Then, why is London so fearful of Berlin at the present time?

Mr. MAAS. That is entirely different. They are next door to each other, with thousands of land-based planes always ready to take the air. The most planes we can possibly have at Guam would be 24. The maximum range of those planes for fighting purposes is 1,200 miles, and it is 1,400 miles to Tokyo. Twenty-four planes are no threat. But it might mean the difference between a short and long war; yes, the difference between victory and defeat for us to have a dredged harbor in Guam.

Let me finish my statement with reference to the necessity for this development from a commercial standpoint. The United States is not self-sufficient. Unfortunately, we have to import certain absolutely essential raw materials, such as tin, tungsten, and rubber, all of which we have to get in commercial quantities from the Far East, and without which our peacetime industries would collapse in the United States. It might be possible to import those products by air under certain conditions. If we could not send our merchant ships over there, we might continue to import them in probably sufficient quantities by air; therefore, to reach the Orient and prevent interruption of essential imports it is necessary that we have adequate aviation facilities on the island of Guam or some other island over there, and Guam is the only island we have at the present time.

May I proceed to a statement of the defense value of Guam. It has great defensive value merely as a dredged harbor. It is not a threat to anybody as a harbor. It could not interfere with anyone, excepting a nation that had hostile intentions toward us. It might interfere with such nation. The minute war started we would lose Guam, because we would drop back from it, if the island was not fortified. I am assuming we are not going to fortify it. I am not in favor of that, on the basis of the present information. I am not saying, though, I would not be in favor of that proposition if we had some testimony on it, or if it had been recommended and urged by the Navy Department.

Maybe I would be for it, I do not know; but on the basis of the present testimony, which had to do only with the dredging of the harbor, I am not in favor of fortifying Guam at this time. There is no plan to fortify it. There is no proposition here of the camel getting his nose under the tent, unless you are afraid he will get his nose under your tent, because the Congress will have to pass on any other plans that may be presented. If you fear this, then you are fearful of yourselves, because it will have to be presented to you and you will have plenty of time to deal with it if the matter ever comes before you.

Mr. LORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LORD. Would the island of Guam be valuable to Japan?

Mr. MAAS. Not at all. It would be immensely valuable to us from a scouting standpoint even without any fortifications at all. If we had planes training over there, or some of our scouting planes were temporarily operating out of Guam, and they were able to locate the possible movement of an enemy fleet in our direction, they would drop back to Hawaii; our fleet commanders would be notified of the fact and we would be in a favorable position to meet the oncoming fleet.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it would be of no value to Japan at all, even if the harbor were dredged. Japan has a number of mandated islands which are already dredged and probably fortified.

Japan has islands a thousand miles nearer Hawaii than Guam that are probably better than Guam. Why would they bother taking Guam, which would not be of any value to them at all? Certainly the fact that we might have planes in Guam that could detect the beginning of an enemy fleet movement toward this Nation or toward South or North America might far exceed in value to the fleet commander the value of, say, a battleship, yet the cost of this construction is but $5,000,000. If we do not have the island of Guam prepared so naval pilots in peacetime can take training in making hops over there and becoming more familiar with the Pacific and with the air conditions and weather conditions in that area, then if times should become very critical it would be necessary for the fleet commander to send out some very expensive surface craft which might be essential to the fleet, perhaps destroyers or cruisers even, and they undoubtedly would be destroyed in the mission of scouting for essential information about an enemy's fleet movements. They would probably be caught by the enemy and destroyed, and yet they might form a very essential part of the fleet. It might cripple the fleet to lose such vessels. If the planes, the eyes of the Navy, were not permitted to see the movements of an enemy fleet, we would have to send surface craft out, crippling the fleet to do it, and thereby risk the loss of American ships manned by American boys. On the other hand, we would not lose a single airplane in getting the same information. All we would do would be to drop back from Guam, and if we were not at Guam there would be no purpose in capturing the island. Japan now has much more valuable islands that are nearer to us; islands that are certainly prepared for fortification and probably already fortified. The Japanese have an island, which I am personally convinced is fortified, that is closer to Hawaii than Guam is to Japan.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Briefly for a question.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman has no information—

Mr. MAAS. Is the gentleman telling me or asking me?

Mr. CHURCH. Has the gentleman any information as to any fortification whatsoever of the mandated islands?

Mr. MAAS. Yes; I have very excellent information.

Mr. CHURCH. Did the gentleman furnish the committee any information whatever as to the fortification of the 98 mandated islands surrounding Guam?

Mr. MAAS. Yes; considerable.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman state what that information was?

Mr. MAAS. First of all, that planes of Japan have been seen flying over the island of Guam, and they were of such a size and nature that they could not possibly have come from more than a few hundred miles away, six or seven hundred miles at most. They were seaplanes, therefore, that were based on the water. They were not based at any land base or on a ship. They had to be based somewhere in those islands. They could not have been flown from more than six or seven hundred miles away. They have been flying back and forth across Guam and apparently taking photographs of what we are doing there. They had to have a base to operate from, somewhere nearby Guam.

Mr. CHURCH. Is that all the information the gentleman has?

Mr. MAAS. No; I have lots more.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. The Aleutian Islands, which belong to the United States, are being fortified, and they are nearer to Japan than is Guam.

Mr. MAAS. Of course.

Mr. SIROVICH. Then why should objection be made to this development at Guam?

Mr. MAAS. I want to tell you that if Guam were not in this bill, the opponents would be picking on Wake; and if Wake were not in it, they would be picking on Kodiak; and if Kodiak were not in the bill, they would be picking on San Francisco. [Applause.] They are determined to pick on this bill, that is all.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. Perhaps that is the very reason why Guam is in the bill, to take the curse off the rest of it.

Mr. MAAS. Maybe; but the harbor development at Guam is essential for continued commercial aviation in the Pacific and highly desirable for peacetime training of our naval aviators.

Mr. Chairman, I fear there may be some foreign-policy implications in what is proposed; that is, in the striking of Guam from this bill. I do not believe there is any foreign policy involved in improvement of our own territory, wherever it may be, but I fear that when we start joining some of the European powers in a policy of appeasement we are getting on very dangerous ground. When we surrender our rights to sovereign American territory because of newspaper threats in a foreign country, we are on the road to decline, and we will go down the road France and England are going, selling out in advance because they are not prepared to defend themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Once you start a policy of appeasement there is no end to it. You give the first inch and before you are through you have to give a mile. Once they get you on the run you never stop. We had better never start. We do not need to. [Applause.]

We are today the most powerful nation on earth. The greatest crime we can commit, the greatest disservice we can do to peace and democracy, is to yield voluntarily this position of strength and power. Everyone knows we have no aggressive intentions toward any other nation. Do you think a militaristic nation such as they would have you believe Guam represents would have 21 sovereign free republics to the south of us and a sovereign dominion to the north of us? There has not been a time in the last 100 years that the United States, from the pure standpoint of military power, could not have gobbled up both the North and South American Continents. Yet we have protected these dominions and countries from being gobbled up. This is hardly a record that would make any foreign power fear the United States. No; most of the hysteria about Guam is in this country, and most of it is in this Chamber; very little of it is in Japan.

You know you people here seem to be a whale of a lot more concerned about the fear Japan has over this than anybody in Japan.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Not at this moment. I want to read you a statement of the Japanese Navy Minister made in the Japanese Parliament a couple of days ago. They were debating their defense program, and Admiral Yonai, the Navy Minister, was asked whether our developments in Guam were going to necessitate an increase in the Japanese naval expenditures because of such activities in Guam.

A member of the Diet asked Yonai, during the discussion of the budget, whether American plans to fortify Guam would necessitate additional Japanese appropriations.

Understand, his answer was made to the question of whether the fortifying the island—and we do not even propose that, but just to dredge the harbor, and here is his answer:

There is at present no reason why Japanese-American relations should be tense. Japanese policy is based on nonaggression. Therefore, Japan's armament is at the minimum consistent with national defense.

Now, get this, gentlemen on both sides of the aisle:

Anyone who believes that the United States is pursuing aggressive designs against Japan grossly misunderstands the situation. Therefore, the Japanese Navy is not attaching much importance to the Guam issue.

Most of the importance is being attached to it in this House.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. COLE of New York. In order to give proper weight to the statement of Yonai, which the gentleman has just read, does not the gentleman think that some emphasis should be placed on the words of that statement to the effect that "Japanese policy is based on nonaggression?" Does not that give the lie to the entire statement? [Applause.]

Mr. MAAS. Not necessarily, because he was answering his own people in his own Parliament, and the greatest value of his answer is that they did not ask for additional naval or military appropriations because of our plans with respect to Guam. I grant you I would not believe anything they said, but in this case his statement is borne out by the facts because they did not ask for any more money, and that is the reason I do believe him.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. The very fact that the Navy Minister said that Japan believes in nonaggression and is bombarding and destroying all China with that nonaggression should fortify us all the more in our determination to protect Guam so that she cannot do the same here.

Mr. MAAS. I want to leave you with what seems to me to be fundamental to America. We have no aggressive intentions toward anybody on the face of the earth. We have proved that in 150 years and, certainly, in the last 40 years when we rescued the Philippines from the Spanish and after spending millions of dollars to train them in self-education, have voted them their complete independence. By the same token I say that if we want peace in the world—

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. MAAS. I believe that it should be fundamental that while we are never going to invade foreign countries, we are never going to send soldiers overseas for the purpose of aggression or acquiring territory, by the same token we must make it clear to the world that American territory must always be respected, that wherever American territory may be now, regardless of the question of how we acquired it, whether wisely or unwisely, that our territory must be respected, and I take it as a fundamental American doctrine that we want the world to know that we intend to defend every inch of every bit of American soil anywhere, at any time, from anybody. [Applause.] To do less than this means that we are no longer a great Nation; to do more exceeds any policy or any desire of the American people; and I warn you that to do less than that will do more to stimulate the dictators in their contempt for democracies than anything I can imagine. If we, as a great democracy desiring to lead the world in the view that a democracy can survive, are ourselves to survive, and if we are to set that example, then we must make it clear to the dictators of the world or any other form of government, whether communistic or otherwise, that we are ready to meet all comers at any time to keep our own borders inviolate. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, today, possibly because it is the anniversary of the birthday of the Father of his Country, it seems to be the general practice to summon from the past some of the statesmen of former days of this country for their contribution to the arguments on this floor. Therefore I summon today one of the eminent statesmen of the past, a man I consider to be one of the wisest statesmen this country ever produced. That man, Mr. Chairman, is Benjamin Franklin, who once said, "If you make yourself a sheep, the wolves will eat you." That is a principle that has been true throughout this world as long as we have any trace of mankind, and every nation through the history of the past that reduced itself to a state of impotency has gone down the road to destruction, which led to oblivion from which there is no return.

Mr. Chairman, in this matter of the improvement of the harbor on the island of Guam, we seem to take mainly into consideration whether or not it will be objectionable to Japan. I say right here that if we allow the objections of Japan to deter us in our handling of our own territory wherever it may be in the world, in our own manner, then the time will not be far distant when the Japanese Empire will presume to dictate the size of our Navy, and it may not be far distant when occurrences such as happened the other day in New York, of which the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] spoke so eloquently a short time ago, will be very much more prevalent throughout this Nation than they have been in the past.

Therefore, in considering whether or not we will carry out the provisions of this bill as it applies to Guam, let us consider only what the sentiment of the House of Representatives is in respect to this action, and not allow any consideration of the objection of any foreign nation to weigh our decision in that respect, and especially that of Japan, a nation which has never scrupled to disregard her pledged obligations to the world whenever she has deemed it expedient to do so.

Let us consider this matter solely upon the advice of the Naval Board of the United States, and from that alone determine the proper policy for this Nation.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. Is it not true that the objections by other nations to anything that we may do in this matter should not be of importance, because this is basically a great economic defense for us?

Mr. FADDIS. That is what I have been trying to say. As far as we are concerned, this is one of the outposts of the Nation. If we are attacked from the east, it is an interference which will meet that attack and which will carry back and warn this Nation of the coming attack. It will be a point in the western Pacific where information can be collected, evaluated, and forwarded, which may be of vital importance to this Nation in time of emergency.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. Guam has been an outpost for a great many years, has it not, and there has been no move to fortify it or improve it?

Mr. FADDIS. It may be that we would need it like a man needs a gun sometimes. When a man needs a gun, he does not have time to run back home and get it out of the bureau drawer.

Mr. CHURCH. You pick up the gun now and start a war that will be a great expense.

Mr. FADDIS. That would be the part of some people who would prefer a policy of impotency, that would invite impositions on this Nation. If the gentleman would like to follow that in his own personal daily affairs, he is welcome to do it. For me, I prefer to follow a policy that will protect the Nation as I would protect myself. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the first power conferred upon the President by the Constitution is as follows:

The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States.

Now, the armed forces of the United States exist for but one reason, the protection of the Nation and its interests. We have been accustomed to refer to our policy regarding our armed forces as our policy for national defense. This policy should today be called our policy for national security. In a military sense there is a vast difference between "defend" and "secure." To defend means to prevent the enemy from seizing and occupying. To secure has a broader meaning.

It means to prevent the enemy from getting in position where, by means of his weapons, he may cause damage to the locality or territory in question. Into a program founded upon this theory the island of Guam is an integral and a necessary part.

Anyone who is at all informed regarding modern armament knows full well that during the past quarter of a century advances along the line of armament have been as rapid as those in any other mechanical field. What we may expect tomorrow, no one knows, but certainly the least we can expect is more advancement. Just as there has been a speeding up in the mechanics of the instruments of warfare, so has there been a decided speeding up in the method of calling them into action. Today war comes with almost incredible swiftness. We will need outposts at a distance to give ample warning and to furnish early interference. Such an outpost will be Guam. Also it is a well-recognized fact today that there are other threats to the security of a nation as dangerous as the threat of lethal weapons. These threats must be guarded against just as vigilantly as must the threats from sources of a lethal nature. From whatever quarter, on whatever front, or from whatever cause, our national security is threatened, we must be prepared to combat that threat.

In guarding against any threat from purely lethal sources we would certainly make use of the most up-to-date lethal means possible to procure. We would not hamper the Commander in Chief by requiring him to resort to the use of obsolete mechanical weapons. Why, then, should we hamper him with any other archaic means of preserving the security of the Nation?

The President in his constitutional function of Commander in Chief of our armed forces is charged with the maintenance of our national security. His duty in this respect is a broader duty than that of a mere commander of our armed forces. It is a double duty, one which also includes the direction and shaping of the affairs of the Nation in order to prevent us from being embroiled in any difficulty, or to enable us to be in a secure position if we do become embroiled. He must at all times keep before him the thought that the national security is paramount above every other consideration. In his conduct of the affairs of the Nation he must at all times keep the matter of what we might term "position" before, during, and after any probable hostilities in mind. His viewpoint must be broader and he must be allowed more latitude than must those who are concerned only with our mechanical means for national security.

Of course there are those professional isolationists who insist that our proper foreign policy is to imitate a tortoise and withdraw into our shell at the first sign of danger. They would have us abandon our traditional policy of the freedom of the seas, which would mean the loss of our foreign trade. From our former experiences, in endeavoring to absorb our own surpluses, there is little doubt but that this would be a calamity greater than war. It is just as essential to steer clear of domestic difficulties as it is to circumvent foreign difficulties. This school of thought advocates economic boycott against nations, the foreign policies of which we disapprove. To my mind, economic boycott may easily prove to be more disastrous and more lasting to the boycotter than to the boycottee.

Hermit nations are backward nations, just as hermit individuals are backward individuals. It has been wisely said that "international trade is the lifeblood of civilization." The exchange of surplus commodities is the factor which raised mankind from the stage of savagery. If permitted or forced to practice a hermit policy, any nation will quickly revert to the primitive, as history proves by many instances. Are we ready to proclaim to the world that we have no interest in the affairs of the rest of the world and that the name of the United States is meaningless? If so, would we be permitted to impersonate the turtle? We may isolate ourselves from the rest of the world, but can we isolate the rest of the world from us? I doubt it.

Japan endeavored to do so once but was unsuccessful. Armed ships of various nations, and some of them flew the Stars and Stripes, thundered at her doors and forced them open. This policy of isolation may sound well as a theory to those who do not think the matter through, but as a concrete solution to a practical situation, it is but the path of least resistance, leading toward the dim distant past, and we do not wish to head in that direction.

What is the meaning of all of this criticism coming from the platform, over the radio, and from the press over the refusal of the President and the Department of State to cry from the housetops or on the street corners all about our foreign relations? Demands have been made that the foreign policy of this Nation be made known to the American people. The cry of gag meetings of committees has been raised and attempts have been made to attribute a sinister meaning to what has always been regarded, in this and all other nations, as a natural, necessary, and logical method of procedure—namely the conducting of the foreign affairs of this Nation in a manner sanctioned by custom, recognized by precedent, and in conformity with the Constitution.

These carping critics speak as if it has always been the custom of an administration to publish in black and white a foreign policy as definite and defined, as indelible and inflexible as the Ten Commandments. They imply that the President and the Department of State are withholding from the Congress and from the Nation facts which should be made public. They darkly hint that the responsible officials of this Nation are uninformed and ignorant of the true facts regarding our foreign relations.

Of course, some of this outcry is pure demagoguery and is easily recognized as such from the source. Much more of it is a poorly advised attempt to make political capital out of a nonpolitical matter. Some of it comes from individuals whose vanity has been wounded because they were not called to sit in the executive meetings. Some of it comes from professional objectors to any foreign policy of this Nation—bitter-end isolationists. Some of it comes from those who wish to keep their names before the public, in order that their services may be in better demand from the platform and over the radio.

To conduct the foreign affairs of the Nation, without apprising the world in general of every move, is a privilege which has been enjoyed by every President of this Nation. Every other nation in the world which has any foreign relations conducts theirs in a like manner. In a nation such as this, composed of a population having so many different racial sympathies, it would be utterly impossible to conduct it in any other manner. We have a representative form of government and our officials operate by means of delegated powers. Foreign affairs are delicate problems and must be handled in a manner so as to cause as little misunderstanding as possible, abroad. It is the sincere desire of this Nation and of its officials that a general world conflict may be avoided. No one of any responsibility can claim that we will not be scorched by the conflagration nor guarantee that we will not be drawn into it. Any misunderstanding which may arise most certainly increases the danger that we may be involved.

The fact is, that there exists in Europe and in Asia a situation for which the administration is by no means responsible and one which is not to the liking of the American people. A school of political thought, which is repugnant to our social and political ideas, has become, for a time at least, a threatening factor. It is all very well to say that the existence of such is no concern of ours. To say so is to lose sight of the fact that we have a moral and a financial interest in the world as a whole. Our moral interest is our concern for the fate of democracy everywhere throughout the world. Our financial interest, is our concern for our trade, its markets, trade lanes and access to raw materials.

Much has been said of the Farewell Address of the Father of his Country and usually with the implication that his parting advice was to keep out of any foreign alliances. It has also been implied that this set up an iron-bound foreign policy which has been strictly adhered to. In fact the parting advice of Washington was, "to steer clear of any permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world."

That Washington was, however, far too wise and far too well trained, both as a soldier and a statesman, to ignore the advantage of temporary alliances, is proven by these words in his Farewell Address, which we have just heard read, "taking care always to keep ourselves, by suitable establishments, on (sic) a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies."

In his recent action of extending the assistance of our industrial resources to those nations whose political philosophy is compatible with ours, President Roosevelt is only following in deed and interest what has always been the foreign policy of this Nation. He is only recognizing for this time, and under the conditions which prevail now, the same policy which was recognized when the Monroe Doctrine was promulgated as a policy of defense. He is but exercising that constitutional authority granted to every President, which gives him a field of wide latitude in which to function, while carrying out his duty in his dual nature of both military and civic head of the Nation.

In extending the gesture of friendship toward those nations, with which because of tradition, blood, and democratic ideas we feel we have the most in common, he seems to have awakened a hymn of hate among the disciples of dictatorship. This is proof that there are still those who remember 1918 and the sight of that huge American flag which flew over Ehrenbreitstein and the memory of that sight is sufficiently potent to dispel any visions of the return of the fabled glories of the Nibelungen Epic. [Applause.]

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOLLES].

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Chairman, before I proceed with these few remarks I will remove from my coat a United States flag made in Japan. [Laughter.]

I have been having a lesson in geography, and I think it is a good thing for the House itself. I noticed the other day, when this map was brought here by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE], that hardly a Member knew where Guam was. They hunted all over the place. Guam is a little island entirely surrounded by Japan. One hundred and twenty-one miles north of it is the Japanese island of Saipan, with a most excellent harbor. Nobody has mentioned it. It is near enough to the bases of Japan, the end of the Nipponese islands, to be dangerous to the island of Guam. But I am not afraid of Japan. I am not afraid of war over there on account of dredging out a harbor. I am not afraid that Apra is going to be occupied by the Japanese, but I cannot understand the economic idea of spending $5,000,000 to fix up this island in order that Japan may have $5,000,000 more of value when she takes it. [Laughter and applause.]

For 41 years we have owned this island. Its government has been of the Navy. We have a fine electric plant over there, and we are too far away to get T. V. A. [Laughter.] I wish the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] were here so he could make a note of that. We have built some waterworks over there. We have dredged out the harbor from time to time. We have ordered the natives that they shall have 12 chickens, one rooster, a few pigs, and raise a few crops to keep them from being on W. P. A. [Laughter.] We have done a great work over there. If the Committee on Naval Affairs had carried out the recommendations of the Governor of Guam, you would have found this:

Recommend that development of Apra Harbor be undertaken for the purpose of facilitating the proper handling of commercial cargoes, commercial cargo carriers, and commercial aircraft; such development to include:

A commercial pier with terminal warehouse.
Commercial shore storage for fuel oil, Diesel oil, and gasoline.
The dredging of coral heads and reefs dangerous to navigation and anchorage of commercial shipping.
Protective seawall on the surrounding reef.
These developments have been made the subject of separate correspondence to the Navy Department.

This is signed by James P. Alexander, commissioner, naval station of Guam.

In 40 years of naval occupation by the United States we have developed this island insofar as possible, with but 20,880 natives and 1,300 white men on the island, and very few Japanese. We do not allow Japanese on this island, you know. They are not permitted there. Japanese ships are not permitted to run in there except one or two of the Shu-Mazi Line. The landing of the clippers last year is shown on the pages of this document, the annual report, and they had plenty of room to land the China Clipper. So it would be useless and a waste of money to make a sinister attempt to take the first steps in fortification.

If I had my way, if I were going to do this, instead of doing it piecemeal I would have it all fortified and make it worth something. As it is now it is simply a small kumquat in the hand of Japan. All Japan has to do to destroy the kumquat or put it out of business is just to close the fist.

Guam is at present—

Said the Secretary of the Navy in his report—practically defenseless against determined attack by any first-class power based in the western Pacific. With adequate air and submarine protection securely based on Guam the island could be made secure against anything but a major effort on the part of any probable enemy.

What enemy?

If Japan is at peace, if Japan has no aggressor intentions, if she has no idea of aggression, then what enemy have we in the Pacific?

Why should it be made such a base, 3,300 miles from Hawaii, 6,000 miles from San Francisco by way of Hawaii, 7,900 miles from Panama? Why should it be made a base to secure against anything but a major effort on the part of any probable enemy?

The speakers on this floor have stated that Guam would fall in just a minute or two. I am of the opinion that before this question came to the House—and I am glad it is here—the Members of this House thought that Guam was like Boston, a state of mind.

I believe some of the Members thought it was like Boston, just a state of mind. I am tempted to paraphrase some of that great classical speech by Proctor Knott, when he talked of Duluth, the zenith city of the unsalted sea. But this is no place for levity. Guam is a reality. It is hard to find in the island-sprinkled Pacific—like picking out one grain of pepper from the box and identifying it. I am moved to emotion when I think of all the millions of our people—the aliens on W. P. A., the mountain girls who are curling their hair with T. V. A. electricity, college graduates and Government employees who live and perhaps may die without knowing of the beauties and glories of the lizard and rat-inhabited Guam—Guam the incomprehensible, where without a St. Patrick there are no snakes and where the girls started the red-lips habit by chewing betel nut. That is a great saving. She does not have to stop on the street and use a mirror.

Strange land is this! There are no indigenous quadrupeds. Everything on four legs has been introduced from the outside world. Hogs are raised but there has never been enough of them to warrant a pig-killing program. A plant is used to stupefy fish—make them drunk. A writer watching this bait work tells of what he saw:

Nothing more striking could be imagined than the picture presented by the conglomeration of strange shapes and bright colors—snakelike sea eels; voracious lizardfishes; garlike houndfishes, with their jaws prolonged into a sharp beak; long-snouted trumpetfishes; flounders; porcupinefish, bristling with spines; squirrelfishes of the brightest and most beautiful colors—scarlet, rose color and silver, and yellow and blue; parrotfishes (Scarus), with large scales, parrotlike beaks, and intense colors, some of them a deep greenish blue, others looking as though painted with blue and pink oaque colors; variegated Chaetodonts, called sea butterflies by the natives; trunkfishes with horns and armor; leopard-spotted groupers; hideous-looking, warty toadfishes, "nufi," armed with poisonous spines, much dreaded by the natives; and a blackfish with a spur on its forehead.

What a place for a battleship on a fishing expedition!

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLES. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Did I understand the gentleman to take the position that Japan is a nonaggressor nation?

Mr. BOLLES. I do not take any position on Japan, as to whether she is an aggressor nation or a nonaggressor nation. I leave that to the brilliant experts who have occupied this floor before me.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It strikes me that the gentleman's argument pretty nearly involves the necessity of a decision as to which she is.

Mr. BOLLES. That Japan is an aggressor nation?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. BOLLES. So far as the United States is concerned, no.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Not even potential?

Mr. BOLLES. Any nation is potentially an aggressor nation if she thinks she has an excuse.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; and the United States will find she is more than an aggressor nation potentially unless the United States gets herself in a position to stop her.

Mr. BOLLES. I would like to sit down and argue the war, but I am making a speech on Guam. [Laughter.] This island of Guam, you must understand, is so far west that it is in the East. [Laughter.] Many years ago, in a spirit of adventure, I sailed around Guam up to Saipan, 121 miles, a large island owned by Japan, past a little island called Roto. I think that is where the Rotary Club started. [Laughter.] But the fact is, this little volcanic island, this island of Saipan, has excellent harbors for small craft.

Now, I want to get back just a minute to the commerce of Guam. Twenty-two thousand chemise-clad natives constitute its population. [Laughter.] You must understand that up in Saipan, where the Japanese are, where they own this island, they use the G-string as the chief article of sartorial adornment. [Laughter.] But Chamorros down in Guam are still so civilized that they wear the chemise.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLES. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Why not send these warlike New Dealers, Mr. Ickes, Mr. Wallace, and Mr. Pittman over to Guam to lead the army of these chemise-clad natives?

Mr. BOLLES. Not being a paid officer of the Navy, I cannot answer that. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Morr].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I wish all Members of the House could have had the opportunity to hear the gentleman from California [Mr. Izac] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Maas] in the debate upon this bill this afternoon. You may not be aware of it, all of you, but you have just had the privilege of listening to two Members of the Congress who are naval experts. One is a former commander in the Regular Navy—a professional naval officer with an outstanding war record. The other, during the World War, was a very active flyer in the Marine Corps. His activity in that field has never ceased, and he is at present a colonel in the Marine Corps Reserve. I am sure the information they have given today will be of great value to all of you when it comes to deciding what you should do in regard to this bill and particularly in regard to the controversial item of Guam.

I assure you that in saying what I shall have to say upon this bill I do not claim to speak as an expert. I could not qualify as a naval expert, because I am not a member of the naval profession, any more than I could qualify as a medical expert, because I am not a member of the medical profession.

The best I can say of myself in this regard is that I am tremendously interested in the problem of national defense; that as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House I have tried to be as good and as careful a student of the problem as I could; and that as a member of that committee it has been my privilege and part of my business to listen to the testimony and advice of naval experts, to try to evaluate that testimony and advice, and to do my best to help the committee to report as good naval legislation as possible to the House for its consideration.

Now, in the first place, I want to make it as plain as I can that the purpose of this bill is not to extend our present lines of naval defense. There seems to be a great deal of confusion upon this point, many Members being of the opinion that to undertake the development of Guam, as contemplated in this bill, would be to extend our line of defense in the Pacific. This is not the case, and no naval expert that I know of has ever interpreted this development of Guam as extending our line of defense. Certainly there was no such testimony before the committee, and the committee was most thorough and exhaustive in its inquiry upon this very point. I think even if Guam were fortified it would not extend the line of defense; it would implement it, to be sure, but it would not extend it. The line of defense is not altered by the Guam item. It remains the same as it has been for many years.

I think it was when the Navy expansion bill was before the House in the last Congress that a very definite statement was made by the Navy Department as to what our line of defense is and where it is. The recognized outer line of the naval defense of the United States, as you know, is the Aleutian-Hawaii-Panama Canal line in the Pacific, and the line from Panama to San Juan and Guantanamo in the Caribbean Sea and then north through the Atlantic up to the northeastern corner of the United States. That is our outer line of defense, and that will remain the line whether the Guam item is retained in this bill or not.

The Guam item provides for dredging the Apra Harbor, for building a breakwater, and for constructing a ramp for seaplanes. And that is all it does provide for. It includes no fortification of any kind and no naval base of any kind. It will, however, in addition to aiding commercial navigation and aviation, make this harbor available for the use of naval planes, so that they can be used there if and when they are needed.

This development is not a threat to any nation. In time of war, however, it would be of the greatest value to our own Nation. It would enable us to patrol the area to scout an enemy fleet advancing on Hawaii or any other Pacific possession of the United States, and thus give timely warning to our fleet and enable it to engage the enemy fully prepared, and at a location of our own choosing.

This briefly is the situation in regard to Guam. Guam is not a part of our line of defense. It never will be. But with the improvement of the harbor, Guam can be made to serve as a valuable aid in enabling us to defend our line, even though it is not a part of that line. Prudence and foresight should persuade us, therefore, that this improvement should be made.

I wish to discuss briefly now our real lines of defense in the Pacific which through this bill will be strengthened and implemented.

The Aleutian-Hawaii-Panama line of defense is, of course, just what its name indicates. It is a line, an imaginary line, drawn through the eastern part of the Pacific Ocean from Dutch Harbor in the Aleutian Islands of Alaska to the Hawaiian Islands and thence to the Panama Canal Zone, and it constitutes the first or outer line of the naval defense of the western coast of the United States, in event we should become involved in a war with an Asiatic power. An Asiatic power, as you know, is the polite or diplomatic way of referring to Japan when we have occasion to talk about the possibility of an attack upon the United States by way of the Pacific. No other Asiatic power would have any reason for attacking us, and certainly no other would have the ability to do so, at least not in the very near future.

The Aleutian-Hawaii-Panama line consists of three major naval bases: The base at Pearl Harbor in the Hawaiian Archipelago, which is probably the strongest naval base in the world; the base at Panama, which is beyond question the most vital part of the line, because the capture or destruction of the Panama Canal would be disastrous in any major war, and the proposed base at Dutch Harbor, which has already been authorized by the Congress and upon which construction will commence in the immediate future.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Has the gentleman ever crossed the Isthmus of Panama?

Mr. MOTT. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it not a fact there is no means of communication by way of a road across the Panama Canal except the Panama Railroad?

Mr. MOTT. There is no highway.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. In the event of an emergency on one side of the Canal, there would be no way of moving armament or forces across to the other side except by railroad?

Mr. MOTT. The railroad and the Canal itself. That I think is a very unfortunate situation and ought to be remedied.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. One well-placed bomb in Lake Gatun would put that railroad out of commission.

Mr. MOTT. That would be a possibility.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. And we would be entirely defenseless from one side to the other?

Mr. MOTT. We would be seriously crippled, at least.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Can the gentleman tell the committee the reason why no road has been built across the Isthmus?

Mr. MOTT. If I undertook to go into that, I am afraid I would not have any time left to speak on this bill.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman just explained to the Committee the importance of defending the Canal. Can we defend it if we have no communication from one side to the other?

Mr. MOTT. I may touch on that if I have time.

The theory upon which this line of defense rests is that if these three major bases—Unalaska, Hawaii, and Panama—are made impregnable against attack from an enemy, and if our Navy operating from these bases is kept intact, and in force superior to any opposing navy, then in event of war with Japan, the Japanese Navy could never reach our shores. And, unless and until an enemy navy attacking from the Pacific can reach the coast line of North America at some point between and including Dutch Harbor and Panama, then no enemy force could possibly be landed. As a matter of fact, so long as this advanced or outer line of defense holds fast no enemy fleet could even challenge our inner line of defenses, which runs along the coast of North America from Dutch Harbor to Panama. This inner line of defense, by the way, is just as important in our defense system as the outer line. The two must be considered together, and I shall have something more to say about that inner line later in these remarks.

You will have noticed that in stating the theory of the defense of the west coast by the Aleutian-Hawaii-Panama line I have used a number of "ifs." This line of defense is good only if the bases which comprise it are impregnable; it is good only if the Navy, operating from the bases upon it, is kept intact; and it is good only if the Navy, defending the line, is superior to any opposing naval force that may be brought against it. It should be the proper business of the Congress, therefore, if we intend to maintain that line of defense at all, to see that all of these "ifs" are, insofar as may be possible, eliminated, so that the bases will in fact be impregnable; so that our fleet, manned by the best sailors in the world, will be kept intact, and so that our naval force in the Pacific will always and under all circumstances be superior to any foreign navy or combination of foreign navies which may undertake to break through this outer line.

Now, I have been assuming thus far for the sake of outlining the character, importance, purpose, and value of the Aleutian-Hawaii-Panama line of defense that this line, if it were made as impregnable as possible, could be held in any probable contingency and that thus, by defending that line, the coast of continental United States, Alaska, and Panama could be made secure from attack. But, as a matter of fact, I do not believe we are warranted in making any such assumption in the light of world developments during the past few years. If we were attacked by Japan alone, and if we had a superior naval force in the Pacific properly disposed at the time of the attack, I think there could be no question as to the outcome. But that may not be the case if we should find ourselves called upon in the future to defend this line. My own opinion is that if that time comes we will not be facing one enemy alone, but very likely two and perhaps three enemies at the same time.

The reason I think that to be the probability is this: We have always considered Japan to be our principal potential enemy, and we have planned accordingly in event of that unfortunate contingency. But Japan is not the only nation in the world which has been casting longing eyes at the Western Hemisphere.

The two other dictatorships, Germany and Italy, have, as a matter of fact, already made greater economic inroads into South and Central America than Japan has. It has always been the policy of all three of these nations, ever since they came under the rule of the mad men who control them, to try, as soon as they considered it feasible to do so, to translate their economic conquests of weaker countries into actual physical occupation and domination of those countries. And the method by which they have accomplished this has always been war or the threat of war against those who opposed their ambitions in this regard.

To those who have carefully followed the current history of the dictatorships I am sure I need not undertake to prove my statement by detailed citation of examples. Witness the conquest of China by Japan, the conquest of Ethiopia by Italy, the conquest of Austria and the dismemberment of Czechoslovakia by Germany. But some may say: "These are weak, undefended countries. The dictators would quickly change their policies if in order to carry them out they were obliged to wage war with a major power."

I wish I were able to concur in that view, but unfortunately, in my opinion there is nothing in the evidence to substantiate it, either in the acts of the dictators themselves or in the philosophy upon which the modern dictatorships are based. When Hitler demanded of Czechoslovakia the cession of the Sudetenland France and England had an unconditional treaty, a military alliance, with that little country under which those two great powers had agreed and were solemnly bound to defend the territorial integrity of Czechoslovakia whenever and by whomever it should be threatened. Did this deter Hitler? Not in the least. He simply thumbed his nose at these two great nations. He said that unless the Sudetenland were surrendered to him by a certain hour upon a certain day he would march his army into Czechoslovakia and he defied France and Britain to stop him. And did France and Britain try to stop him? Why, instead they not only backed down completely but they asked Hitler to invite them to sit around the table with him and help him carve up and dismember their brave little ally. They even asked Mussolini to be in on the kill with them, so that the Italian dictator might not feel slighted.

Did Japan stop her butchery in China for fear of a war with a major power? She not only dared Russia to intervene but she also showed her contempt for Britain's interest in China by shooting and wounding the British Ambassador to China, and her contempt for the United States by blowing up one of our gunboats.

Mussolini's ambitions are by no means confined to the subjugation of defenseless nations like Ethiopia where his son machine-gunned helpless women and children from the air and publicly described it as an exciting sport. Today we find him taking an active part in the Spanish civil war and demanding territorial concessions from France and Africa.

This reckless and, thus far, wholly successful onward march of the dictators is by no means an accident. They are following a very definite program, and I think they are following it under the terms of a very definite understanding and agreement between the three of them. Behind the hideous acts of these paranoid tyrants there is a philosophy and policy of government which they believe they must and can put into operation. That policy and that ambition is to make their countries self-sustaining through the acquisition by force or threat of force, of lands which they can exploit and which they believe will furnish them not only the raw materials they require but at the same time furnish them a completely controlled and dominated market in which to sell their manufactured products.

Now, where do such lands lie? Not in central Europe to which Hitler is presently directing his attention; not in Tunisia, a part of which Mussolini is now demanding of France; and not in China, which Japan is overrunning with fire and sword. The only lands sufficient either in extent or resources to make the dictator nations self-sustaining lie in the Western Hemisphere, in South and Central America and in Mexico, all defenseless. Each of the three dictator nations, as I have said, has already begun its economic conquest there upon a far larger scale than most of us realize. And the history, the fundamental policy, and the every act of these nations in previous similar circumstances should, it seems to me, be sufficient to persuade us that they will continue their economic conquest of these lands up to a certain point, as they have always done elsewhere, and that they will then undertake to translate it into a physical conquest, if they think they can do so successfully. And in that event the only thing that will stop them will be force, because force is the only instrumentality of policy which the dictators understand or to which they have ever paid the slightest attention.

In this connection, it is unnecessary to remind you, I am sure, the Monroe Doctrine is an integral part of our national policy and that its defense is vital to the security of the United States. An attack upon any country of the Western Hemisphere would be precisely equivalent to an attack upon continental United States and such an attack would, of course, mean war.

I am quite aware that some authorities, for whom I have much respect, consider the probability of concerted action against Central and South America to be so remote that it is unnecessary for us to be prepared for it. My own humble opinion, however, and I could cite many reasons for it which seem to me to be sound, is that the probability of a concerted action by these dictators is greater than the probability of an attack from one of them alone. One reason is that concerted action by all three of them, from the Pacific and the Atlantic at the same time, would have infinitely greater possibility of success than separate action on the part of any one of the dictators. This fact must not be overlooked in the formulating of our defense policy. If we do overlook it you may be sure that neither Japan nor Germany nor Italy will overlook it in event they should decide to move upon this hemisphere.

Now, if such concerted attack should come, unless we should have a superior naval force in both oceans at the same time, we would either have to divide the fleet—which would be a risky business—or else we would have to abandon at least partially the outer line of defense in one ocean while we endeavored to meet the situation in the other ocean separately with the major portion of the fleet. In such a contingency if we were obliged to abandon the Aleutian-Hawaii-Panama line of defense, or so weaken it that we could not risk a major battle there, that would automatically bring the war in the Pacific to the secondary line—that is to say to our very coast line—and there, for a time at least, the battle would be fought and there the issue, so far as naval defense of this country on the west coast is concerned, would be settled.

This is only one of the many reasons why our secondary line, as well as our advanced line, of defense must be made as strong as we can possibly make it. And now let me sound a warning as seriously as I can. As a chain is no stronger than its weakest link, we must see to it that there are no weak links in that secondary line.

Unfortunately, none of the links of our inner defense line are as strong as they ought to be, and some of the links are so weak that they may as well not exist in event an assault on them should be made.

Consider, for example, the vital Columbia River area between San Francisco Bay and Puget Sound. Between these two bases there is a 750-mile stretch of coast line without any defense or naval establishment whatever. Here between them is the great Columbia River, the second largest river on this continent. The estuary of the Columbia is a freshwater harbor 20 miles long and averaging 5 miles in width, in which the entire fleet of the United States can ride at anchor. On this great river is Portland, a city of 350,000 inhabitants. On it is the huge Bonneville Dam and power project owned by the Government and also, farther up the river, Grand Coulee Dam, the largest irrigation and reclamation project in the world.

An isolated air raid could destroy it all, even with the fleet intact upon the Aleutian-Hawaii-Panama line. But if that line were broken and the fleet divided or destroyed, an enemy force could and would immediately land there without the slightest inconvenience, and would immediately occupy and fortify one of the richest, most important and most strategic areas of the United States.

This bill will correct this vital defect and a number of other defects in the defense system of the Pacific coast and it will give us an inner line of defense the whole, and not merely a part of which, we can successfully defend.

And so, in conclusion, may I summarize very briefly by repeating that the maintenance of the Aleutian-Hawaii-Panama line is, in the opinion of nearly all authorities, indispensable to the security of the United States; that Guam does not extend that line, but may help us better to defend it; that insofar as may be possible this outer defense line should be made impregnable from successful attack by any enemy fleet or combination of enemy fleets which we may have to oppose there; that unless we are able to maintain a Navy superior in strength to any naval force that may be brought against us, it is entirely possible for a combination of enemies to break this line; that we are not warranted in assuming that there is no probability of concerted action against us by two or more nations at the same time, and that if it is probable such concerted action may be made, we ought to prepare now for the contingency which would develop if the Aleutian-Hawaii-Panama line of defense should be broken; that in the circumstances it is indispensable to our security that we maintain a complete secondary line of defense from Dutch Harbor to Panama, and that every vital area upon that line, without exception, be made absolutely impregnable, at all costs, and in event of any contingency that may reasonably be foreseen in a probable future war. This bill is an important step in the direction of accomplishing this. With such protection as this the safety of the Nation is, I believe, secure. Without it our security may be placed in jeopardy. Certainly, as a Member of the Congress, as a representative of the people of the United States in this body, I would not care to take the responsibility of denying that protection and that security to the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. YOUNGDAHL].

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Mr. Chairman, while I agree with 90 percent of the statements made by my distinguished colleague from Minnesota, I disagree with him on the Guam issue.

While this measure provides for $5,000,000 for the dredging of the harbor, some of the members of the Naval Affairs Committee and a large number of the Members of this House believe that this is only the first step in a plan to fortify the island. Next year and the year following we will be asked to appropriate millions more because we have already spent $5,000,000, and we should not allow that to be wasted.

I am in favor of national defense. I favor an army, a navy, and an air force large enough and sufficiently well equipped to defend the principles of the Monroe Doctrine and the sanctity of American soil against any aggressor at any time.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, America's eastern frontier is not the River Rhine and our western frontier should not be the island of Guam. Any plan leading to the fortification of this island, 4,500 miles out in the Pacific, is at best ridiculous, at worst a provocative act.

If any country in Europe or Asia today began fortification of any base within 1,500 miles of Washington, this Congress and the American people would rise up in wrath at such an affront.

For the United States to start fortification of Guam can be considered as nothing more than a direct invitation to the Far East to attempt to knock that chip off our shoulders.

This matter of Guam goes further than the dredging of the harbor. It does directly to our future foreign policy that may lead us into war.

In discussing this bill yesterday, the esteemed gentleman from Georgia, as chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, said:

It is not only necessary that we look to our own defenses but it is to our advantage to allow airplane manufacturers to furnish planes to those other two great democracies—France and England—in order that they may not be destroyed by the dictator powers.

During the last few days we have heard much explaining in an effort to whitewash in the minds of the American people the White House participation in the French airplane deal against the counsel of high Army officials.

In those explanations we have seen the Secretary of the Treasury take an active part. Heretofore the Secretary of State has, in the ordinary course of his duties, been the representative of this Government in its dealings with other nations.

Can it be, Mr. Chairman, that participation of the Treasury Department in this airplane sale means not only that the administration sanctioned and aided the sale of these planes but that the Treasury of the United States is being asked to finance the deal?

As we discuss these defense measures, I believe this Congress and the American people are entitled to know the answer to this question and our future foreign policy. [Applause.]

Mr. MAAS. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, in considering the Naval Appropriation Bill and more particularly its one controversial issue the appropriation for dredging the harbor, building of a breakwater, and improving the seaplane take-off area in Apru Harbor at Guam, it seems to me that we are dealing with three very vital problems in discussing one of the most important issues confronting the Seventy-sixth Congress. Taken up in order these three problems are: (a) The extension of democracy; (b) national defense for our own protection as well as that of democracy; (c) the need of foresight and statesmanship at this time.

As to the first item, the extension of democracy: Where is democracy, anyway? Is it limited to the 48 States of the Union and bounded by the shores of the Atlantic and Pacific, the Mexican and Canadian borders, or does it extend to Alaska, to Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Philippines, Guam, and our other territorial possessions? Does it extend to our ships, our merchant marine, our commercial airlines, and the routes which they are traveling today? Or is it limited to the docks or the landing fields in this country from whence they start their journey, or is it only to be found on the farms where the ship's cargo comes from, or at the oil wells in Texas or Oklahoma, or in the steel towns where the ship's framework was fabricated, or in the lumber camps that provided the lumber to make the ships? And if it is so limited and is to be found only in such primary places, then God forbid the building of the ships, the furnishing of farm products, the furnishing of "oil for the lamps of China," or the departure of our elements of trade and commerce to the seven seas of the world.

If democracy is only to be found in so narrow an area as that which the isolationists would have us believe, then it would have been much better to have left off building democracy across this continent, and to have kept it confined to the original Thirteen Colonies of 1776. Suppose we had done that, had not pushed on to the west coast, had left

Spain, France, Mexico, and England in control of the Middle West and the West?

I repeat, if democracy is only to be found in so narrow an area as that which the isolationists and pacifists would have us believe, and recommend that we defend, then God forbid that the precious lives of our seamen and aviators be sent out to face the great risks to which they will be subjected by the fierce and never-abating onslaught of those military dictators who are carrying on their wars of aggression and the destruction of our international law and order every day of these modern years in every corner of the globe. In the terms of a saying of that great statesman and intellectual leader, Benjamin Franklin, if democracy is only a lamb to be defended and fought for here on United States soil, then we should not send it out among the wolves of international outlawry and brigandage.

But I am not so sure that we can so limit and circumscribe democracy even if we did attempt it; nor am I willing to agree that democracy, great and idealistic as it is, can be preserved and promoted if we so seek to limit it and limit our defense of it, and I say that for this reason, that not only does water seek a level but also so does mankind, not only socially and materially but also politically, seek a level, and if we do not protect and promote democracy in every single far corner of the earth bringing it to the rest of the world intensively and aggressively, then the rest of the world will bring their less desirable political philosophies to us. This old world is a great old "evener" and if we do not take democracy to the rest of the world, lifting humanity and its races up by it and to it, the lesson of history indicates that they will then drag us down to their less desirable level.

(b) So the consideration of the development of Guam, this outpost 5,428 miles from the United States, becomes a matter not of antagonizing Japan and her allies, but one of national defense and of our own protection and that of democracy. For, as I have already pointed out, democracy is found wherever our trade and commerce goes, and it will needs go everywhere if America is to continue to grow or even to exist, so then we cannot limit our ideas and conception of national defense to the soil and the cities of the 48 States. Our whole commercial, social, religious, and political future will depend upon the support which our Naval and Military Establishments can and will give against the forces at home and abroad which would drive us into a circumscribed area. And to those who are of that school which visualizes our danger of attack as only that here in America, I would say that to pursue that policy to its ultimate end and conclusion would mean that in the final analysis, after both England and France have been defeated and forced to capitulate and bow to an unconditional surrender to the war lords of Europe and Asia, and if you are anti-communistic, including Russia in that group, we of America would then face them alone. And what an allure our $14,600,000,000 in gold bullion and our $2,000,000,000 in silver bullion and all our other great natural resources would have to those present-day Napoleons. And how little chance would there be that we could hold the line, withstand the combined onslaught and save ourselves from destruction without a similar surrender.

(c) It seems to me that our value here as Congressmen, and the value of any national official, for that matter, is determined to a large degree, not only by what we do here on the floor of Congress about present emergencies but much more by what we know and do now about future problems which will confront us in 2 or 3 years, or even 5 years, hence. If our Congressmen and statesmen in 1929 had had the foresight and the courage to deal with the depression as they should and the unemployment problem which many then predicted would be the result, how much could we not have saved the country in useless expenditures, in so-called emergency expenditures, and in hand-to-mouth planning, which now, after 10 years, has brought us to such a low ebb in our national economic and political existence. If not only our own statesmen but the statesmen of Europe in 1931 could have had the courage of their convictions and the needed foresight then, if those persons who now realize and know that we could have stemmed this tide of military aggression which has the world in its grip today with its concomitant growth of armies, navies, armaments, national defense, and huge wasteful spending for war, could but have used their foresight in 1931, how different a world this would be. And so now, in 1939, after Japan's entry into Manchuria, Italy's crossing and taking control of the Mediterranean and going down into Ethiopia in 1935, Germany's and Italy's entry into Spain in 1936, to say nothing of the previous rearmament of the Rhineland and the annexation of Austria in 1938 and Czechoslovakia's dismemberment and the present drive of Japan into China, now nearing its second year, which for all useful intents and purposes has forced both France and England out of the Orient, if not completely, then to such a marked degree that it is now apparent that it is only a matter of a few months before British Hong Kong, which is already surrounded by Japan, due to the capture in October of Canton to its north and the island of Hainan to its south on February 10, must fall or be destroyed. And after Hong Kong has so fallen, which was bombed on February 21, according to Associated Press dispatches from London, the next drive on the part of the Japanese will undoubtedly be Singapore, and then immediately after that Japan will be in a position to deal with the case of the United States. And that she will deal with her in her own way, there is no doubt, judging from her sinking of the Panay in December 1937 and the machine gunning of our sailors who were on a mission of mercy up the Yangtze, and that she will deal with us in her own way is also certain, if we are to judge from the commercial competition which she has given us throughout these many years in textiles, in toys, in electric-light bulbs, in pencils, in chinaware, and the dozens of other ways in which she has indicated that her competition is rare and intensive and too much for our ordinary strength to withstand.

When Japan has disposed of Singapore and has taken charge of the trade and sea routes to and from the Orient and of the Indian Ocean, including the Malay Peninsula and its many highly productive tropical islands, we will be well within her mercy. Do not forget that those islands produce some of our most essential and needed foreign products and importations without which this Nation could not possibly exist. At least democracy and our high standard of living could not be saved from the need for a managed governmental economy and dictatorship if we had to get along without the rubber, without the chromium, tin, hemp, jute, flax, and other tropical products which we are now buying there, and which we must have or for which we must find or develop very expensive substitutes, which would have a very costly effect on our living expenses, happiness, and freedom in this country.

BOYCOTTING JAPAN

We hear much talk today about boycotting Japan and putting an embargo on sales of goods to her, and there is undoubtedly much justification on the part of those who make the suggestion. But do not think that Japan has not heard of the presence of this movement in America and that she is not already preparing to protect herself from such a serious eventuality as she would be faced with if we were to cut her off immediately or in the future from all trade and commerce. Not that it would have any material bearing on the prosecution of the war in China, or her intentions in the Pacific and Indian Oceans, because if we cut her off there are plenty of other nations who would come to her aid if an "honest" dollar could be made by the businessmen of those nations. And she would also protect herself with substitutes and by the building of factories for the production of the things which she is now buying from this country. In fact, recent press dispatches show that she is already doing this very thing.

In fact, she is already purchasing in this country, taking to Japan, and setting up, factories equipped with heavy machinery, dies, and other equipment essential to the manufacture of automobiles and trucks and other things now being purchased here. Assuming that she carries on the war in China to any conclusion, whether successful or not, to what use do you suppose smart and efficient little Japan would put these same automobile factories when there is no longer need for trucks and cars for war purposes? Take that picture and add to it the control of the sea routes to those same South Sea Islands, which I have just mentioned, from which we obtain so many very essential raw materials for the use of our own automobile manufacturing industry. Is this not our greatest single industry? Does it not involve tremendously important manufacture of all kinds in this country where millions of our people find employment and livelihood? Could this industry possibly compete with the cheap labor in the Orient if they started to turn out automobiles, at probably one-half our price, and especially if our manufacturers had to pay tribute to businesslike Japan as they undoubtedly would if she took control of the rubber output and sales in her particular sphere or geographical orbit of control.

While this is, of course, theoretical, however, judging from the trend of the times and events since 1931—it is apparent that either one of two eventualities will develop in the Orient; either Japan will take over China and establish her sphere of influence throughout the Orient, with results which I have above briefly described, or worse, she will come to grips with this Nation. I am much interested in and concerned over both these possibilities, but I am personally and very intensely interested in the latter problem right now because of having three sons ranging in age from 15 to 21 years who will be the first to be called, if not the first to volunteer their services, in case of such a conflict. And while these three sons of ours will to us represent the best young manhood in America, I know that many of you are in a similar position and I want you all to know and to understand that I consider that my office as Congressman here in Washington makes me and all Congressmen the legislative trustees of millions of American youth to say nothing of our obligation and duty to their parents, relatives, and friends. We want our boys protected, you want yours, and they all want theirs protected. Not with false economy and lack of foresight and statesmanship as we now know was the case in 1917-18 when many lives were needlessly sacrificed and lost because of our terrible state of unpreparedness and as a result of which we are even still paying the penalties, and it seems very clear to me that this appropriation for the harbor at Guam is a very necessary and essential commencement and element of that protection which we all desire.

I say this advisedly, first, because this is the best guaranty of peace which we can possibly create; and also the best guaranty of preparedness, in terms of national defense, as is shown on page 28 of the Hepburn committee report, a committee made up of the outstanding experts on this subject, they say, and I quote—listen carefully:

A strong advance fleet base at Guam, developed to the practical limits which the natural resources invite, would assure the most favorable condition that could be brought about for the prosecution—should need arise—of naval operations in the western Pacific, arising from whatever necessity. It would reduce to its simplest possible terms the defense of Hawaii and the continental coast of the United States. It would also assure the ability of the fleet to operate with greater freedom in meeting emergency conditions that might arise in the Atlantic.

In other words, if it were to reduce to its simplest possible terms, as they say, the defense of Hawaii and the continental coast of the United States it would help to shorten the war and eliminate the possibility of danger and destruction and loss of lives in and to our own continental area, and, as they say, it would make it possible to release more of our fleet for the handling of any emergency condition which might arise in the Atlantic. Is it not very apparent that in terms of our own welfare and safety and in terms of the lives of our youth that we should promote this recommendation rather than to take the blind, ostrichlike attitude which would leave us in the same unfortunate situation we found ourselves in in 1917-18, when we did not have a single piece of artillery except a few Coast Artillery guns, which we could use at the front in France and when it took us 15 long, costly months before we could halfway train and equip an army for service at the front?

"WHAT WOULD WE DO?"

Suppose Japan, thinking to circumscribe us or to drive us from the Pacific, were to sink another one or two of our ships, machine-gunning the drowning and killing a thousand of our people, or suppose she were to shoot down a Pacific Clipper, killing our famed pilots and crew and the passengers, as she is very likely to do if it seems to meet with her purposes and requirements to eliminate us and democracy from the South Seas, from the Pacific and Indian Oceans, what would happen? You know, as I know, that the people of America would not exercise further, or sufficient restraint to keep from declaring that we must stand up for our rights and for democracy. In such an atmosphere as that event would create I do not believe they would wait for any actual attack on the mainland of the United States, even if more Congressmen than in 1917 were opposed to a declaration of war. We all know the power of the radio appeal and its widespread influence, and of the effect of screaming headlines in our papers. Who is there in position of leadership and in control of radio time at a moment's notice who would advise sufficient caution or restraint in such a day and in opposition to a mad public suddenly inflamed and aroused by the rabble-rousers who are in training and on the air daily and who do control radio time? File this description of what may happen in your memory, keep for future reference remembering too that democracy is wherever found and not just on the mainland of the United States, and also that there are still patriots in America who will fight for it with zeal and courage, if need be, even as they did in the days of the Revolution or the Civil War, or in 1917.

DO FORTIFICATIONS CAUSE WAR?

Furthermore, it is fallacious to assume that improvement and even fortification of this or any other island or strategic position will cause war. In the light of history and what we know about the causes of war, it would seem apparent that the improvement of the harbor at Guam would not be an element in the creation of a war with Japan. If it is, then certainly the highly developed fortification defenses of the Philippine Islands, which are much nearer China and Japan, would have caused war; or the fortifications of our own Mexican border; or of the French border; or of the Russian-Japanese border; or of Singapore and Hong Kong by England or of the Japanese Islands, which have been fortified by Japan near Alaska, would also have brought on war. No, I think we must look deeper for the cause of war than the mere improvement of a harbor or the building of fortifications in a small Pacific island, and I am also willing to admit that we must look deeper for the cure of war than the mere promotion of fortifications and national defense. In the final analysis we will have to look elsewhere than to any of these superficial aspects for the causes and for the cure, and we should not be wasting our time playing with such instrumentalities with the vain hope of obtaining peace or a solution for war thereby. It must be kept in mind that this or any other fortification or national-defense or preparedness measure is only useful in meeting the onslaught when it occurs and in putting it down and bringing it to a successful conclusion with the least possible expense of time, money, and lives.

THE PHILIPPINES AND TRADE

In contemplating this deep and profound problem I have mentioned some historical aspects, but in conclusion I wish to refer to a story which is told about that great and noble martyred President, William McKinley, who, as the narrative goes, when faced with the decision in 1899 as to what to do with the Philippine Islands, went into the seclusion of his inner chamber, in other words, into his holy of holies, where he took the problem to his God, and to yours, the Creator of all the earth, who is the same in 1939, today, as in 1899; and it is told of McKinley that when he came from his prayerful communion his face shone, for he had the answer to the Philippine problem, and he had it from the hand of God. He had it just as surely as Moses received the Ten Commandments, and just as surely as Paul, when stricken blind on the way to Damascus, received the message that the disciples of Christ were right and that he must aid in establishing a world religion for all people everywhere. That answer was that America should grasp the opportunity offered and that it was presented to her as a link in the chain of human destiny which is ever on the march upward and onward to higher planes of living, to higher citizenship, higher idealism which will eventually result in the realization of the philosophy inherent in the expression, the universal brotherhood of man. Whether our guardianship over and interest in the Philippines has resulted in our having a greater interest in and effect on the Orient and its problems of life I will not say and will leave to you to judge instead, but I do know that because of our connection with and interest in the Philippines they have been greatly lifted up until they are now almost ready to become an independent and self-governing nation. I also know that because of our influence that our export and import trade with the Philippines has increased 1,000 percent since 1905 when our present trade agreement with the Philippines went into effect.

Does that not mean something to us, and shall it not be asked: How can we hope to lift the world to our own level and to promote democracy and Christianity, which are more or less synonymous, and the high idealism which they both connote, if we take the narrow, nationalistic viewpoint and attitude which so many of our people do? In the fiftieth chapter of Psalms there is a verse which goes like this—I quote: "Every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills, for the world is mine and the fullness thereof." In other words, all of our boasted wealth and natural resources come to us only because the Maker has made us his trustees for a time, which means that we must remember that we hold all these fine and good things which we do in this land of liberty and freedom not for our own selfish personal benefit alone, but that we may give of them to all the world to enjoy by and through the process of trade. Anyone who believes war can be eliminated by restraining trade is chasing a will-o'-the-wisp. Do we still have fairy tales, or have the comic strips taken their places and still make it impossible for people to think in realistic ways? Trade is constructive, not destructive; trade is uplifting, not degrading; trade makes it possible for men to live by the sweat of their brow, and those who would restrain it are anything but pro-American. George Washington recommended it in his famed farewell address. Trade benefits both parties to a transaction because all business deals in things that belong to the One who created the world and Who lets us use freely so long as we use thoughtfully and unselfishly, and so I ask, Can we lift ourselves to the heights today so that we can think in terms of the future of America and democracy, and so we can think in terms of the youth of America and their future, or will we have their blood on our hands because of our indifference to the trends of the times and our lack of foresight? Can we think in the bigger terms of democracy and Christianity as a worldwide movement which can only lift and be successful if we are willing to promote and defend them, not only in America but in the seven seas and the far corners of the earth? It not only takes idealism and foresight, but it takes courage to face this problem of the improvement of the harbor at Guam, and I hope we will not be lacking in any of these elements in reaching our decision. [Applause.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW].

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Chairman, as I listened this morning to our distinguished colleague from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] read so impressively the Farewell Address of Washington, I could not help but feel that Washington's counsel and advice against becoming entangled in foreign alliances should be our guidebook today in the world's present chaotic condition, with war and the threats of war on all sides of us.

Mr. Chairman, I need not attempt to emphasize my interest in national defense. My record has been established. As the ranking member of the Committee on Naval Affairs for many years, I came in close contact with the activities of the Department, as well as with the personnel charged with the responsibility of directing those activities. My interest is today, as it has been always, in the establishment and maintenance of a Navy adequate in every way to meet the needs of our national defense. I yield to no man in the House in my position, established over the years, of advocating and supporting an adequate national-defense program.

I am in accord with the general purposes of the bill before us. I wish that I might approve it in its entirety. But my past experience and the close study which I have given to questions connected with naval operations causes me to look with alarm on the extension of our defense line in the Pacific far beyond the long recognized and acknowledged line from Alaska to Hawaii and to the Panama Canal.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, and I prize it jealously, that I believe I have enjoyed the confidence of my colleagues on questions involving naval operations. That confidence has come to me in part at least because I applied myself to a careful and deliberative consideration of issues on these matters. I have studied the one question which is in issue here—the proposed development of naval facilities at Guam. The proposal disturbs me. I doubt the wisdom or the necessity of making this move at this time. The hearings did not convince me that the proposal was either necessary or essential.

The thing that disturbs me is the potential danger which this move may create. It is fraught with possibilities that all of us shrink from—the road to war, not the road to peace.

Washington's words come to me again as he warned in his farewell message. They should be persuasive with all of us today. They challenge my conscience as I think of my responsibility to my constituents and to the people of the whole country, and that responsibility, as I see it, is to aid in the preservation of world peace and avoid any possible provocation to war.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I have enjoyed immensely the instruction and the all-day course in geography, we might say, as well as political science; and, especially, did I enjoy the remarks of my distinguished colleague from California, Lieutenant Commander IZAC, of the United States Navy, retired [applause]; and, then, I enjoyed the remarks of my distinguished colleague from Minnesota, Colonel MAAS, of the Marines (Reserve) [applause]. Without doubt, their remarks were very convincing, but I stand here as just a humble sailor in the United States Navy Reserves [applause], and I wonder whether too much significance has not been placed upon Japan being a potential enemy of our country.

Without doubt, there is another nation involved in this question, and before I mention this nation I feel it is necessary to remind my colleagues of the fact that not so many weeks ago Anthony Eden visited the United States. Prior to his visit we heard nothing of the fortification of the island of Guam, but upon his return to England there began to emanate from the White House statements urging the including of the island in the naval program. I am convinced we are not so much concerned with Japan as a potential enemy as we are in fortifying Guam for the sole purpose of having stationed there portions of our fleet, which will include cruisers, destroyers, submarines, as well as flotillas of planes. May I ask why? Is it not possible they would go to the aid of Great Britain in the event her heavily fortified port of Hong Kong is attacked by some nation in the Far East?

That brings us to the oft-repeated question, Are we going to again pull Great Britain's chestnuts out of the fire as we have done in the past, and as some would like us to do at the present time? I firmly believe we should have an army, a navy, and marine corps second to none. Not so many years ago in one of my national-defense addresses I said, "To protect the security of our Nation let us build a navy for each coast, and if necessary put one in the Mississippi River and one in the Great Lakes and one in the Missouri River." What I cannot understand, is the necessity of extending our line of defense to the island of Guam. I have listened to naval experts, and they say that the farther your fleet gets away from its base the weaker it gets. It stands to reason that if someone were to attack the island of Guam and we had to send our fleet to protect it, we would lose, if my memory serves me correctly, 25 percent of the strength of the fleet. Therefore would it not be well for the United States to retain its line of defense as we see it on the map? Then the attacking fleet must come to our line of defense, and in doing so they forfeit 25 percent of their power. [Applause.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK].

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, the wholehearted support accorded the national-defense measure last week in this House indicates that no trace of partisanship was permitted to influence Members in their desire to provide adequate preparedness for our Nation. Such expenditures and policies are predicated upon the theory that, instead of being Republicans or Democrats we are Americans with a single objective of preserving peace and remaining aloof from alliances with all nations. This is a traditional American policy! There should be a minimum of partisanship now as we consider the proposal to fortify the island of Guam.

Administration spokesmen on frequent occasions recently have upheld the Monroe Doctrine as a fundamental foreign policy, and reaffirmed the intentions of this democracy to foster and cultivate friendly relations with all countries under a good-neighbor policy. While disavowals of other designs are frequently made, and Americans should be willing and satisfied to accept this administration program, there has been a concerted campaign on the part of New Deal speakers to shape a foreign policy which is difficult if not impossible to reconcile.

A good-neighbor policy should be characterized by tolerance, justice, and a forthright willingness to recognize that other nations have the same inalienable right to live under the kinds of government which their nationals prefer. We demand that right for ourselves, and can accord others no less. Therefore, it is discouraging when acknowledged administration spokesmen constantly assail other nations in an abusive and unjustifiable manner.

One clothed with such authority this week broadcast an address on the announced subject, "Our Foreign Policy," and then instead of clarifying national policies, indulged in a bitter tirade against the so-called totalitarian nations.

Surely such tactics are not conducive to harmonious relations, nor is our national administration justified in passing judgment upon the particular forms of government which are dominant in other countries. Peace cannot be preserved by premeditated and vicious assaults upon peoples whom we would not permit to impugn our national policies. Passing judgment on others may prove to be extremely embarrassing.

This same spokesman declares that the appeasement policy followed by Great Britain since 1932 has failed, and the inference is drawn that it now devolves upon the United States to make sacrifices because of this apparent folly. With the same complete disregard for ethics, this spokesman flouts Japan with the declaration that its fixed policy is "the domination of eastern Asia, including the islands of the Pacific." He then added: "No country can successfully attack our shores."

Propaganda—whether officially inspired or otherwise—should not be utilized to distort the truth, nor to crystallize public sentiment against phantom or imaginary foes.

The Monroe Doctrine has effectually served to notify other countries that the United States will frown upon any attempts to interfere with this hemisphere. Likewise there is assumed by this country an obligation to refrain from interfering in the affairs of other continents. Any other position cannot be defended, and we should be willing to accord others the same treatment which we demand for ourselves.

In his famous message to the Congress delivered on December 2, 1823, President Monroe declared—

In the wars of the European powers in matters relating to themselves, we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy so to do. It is only when our rights are invaded or seriously menaced that we resent injuries or make preparations for our defense. With the movements in this hemisphere, we are of necessity more immediately connected. * * * Our policy in regard to Europe, nevertheless, remains the same, which is not to interfere in the internal concerns of any of its powers; to consider the government de facto as the legitimate government for us; to cultivate friendly relations with it, and to preserve those relations by a frank, firm, and manly policy.

That is the essence of the Monroe Doctrine. There is no disposition to criticize or assail any nation, or its form of government.

The people of this democracy recall their disillusionment of two decades ago, when they temporarily ignored the Monroe Doctrine and sought to interfere in the discords and controversies of Europe. The appeals of Woodrow Wilson to the Allies to refrain from exacting the spoils of war at the Versailles conference went unheeded, and two great nations professing democratic ideals demanded the right to grab approximately 1,000,000 square miles of colonial territory, and force upon the vanquished iniquitous terms which are acknowledged to be responsible for the precarious status of world conditions existing today.

These same democracies did not hesitate to repudiate their wartime obligations to the United States, which action is tantamount to violation of treaties. Any official attempt by the administration to ally the United States with those two democracies at this time virtually involves approbation of their imperialism to retain possession of their ill-gotten colonies. Likewise, this would be a repudiation of the policies advocated by the United States at Versailles, and a reprehensible disregard for those Americans who, living and dead, fought to make the "world safe for democracy."

Americans of this generation will not forget; they will not break faith. They will not be deluded by the alluring preachments of those whose egotism or vanity would destroy the unanimity of a Nation and mortgage its future.

Nothing less than an hallucination can justify this proposal to begin fortification of the island of Guam.

Naval and military authorities stress the far-reaching effects of such action.

The Monroe Doctrine commits the United States to a policy which should restrain us from questionable activities in the Orient.

Common sense dictates that we preserve our democracy at home.

If there are persons who seek foreign alliances or autocratic power in this country, let them reveal their designs and not resort to subterfuge to acquire absolute control over the destinies of this Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I have heard so much yesterday and today about the island of Guam that I have almost forgotten that other air bases are mentioned in the bill, Pensacola, San Juan, and even two places in Alaska, Sitka and Kodiak. It is only recently that both the Army and the Navy as well as the people of the United States generally have realized the utmost importance from the standpoint of national defense of providing defensive works in Alaska, and this realization has come about, of course, only by reason of the development of air power which has thrown into the discard many of the old earthbound concepts of strategy of military and naval science.

We all support this bill because we love peace and are convinced that peace for our Nation may be best maintained by providing adequate defensive forces and establishments. I realize that every Member of this Congress, and almost every American citizen, loves peace beyond all earthly things, because we all realize the bestiality of war and that war is a contradiction of civilization.

Some of us used to say, when we were children at least, and we ought still to say, "lead us not into temptation," and the principal merit of this bill is that it will not lead into temptation some of the dictatorships of the world. The only reason that China is now being overrun by a foreign foe is because the people of China led their neighbor into temptation by failing to provide adequate defensive works; and, just as surely as we are in this House today, if we fail to provide adequate defensive measures for our own country we will sometime undergo the same terror which is now being suffered by the people of China. It is our moral duty to avoid leading any of our neighbors into temptation—the temptation to loot us and take away everything we possess, including the most sacred of all things, our liberty—by failing to provide adequately for the national defense.

But, Mr. Chairman, I rose to speak more particularly of the importance of maintaining defense bases in Alaska, both of the Army and the Navy. The Navy bill is the one now before us. In order to illustrate what I have to say, there have been placed on the easel beside me two charts. The upper one is a chart or map of the world on the Mercator projection. Unfortunately it sadly distorts all the northern and southern portions of whatever is shown thereon. The lower chart is a great circle navigating or sailing chart of the North Pacific Ocean, and this gives really a truer picture of the North Pacific than the Mercator projection, so far as concerns the relation of Alaska to the United States and to the coasts of the countries on the other side of the Pacific Ocean, the Soviet Socialist Republic and Japan.

It is true that the great circle sailing chart of the North Pacific Ocean—and this is the chart used by navigators in navigating the ocean—does distort especially whatever appears on the lower part of the chart; it gives a distorted picture of some of the things that appear thereon; but it is correct in one thing, and that is that a straight line on that chart is the shortest distance between any two points shown on the chart. That is the virtue of the chart, and that is the reason it is used by navigators. And so you will see if you go on the shortest line from the western coast of the United States to Yokohama. You will go through the Aleutian Islands, north of some and south of others, or if you go from San Francisco to Yokohama you will go approximately 238 sea or nautical miles south of the Aleutian Islands.

So the straight and short line between the United States and the Orient—and I use Yokohama as the center of the Orient—is the route by the shores of the Aleutian Islands, and that shows you how vitally important it is that the Aleutian Islands and Alaska—to use the words that were recited to us this morning from the Farewell Message of the Father of his Country—be put on a suitable “defensive posture.” In other words, we must have adequate defense posts and establishments in the Aleutian Islands and in Alaska. The safety of the Nation demands it. That is recognized by the naval authorities and that is the reason you see in the bill two items, one for $2,900,000 for an air base at Sitka and another for $8,750,000 at Kodiak.

Let me recite to you a few of the facts with relation to distance between the United States and Yokohama. I refer to Yokohama, as I say, only because it may be called the center of the Pacific Orient. Before I recite these distances, my mind goes back to a study of the battles of the Peninsula Campaign, when I was a boy. Without detracting at all from the great genius of that marvelous leader of the southern army, historians impress upon us that he had one outstanding advantage—General Lee had the advantage of interior lines. He could always work on the short interior lines, and therefore he was able to bring to any battle, by the use of even inferior forces, a greater number of men and a greater number of guns than possessed by the enemy. To use the remark that was attributed to the very distinguished General Mosby, he realized that the essence of strategy was to get there first with the most men. So anyone who controls the coast of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands, as far as a battle in the Pacific is concerned, can get there first with the most ships and guns because the Aleutian Islands and the coast line of Alaska lie on the interior or short line between the United States and the Orient. Here are the figures:

The distance from Seattle to Yokohama, the straight line, the short line, between Seattle and Yokohama, is 4,254 miles. The distance from San Francisco to Honolulu is 2,091 miles. From Honolulu to Yokohama it is 3,394 miles. The total is 5,484, making a distance of 1,231 sea miles in the advantage of the route along the shores of the Alaska Peninsula. That is the reason that the chart shown by the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Morr], wherein he outlined the defenses of the Pacific, is so important with respect to Unalaska, because that is the port that lies closest to the short line between the United States and the Orient, and a sea fleet or an air fleet stationed at Unalaska will have an estimable advantage as far as the defense of the United States is concerned over any fleet moving across the Orient, directed to the shores of the United States.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. You propose there an air base at Sitka. As a matter of fact, is not the ground so rough and uneven that it would be impossible to establish an air base at Sitka?

Mr. DIMOND. No; but the base that is proposed for Sitka is a seaplane base, not an airplane base.

Mr. RANKIN. I have the statement on the authority of a former distinguished Member from the State of Washington, Hon. John F. Miller, that Sitka was the only capital in the world that never had a horse in it; it was so rough that they could not use horses. So I was wondering how you were going to use airplanes.

Mr. DIMOND. It would be a comparatively easy matter to build an adequate land field at Sitka and not at all costly. We shall have a landing field for airplanes there some day; I hope soon. The cost will not be great. But the base that is contemplated for Sitka is a seaplane base. The base contemplated by the provisions of this bill at Kodiak is also a seaplane base.

Let us consider more at length the matter or relative distances between points or places in the Pacific area. Kodiak is the most westerly of the naval air stations proposed by this bill. Kodiak is 1,237 miles from Seattle. Kodiak is about 3,300 miles from Yokohama. The total distance is approximately 4,537 miles. But, as I said a moment ago, the distance between Pearl Harbor, or Honolulu, and the nearest great city of the United States, San Francisco, is 2,091 miles. The distance from Seattle to San Francisco is about 700 miles. But from Kodiak to San Francisco the distance is less than 1,800 miles. It is, therefore, obvious that a defensive force, whether of seacraft or aircraft, stationed on Kodiak, is closer to the large cities on the Pacific coast of the United States—Seattle, Portland, and San Francisco—and therefore in better strategic position to defend those cities, than a similar force based on Pearl Harbor, for a base on Kodiak would give the inestimable advantage of having the short, interior line. In a hotly contested race even 200 miles, as would be the case with respect to San Francisco, might be of vital consequence, and in the case of Seattle the difference in favor of the Kodiak base would be nearly 1,000 miles. Here, as before, I use marine miles as the basis of measurement.

In saying this I do not wish to detract for a moment from the defensive value of the Hawaiian Islands. The defense installations there up to the present moment have probably cost us more than $400,000,000, and I for one believe that such works have been and are fully justified not only for the defense of the Pacific coast of the United States but, what is equally important, for the defense of the Panama Canal. The point that I make is that if the expenditure of $400,000,000 for defensive works in the Hawaiian Islands is justified, which I not only admit but assert, then the modest expenditures for Alaska which are now proposed as a measure of national defense are justified a million times and that million can be raised to the *n*th power.

Let me refer once more to the Mercator chart, used by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Morr] in his illuminating speech. Southwest of Kodiak, near the eastern end of the Aleutian chain of islands, you will see Unalaska and Dutch Harbor. That point, on the chart, has been indicated as the western limit, in that area, or our defense line. In my own judgment our defense outpost in the North will be somewhere in that region, for I consider Kodiak only a stepping stone from the States to our final and permanent great defense base in the North Pacific. Again are distances important. Unalaska is 1,707 miles from Seattle, less by 300 miles than the distance between Pearl Harbor and San Francisco. Unalaska is 2,547 miles from Yokohama, while, to repeat, the distance from Pearl Harbor to Yokohama is 3,394 miles, an advantage in favor of Unalaska of 847 miles. It is no wonder that the late, great Gen. William D. Mitchell, who had made a comprehensive study of the effect of air power upon modern strategy, should have said, as he did, that Alaska is the most important strategic area in the world. Alaska is important in the defense of the United States, because it stretches for a distance of 2,400 miles along the North Pacific Ocean, because it is on the direct short line from the United States to the Orient, or from the Orient to the United States, and because it offers a multitude of year-round ice-free harbors for the accommodation of the craft which ply the sea and the craft which ply the air.

It must be obvious that our military or naval forces based on Alaska are in the best possible position to cut in on any hostile force moving against the United States. With Alaska undefended, the United States is not adequately defended. At the present moment, with the fleet in the Atlantic, there is nothing in the world to prevent any hostile power from taking possession of all of Alaska without firing a shot or losing a man. We have no defense establishment in the Territory, except about 300 men in the Infantry at Chilkoot Barracks, who would be obliged to surrender, or escape if they could, if a hostile force should move against them, for they are too few in number to permit them to fight. And with Alaska in possession of a foe, the Territory would serve as a base for an attack, by sea or by air, upon the States. Remember, it is only 649 miles from Ketchikan, Alaska, to Seattle, Wash., a distance well within the radius of modern planes.

My only apprehension is that we are starting our defensive measures too late and proceeding with them too feebly. After all, the bill before us is only an authorization. The appropriations must follow to make what we do today effective. And I am depressed by the plan outlined in the report that the authorization of this bill contemplates a two- or three-year plan of construction. It is a pity that all of the money sought to be authorized in this bill will not be appropriated immediately to remain available until expended. The world is on fire, and yet we are proceeding as if, somehow, miraculously, that fire would not leap the fragile inflammable barrier that separates us from other nations and engulf us, too. God grant that those who so think are right.

But in the last issue of the news magazine Time I read a disturbing thing which indicates a different and more alarming condition of affairs. Hallett Abend, reporter in China for the New York Times, and a newspaper correspondent with many years experience in the East, says that the Japanese have already withdrawn most of their troops from China. The inference is that those troops, amounting to hundreds of thousands, have been sent to the Siberian border. The further inference is that the Berlin-Rome-Tokyo allies, or "axis," have agreed to strike for world dominion now, without delay, and that, as a consequence, the Soviet Government will be too much engrossed in the west to send many troops or many guns or many airplanes against the forces that Japan has recently taken out of China and posted on the Manchukuo-Siberia boundary line. The report so made by Mr. Abend, taken in connection with the clamor in western Europe, makes me fear that all democracies literally have their backs to the wall, and that their weapons are lamentably weak. I wish that ours were stronger this day, for the more powerful we are, the better we are prepared to meet all possible foes, the greater is the probability that our sons will be spared the horrors of war and will be able to live their lives in a nation at peace.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alaska has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield.

Mr. SHANNON. I just wanted to ask the gentleman to correct a statement he made attributing something to General Mosby. It was not Mosby. It was Bedford Forrest who said that.

Mr. DIMOND. I thank the gentleman for the correction. [Applause.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I desire, in the closing moments of this debate, to give expression to my opinion as to why we should not include the paragraph relating to Guam in this very important naval defensive program bill. Before I proceed, however, I wish to say that in no sense can this action or debate be, in any way, classified as a partisan debate. This bill was reported out of committee by a vote of 21 to 1, the one dissenting vote being a member of the majority party. We have, however, filed a dissenting opinion from the majority report insofar as that paragraph relating to the establishment of an air base at Guam is concerned.

This noontime we had the opportunity on this memorable day to listen to the reading of Washington's Farewell Address. Among other things, he said:

Observe good faith and justice towards all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. * * * Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other.

Continuing, he said:

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. Why quit our own to stand on foreign grounds? Why interweave our destiny with that of any other part of Europe, entangling our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

Much has been said in this debate during the last 24 hours about foreign policy and future parallel action of the Government of the United States with action of certain other nations of the world. In determining what we ought to do in respect to Guam, we should first determine what the national policy of the United States is to be, and whether or not we are to depart from the time-honored policy of the defense of the Western Hemisphere and our insular possessions. We have included in this bill a provision which, in itself, is nothing more nor less than a harbor improvement, but why is it in the bill? We have created the Rivers and Harbors Committee of Congress especially for the purpose of determining the economic justification of the improvement of our harbors and waterways. Some question has been raised as to the jurisdiction of this committee over the particular issue involved, but let me call to the attention of the membership that I hold in my hand three copies of reports of the rivers and harbors engineers of the United States War Department in respect to Midway Island and Wake Island. Last year Congress authorized the improvement of both these islands out there in the far Pacific. But both of them went through the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the Congress.

If Guam is a river and harbor project and not a defense measure, why is it included in a defense bill? Why is it not referred to the proper committee of Congress to be given due consideration as to its economic justification?

We heard earlier today a Member on this side of the aisle refer to Guam Harbor as not being available for the larger ships of the Navy. The plan covered by the item in this bill would provide a dredged harbor to a universal depth of 35 feet. At the present time, all over the harbor at Guam, we find the water ranging in depth from 60 to over 130 feet, with the exception of little islands popping up here and there. It is to remove these little islands to a depth of 35 feet that this bill for Guam is in part sponsored. So we find, with the exception of these islands—about eight in number—that the harbor is now available for a large part of the American fleet if the American Navy desires to locate them there. The question in which we ought to be interested today is whether we are reaching too far out into the far-western Pacific, 5,700 miles away from the mainland of the United States. Yes; we are going 3,307 miles farther west than the Hawaiian Islands, which is the western line of defense of continental United States.

I wonder, having heard the words of Washington read today, and to which we listened so attentively, whether we are challenging deliberately the good will of some other nation, and whether in the minds of the spokesmen of Japan we are not actually pointing a pistol at that country when we are suggesting the building up and fortification of the island of Guam. They say this is not fortification, but I have in my hand here a report from the so-called Hepburn Board, which said, among other things, that the establishment of a fully equipped fleet base at Guam capable of accommodating at least the major part of the fleet in all types would in itself practically assure the impregnability of the island. Yes, Mr. Chairman, the dredging of the harbor, the building of the breakwater, the development of the inner harbor is the first step toward the fortification of that island; and before we reach that point it seems to me that we should first determine what the foreign policy of the Government of the United States in the Far East is to be.

Those of us who dissented from the majority report found no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that, if this is simply a river and harbor improvement, it can be deleted from the bill and be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, a committee on which I have had the privilege of serving for 2 years. Let this committee determine whether the improvement of the harbor of Guam is economically justified.

In this critical hour, when the world is in an upset state of mind, when countries are eyeing each other with suspicion, let us be careful in determining what our policy shall be in either the Atlantic or the Pacific, because we know there is going to be a day of reckoning. We have further the testimony of Admiral Leahy before the Committee on Naval Affairs only a year ago to the effect that a fleet three times the size of the increase asked for in the naval expansion bill of a year ago would not be sufficient to enable this country to carry on a successful campaign in the far-western Pacific.

Yesterday the question was asked, What are we going to do with Guam, and what are we going to do with the Philippines? Admiral Leahy answered that last year when the naval expansion bill was under consideration when he said that—

The Philippine Islands at the present time are an outlying possession of the United States. The Navy at the present time, and as contemplated under this bill, will not be sufficiently strong to arrange for the protection by the United States of the Philippines against any major power. That is one of the things in the approved policy that we are unable to do.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it is clear what we are going to do with the Philippines, and it is clear what we are going to do with Guam. We are building up and improving the harbor at Wake Island, some 4,000 miles from the mainland of the United States, and which is the first outpost of our defense lines. Why should we go out to Guam, 5,700 miles away from the mainland of the United States and only 1,353 miles from Japan, and thereby provoke another nation with which we are on friendly terms? Why do anything that may incur the wrath of any nation or irritate them in any way, when conditions are so unsettled as they are today throughout the world? Why should we go looking for trouble that may be a costly venture, when our duty should be to preserve peace? [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD].

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, when some great American, impressed with the tremendous value of the public service rendered to his country by George Washington, said that he was "first in peace, first in war, and first in the hearts of his countrymen," he uttered a great and universal truth to which all good Americans subscribe.

On this, Washington's natal day, February 22, I, as a humble citizen, privileged to sit in this historic Chamber, wish to add just one word to all the eloquent tributes paid to the great and immortal Washington by saying: Mighty as was his contribution to his country as President, soldier and statesman, there is another field to which his vast talents were devoted and to which field he contributed lavishly; I refer to his contribution to the philosophy of public education.

Admirers of Washington's military genius and statesmanship will find a rich field for study in his views on public education. He saw this problem clearly and he saw it as a whole; he recognized its importance and some of his observations are so all-embracing, so far-reaching, and so modern that they apply today with a force that is absolutely astounding.

Washington was first a great American. He was a great soldier. He was a great and far-seeing statesman. But above and beyond his greatness in the field of action, he was a great seer and philosopher in the educational field, and with all due respect to our modern thinkers along these lines, I doubt if we shall see his like again. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I have four things I desire to say about national defense.

DEEPEDED NATIONAL SPIRIT

First, I believe America needs more than anything else a new and deepened national spirit. We need to have a sense of being all in the same boat. We need to understand that we have problems that are not the fault of individuals or of political parties and that have to be dealt with in a spirit of common effort. Some people will have to remember that personal attacks on the President of the United States—and, after all, he is President of the United States—if carried on in improper fashion come very close to attacks upon the very genius of the Nation itself.

THE RIGHT OF SELF-PROTECTION

The genius of a democracy is liberty. The genius of a democracy is a free discussion of its problems. But democracy is face to face today with the necessity of finding how it can protect itself against certain groups which take advantage of that very liberty for the purpose of organizing to destroy it. I am one of those who believe that democracies have a right to put a ban on the corporate existence of such organizations, and I have introduced a bill which, if enacted into law, would accomplish this.

PUTTING OUR FINANCIAL HOUSE IN ORDER

Mr. Chairman, in the second place, I want to speak about national defense from the point of view that was taken by one of the Members on the Republican side, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER], who stated that we ought to put our financial house in order as a measure of national defense. I agree with him. But I do not believe that it can possibly be done unless this Congress recognizes the fact that you cannot put a national financial house in order until such time as you have asserted the fundamental constitutional provision that the National Government, the Congress specifically, and it alone, has the ultimate power to coin money and regulate its value.

Until this right is recognized you cannot put your financial house in order. The fundamental need of the business of this Nation is now and has always been the existence of a volume of actively circulating medium of exchange adequate to transact the business of an expanding economy. Our Budget has been unbalanced in recent years in order to try to buy into circulation through the sale of Government bonds sufficient bank deposits to create a volume of circulating medium which would be something like adequate to transact our business. True, this effort has not been altogether successful up to now. It has increased the national debt, as I see it unnecessarily, because I do not believe this Nation or any other should be called upon to pay interest for the right to use its own credit.

Take the example of the R. F. C. about which we were talking a few days ago. The R. F. C. in the past has not received its money for making secured loans as a private bank would get it. If a man comes in with adequate security and wants to borrow money from a private bank, according to our existing fractional reserve banking system, that man's security becomes itself the base for the creation of an equivalent amount of money in the form of bank credit. The contraction of that loan calls into being the credit necessary to make it. But the R. F. C., a Government agency, is denied that privilege. The R. F. C. must get its money from the Treasury. The Treasury gets its money by selling Government obligations. The Government debt is thereby increased before the R. F. C., an agency of the Government of the United States, can be regarded as having any credit to lend on however good security or with however large a capital stock. In other words, we have turned the thing exactly around, and instead of Congress having the right to coin money and regulate its value, the Congress gives away that right and itself must pay interest in order to exercise it. We are assuming that the reservoir of credit in this Nation—credit that rests on the property and the people of the Nation—is something that is privately and not nationally owned.

If we would straighten out these things, then indeed we could put our financial house in order. I may add in this connection that we must recognize the fact that it is in the field of regularizing and increasing the buying power of the American people in line with the power of this country to produce that the solution of this great problem must be found and that national defense in its true sense must include the solution of these economic problems.

THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE POLICY

In the third place, I want to say a few things on the subject immediately before us. I have changed some of my opinions since I became a Member of this body. I am ready to go along with those people who say the American Navy should be large enough to protect the Western Hemisphere. I am ready to go along with the Western Hemisphere policy, which states that America proposes to see to it that no nation in the world, herself included, shall interfere with the self-determination of any nation in the Western Hemisphere. I am for a strong foreign policy, and I think a strong policy can also be a peaceful one. I do not want to see anything interfere with our Government's pursuing a policy of that kind. When I say that, however, I must say further that I do not propose at any point in my public or private career to make remarks or speeches which may be interpreted as implying an attempt on my part to deny to the people of any other nation their right to have the form of government they choose to have. By the same token, on the other hand, I propose to see to it that the American people have the right to be free from interference on the part of any foreign nation or any group serving under the direction of any foreign nation as to what form of government we shall have in our country. [Applause.]

With these few preliminary remarks, may I say that I shall vote for the pending bill, but I am also compelled to say that I have found it impossible to vote in favor of the $5,000,000 for Guam, not because I think it is something we do not have the right to do but because I do not think it is wise. I was impressed by the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT], and I feel much as he does. We need to pursue a policy which will be as clear cut as it can be and which will be aimed just as straight as it is possible to aim it at peaceful relations with all nations and the protection of the freedom of the western world.

I do not want the line we draw to be too far-flung. I want it to be truly a policy of defense of the Western Hemisphere. I do not set myself up as an expert on these matters and I realize our country cannot be disinterested about what happens in other parts of the world, but I cannot believe it is wise or good policy for us to set up an outpost as far away as Guam.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MAAS. Would the gentleman have objected to the $5,000,000 for Guam if it had been brought in here in a rivers and harbors bill or some other legislation?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I may say to the gentleman I do not believe I would, for then it might indeed have been regarded simply as a matter of harbor improvement and nothing more. One of the principal reasons I feel impelled to vote against it is not because of the proposition in and of itself but because of what seems to me to be the unfortunate implications that have been put into it, as I believe, in some instances for political purposes.

Mr. MAAS. The gentleman does not object to the harbor work as such?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. No; I do not.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In view of what the gentleman has said, how can the gentleman object to this development when the character of the work is not military at all?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. As I explained to the gentleman, simply because of the implications that I believe have been made all too plain in the course of the discussion of this matter.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Who made the statements that caused the gentleman's mind to come to that conclusion, when this is purely a nonmilitary development? I said nothing that should disturb the gentleman's mind.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. They were not statements by people on this side of the aisle.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. On any side of the aisle.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. As a matter of pursuing a policy on the part of this country which will be in line with the policy of the Western Hemisphere defense, about which I spoke a moment ago, I cannot conscientiously do anything else in this particular instance. In this difficult world I want our Nation to be strong, but I want her to consider carefully how thin she can afford to spread her strength about the world.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I believe 100 percent in the gentleman's statement to the effect that other countries may have such forms of government as they like, and we reserve our right to our own form of government. Will the gentleman agree with me in the proposition that there is a kind of dual government as between the Philippine Islands and the United States until independence is granted, and that as we discuss these matters it is entirely in order, based on the gentleman's proposition, to talk about the form of government in the Philippines and what the people there are likely to do in looking forward to independence? Does the gentleman agree with me that we can bring this in as part of our own proposition?

THE ULTIMATE DEFENSE OF HUMANITY

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am not sure. But there is one further word I want to leave with you—an encouraging word, I think. We have talked at length of dictators, of force and might, of armaments and fortifications. We have spoken not at all of certain of the fundamental bases of human life. There is, as every religious person knows, a power greater than military power, greater than any dictator, greater than any armada. It is the power of the souls of men, of sacrifice, of sincere, religious faith. Today is not its day to be in the headlines of the newspapers. But it is a power superior to all others nonetheless. And ultimately it cannot be destroyed. Upon its indestructibility rests the hope of mankind.

A dictator may have his day. Tyrants have strutted across the stage before this. But all of them have been creatures of a moment, and the time has always come and always will come when they will disappear.

And so while we concern ourselves, as we must do, about the necessities of the present hour, let us not forget that America's ultimate reliance, like that of all mankind, must be in the eternal strength which comes only with the bringing of a divine justice into the life of her people. Civilization may be destroyed by the very genius of man himself if that genius is not controlled by a corresponding moral development. Religion and all it stands for is less easily destroyed. The will to live, the will to be free in spirit are less easily destroyed. We ourselves and our children after us may suffer and even die because of the blunders we may make and the madness that now grips certain parts of the world. But future generations will some day, somehow, find their way back home to values which today are all too often forgotten and sometimes even laughed at but which are indeed the things men live by and the things they cannot live without.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, these are critical times. Times when all of us should keep our heads. Today we find a world in which most people are tense and worried. The peace of the world depends very largely upon the self-restraint exercised, not only by its rulers, but by common citizens everywhere. I think we must take this fact into consideration in determining the wisdom of making the expenditures at Guam which are authorized in this bill. In normal times an expenditure for these items would probably arouse no comment. At the present time, if these expenditures for harbor improvements were included in a bill reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, they might not excite apprehension.

We are, however, faced with this situation. A commission composed of officers of the Navy has recommended the fortification of Guam. The improvements which are included in this bill are such as would be undertaken in connection with the fortification of the island. The approval of such a project at this time does not commit us to the fortification of Guam, but it does make it more likely that such a policy will finally be adopted. It is a logical first step toward such a policy.

Let us consider the situation of Guam. It is 6,200 miles from the mainland. It is 1,500 miles from Japan. It is 4,000 miles from Oahu, our Gibraltar-like outpost in the Pacific. If we fortify Guam, it is against one nation, Japan. Our fortification of the island, or any steps toward it, are bound to be construed in Japan as an unfriendly act and as an attempt on our part to project ourselves into far-eastern affairs. We can very readily understand the attitude of Japan by asking ourselves what would we think if Japan should begin fortifying an island within 1,500 miles of our shores? The fortification of Guam might be justified if we were going to retain the Philippines. It might be justified if our foreign policy should take the turn of joining with Great Britain and France and taking part in the quarrels of Europe and Asia. It might be justified if we expect to go to war with Japan over our commercial interests in the Orient. It is inconsistent with the policy which has been already adopted in getting out of the Philippines. It is inconsistent with the theory we are increasing our military and naval establishment solely for purposes of national defense.

To fortify Guam now would be construed as putting a chip on our shoulder. It will give the militarist group in Japan a further excuse for expanding that country's military and naval defenses. It will build up in Japan a feeling of suspicion and hatred toward this Nation, which will in turn stir up further hatred of Japan in our own country.

I am not sure that anyone knows what our foreign policy is today. Certainly, the various statements which the President has made on the question in recent months cannot be reconciled. There is no question, however, but what the people of this country want a foreign policy which will keep us out of war. There are some who believe we can keep out of war more easily by following a policy of strict isolation. There are others who feel that we can contribute to world peace and to our own safety by following a course of action which is parallel to that of the democracies in Europe. There are others who want to go so far as to ally ourselves with European democracies.

The people of this country have as yet had no opportunity to express themselves on the question of foreign policy. Congress has had no such opportunity. I am not sure that it is necessary that the country at this time determine just what its foreign policy will be. It is perhaps better that we make the determination of our policy contingent upon what may happen in Europe during the next few months. However, until the people of this country definitely determine what policy they want to follow, it would seem to me to be the part of wisdom to take no action in the way of military or naval preparedness which would commit us to one policy or another. We can pass legislation to increase our air force, to expand our coast defenses, and to build up our Navy without committing ourselves to any particular foreign policy. We can expand our military and naval establishment on the basis of defending the Western Hemisphere without making any new determination as to foreign policy. The moment, however, that we take steps to fortify Guam, it is going to be construed by other nations as a change in policy. Japan is going to construe it as an indication that we expect to meddle in far eastern affairs. European countries will probably construe it as meaning that we are going to cooperate with England and France in the Far East. It may be construed as indicating that we expect to change our position on Philippine independence. Why run the risk of having our motives misconstrued? Why take the chance of committing ourselves to a program which, if followed up, will mean an entire change in our foreign policy? Why begin a course of expenditures which will run into hundreds of millions of dollars? Why not use the money that would be expended in Guam at the present time to build up our defenses closer home? Why give a jittery world another cause for apprehension? [Applause.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have a deep personal interest in this bill because it involves my old service. During the World War as an American naval aviator I was attached for 3 months to the French forces overseas and for 3 months to the Royal Naval Air Service. I am possibly the only man in this House who has personally fought shoulder to shoulder with the French and also with the British. It was a great experience, but I for one am anxious that no American shall ever again have the experience of fighting beside the French and the British, outside of this hemisphere. [Applause.] Guam is outside the Western Hemisphere.

It is said that we are not fortifying Guam, but this matter has taken such a course that there is nothing we can do that will not be interpreted as a hostile act. There is nothing we can do that will not establish a precedent that will rise up to haunt us.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I cannot yield just now.

If the Japanese, through their navy or any other department, were blandly to establish a seaplane base, or merely deepen a harbor, which was located within 1,335 miles of New York or San Francisco, or any other part of the continental United States, we would consider this an unfriendly act, but if we adopt this Guam proposition, we would be barring ourselves by that precedent from making the immediate and vigorous protest which the Monroe Doctrine requires us to make.

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I refuse to yield at this time.

I served in Washington in 1921 and 1922 in the Arms Conference. That was a time when there was tension between the United States and Japan, and there were rumors of secret treaties between Japan and Great Britain. Under American auspices, however, with a will toward peace and without sacrifice of sovereignty, we gathered the nations here and resolved those difficulties for a decade and more. It is not what was done there, but what has happened since that causes the present tension.

I, for one in this troubled world, want to see our Government take the lead not in hostile gestures with friendly countries but toward peace. I do not believe we can do it now if we make any sort of gesture toward making arrangements in Guam that look toward fortification, whatever our present excuse may be.

I now yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DREWRY. I just wished to ask the gentleman if he is aware of the fact that there was a small aviation force, a force of four planes, maintained at Guam from 1920 to 1931, and that no objection was made then? Why should any objection be made now?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Simply because we cannot fool ourselves and we cannot fool the world. This present Guam gesture, based on the Hepburn recommendations, has taken such a course that there are no steps that we can take there now that will not be interpreted the world over as an extension of the Monroe Doctrine to new parts of the world.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. What other interpretation can be placed on the dredging of Guam Harbor—when practically the entire harbor except for a few coral reefs, about a half a dozen in number, will have to be dredged to a depth of 35 feet—than that we are going to use the harbor as a fleet base?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. There is no other implication; and the vice of this measure as now proposed, of pretending that it is merely dredging—a friendly, commercial step—is that it establishes a precedent of insincerity in foreign relations that we would be the first to resent if Japan attempted the same thing within our hemisphere [applause], and remember that Guam is within their hemisphere. [Applause.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON of California. Mr. Chairman, this is my first speech on the floor of the House. About 2 weeks ago I spoke to one of my colleagues from California on this side of the House, and I said to him, "Is it necessary that a new man make a speech about every 2 or 3 days," and his reply was emphatically, "No," and he told me this: "Do not make a speech unless you have something to say." He then told me, "Do not make a speech unless you feel you are qualified to speak on the subject."

I feel I am somewhat qualified to speak on this subject, not because of former experience in naval affairs but because of the fact I have been sitting for almost 3 weeks in the Naval Affairs Committee listening to the testimony given by experts and by all others on this subject. I have listened to these witnesses when they were being cross-examined. I have listened to them when they were to answer some ticklish question that seemed to have them on edge. I have watched their demeanor and I have come to the conclusion after 3 weeks of listening to this testimony, and asking a few questions, that this bill which is before the House should be passed as recommended by the Naval Affairs Committee, and that includes the island of Guam along with all the others. [Applause.]

There is only one question that seems to be controversial and that seems to be the question of Guam. A lot of people, I think, have been misinformed about this bill. They have thought that the bill included fortifications. Many people have written in from all over the United States and they have all used the words "fortification of Guam," and I want to repeat, although it has been stated by practically every speaker on the program today that there is no fortification included in this bill. This bill includes the dredging of the harbor there, it includes the cost of a breakwater, and it makes possible a runway for the taking off of seaplanes in that area.

Another thing, besides improving the Guam harbor, there is nothing to be done there except in the matter of defense, and I can prove that to you by a question that was asked by our chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee. The chairman asked this question of Admiral Leahy:

You recommend the establishment of a base from a military standpoint at Guam purely as a defensive measure for the United States, Hawaii, and the Panama Canal?

The admiral answered as follows:

In my opinion the establishment of a base at Guam would provide valuable and needed assistance in repelling an attack on the Hawaiian Islands, the continental United States, and the Panama Canal.

So the matter is purely a defensive measure.

Then another thing that I would like to bring to your attention is this: This improvement at Guam would permit at least 24 seaplanes to be stationed there at times and these seaplanes would be the eyes of the Navy and they would go out on patrol in that area and if a hostile nation should start through that area with a battle fleet the eyes of the Navy would see this hostile force and report back to the United States Fleet and the defense line would be maintained at Hawaii, and I wish to say this, as coming from California, the west coast would be the first to suffer if the defenses failed at Hawaii.

So for this reason I have had placed on this board a map which shows the distance that would be taken by surface boats to go from this point over to Asia, while this is the distance by air. In other words, the distance has been reduced by air and by the speed of airplanes to an apparent short distance. In other words, it looks as though it is thousands of miles from continental United States to Asia by boat, but when you look at the map and think of the distance that can be covered by the speed of an airplane you see that Asia is right at our front door.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of California. Not at this time, please.

I may say to you that the distance from the west coast to the Middle West is only a short distance by the speed of the airplane.

I might say this in passing, that of the six Members who signed the minority report of the Committee on Naval Affairs only one of them lives and represents a district west of the Mississippi River, and that happens to be in Missouri. I was born in Illinois and lived there until I was 23 years old. I grew up in that atmosphere also, where we thought that we were smug and secure, and that we were thousands of miles from either the east or the west coast, and had nothing to fear. I remember back in 1921 making a trip from Illinois to California in a model T Ford, and it took 30 days to go through the State of Montana to reach California, but today, just last week, an airplane went from Los Angeles to New York in 7½ hours. That means that this airplane probably passed over Chicago or Kansas City or St. Louis, Mo., only about 4½ to 5 hours after it took off from Los Angeles, Calif. So the people in the Midwest, Illinois, Iowa, Ohio, and here in the East, are very close to the Pacific coast, and I am saying to all of you, whether you be Republicans or Democrats, westerners, midwesterners, or southerners, that you should take into consideration that this is a very small world after all.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of California. In just a moment.

If there is to be a battle in the Pacific, I prefer that it be fought out there two or three thousand miles out, instead of on the coast of California, Oregon, or Washington.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of California. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, the gentleman is defending Guam as a national-defense project and not as a commercial project.

Mr. EATON of California. I am defending Guam as a defense, and also from a commercial aspect, because I think we had testimony before the committee that it was necessary to have that station at Guam in order to keep the trade channels open to the Malay States.

Mr. MICHENER. The reason I asked the question is that the general trend has been on the part of the members of the committee defending Guam to insist that this is not a national-defense matter and has nothing to do with national defense, and if the Congress ever sees fit to make it a national-defense project, it can. I am glad to have the gentleman's frank statement.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of California. Yes.

Mr. MAAS. I think the gentleman from Michigan has entirely misinterpreted the situation. He is confusing the fact of the development at Guam for defense and the defending of Guam—two entirely different things. I have not heard anybody advocating this development who did not say that it had great defense value, but that was distinguished from fortifying it, certainly at the present time.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; but it was not in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman such additional time as he may need.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of California. Yes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The quotation from Admiral Leahy interested me very much, in the matter of establishing our air-defense line at Guam, and I hope the gentleman finds the exact language of Admiral Leahy, but if he will permit me, I ask the ranking Republican member on the committee if he ever heard Admiral Leahy make the statement that the new defense line of the United States will be at Guam?

Mr. MAAS. No; no such statement was ever made.

Mr. EATON of California. Let me make this statement—

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of California. Not at this time. The chairman asked this question of Admiral Leahy:

You recommend the establishment of a base from a military standpoint at Guam purely as a defensive measure for the United States, Hawaii, and the Panama Canal?

Admiral Leahy replied as follows:

In my opinion, the establishment of such bases as are contemplated in the islands referred to in the bill would provide valuable and almost essential assistance to the fleet in preventing an attack on the Hawaiian Islands, Alaska, the coast of the United States, and the Panama Canal.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. He did not attempt, then, to state or leave any inference that the defense line of the United States would be put 3,300 miles from the Hawaiian line by that statement?

Mr. EATON of California. No.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of California. Yes.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Does not the gentleman agree with me when I say that the Empire of Japan has never been deterred in her efforts to create a line of defense or of offense regardless of what other nation it might hurt?

Mr. EATON of California. Yes. I thank the gentleman for that statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAWKS].

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, I have been sitting here for 2 days listening to this debate. This morning you heard an address by my colleague from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN], in which he attempted to take the German people, both in this country and outside of this country, over the coals. I think most of you are acquainted with the fact that in the State of Wisconsin we have some of the finest American citizens there are in this country. By far, a majority of them are of German extraction. My name being Hawks would indicate that I had a lot of English blood in me. I have, and I am proud of it; but I also have some German blood in me. I imagine that a large percentage of the people in this House have a certain amount of German blood in their veins. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] referred to a bund meeting in New York. I did not hear that gentleman refer to Communist meetings that were being held all over the United States at the same time that a few German people were meeting in New York. Why under the sun, what reason is there that during the past few weeks in the House there has been no mention of the Communists? We have been attempting to malign the German people and we have been attempting to malign the Italian people. We have had to listen to statements such as the gentleman from Colorado made this morning, with very little said about the slimy, dirty operations of the Communists in this country. What has all this business got to do with Guam? What has all this business got to do with the present bill that is before the House? I would like to see the $5,000,000 that I know you are going to appropriate to dig out a lot of sand in Guam given to Mr. Hoover down at the Federal Bureau of Investigation. I would like to have Mr. Hoover take that $5,000,000 and clean up some of the very rotten situations that we have right in this country. I think it is high time that this House got down to a common-sense consideration of some of the real problems that we have within our own boundaries, rather than be sticking our necks out because of a hunk of sand out in the Pacific Ocean. [Applause.] Certainly there are enough activities going on in this country, vicious activities, attempting to undermine the kind of Americanism that a great many of us fought for during the past World War.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKS. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is the membership of the House to infer from the gentleman's discourse so far that he is in sympathy with the activities of the so-called bund in New York and Chicago?

Mr. HAWKS. I am not in sympathy with any organization that has for its underlying principle the destruction of American democracy.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HAWKS. But I am also not in sympathy with statements being made on the floor of this House that confine their attack entirely to one group and will not take into consideration the activities of other groups. All of a sudden the most vicious thing in this country, communism, has been put into the background.

I would like to ask another question: Why, all of a sudden, have all of the radical thinking Members of this House turned around in support of these defense measures? I have not found an answer to that yet, either. Why all of a sudden do we hear little opposition on the part of men who used to be confirmed pacifists, and who are now coming out in whole-hearted support of these defense measures? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to consume no further time in general debate.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that the Committee on Naval Affairs adopted the recommendation of the Navy Department for the establishment of an aeronautical engineering laboratory at the Philadelphia Naval Aircraft Factory and that an authorization of $1,800,000 for that purpose is included in this bill. There is very little I can say, after the contributions of my Republican colleagues on the Naval Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS], and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MORR], regarding this bill. I think their very able statements have demolished the arguments of those who expressed fear that this development of the island of Guam constitutes an aggressive policy on the part of the United States.

I would like to point out something that I wish the press of this country would stress rather than the hysteria which they have been emphasizing. That is, that all the hearings of this committee have been public and in the open; that the officers of the Navy Department, the Chief of Naval Operations, Admiral Cook, and other responsible officers have appeared before the committee and have answered fully and frankly the most intimate questions regarding the national defense and the naval policy of the United States. I would like to point out that in the committee itself, in its discussion of every item in this bill, including Guam, the discussion has been in open and public hearings, and there never has been a secret executive session.

The only ones who seemingly are contributing anything to hysteria are those who are opposing this project on the island of Guam. No one on the committee who favors this project has said anything that would lead anyone to believe that any aggression is contemplated. I think that the naval officers of the United States are not bellicose individuals. I do not think they are belligerent. I think they are concerned with the peaceful preservation of the security of the United States. I think that when they come before the committee and the Members of this House with certain recommendations regarding what they feel will contribute to the efficient operation of the United States Navy, we have a right to think that they are speaking as patriotic Americans, and that they are concerned primarily with the defense of this country.

Twenty-four planes on the island of Guam! That is all that is to be accommodated by the development authorized in this bill. I submit that even a layman knows that 24 planes do not constitute a threat of aggression to anyone. If they serve as a scouting fleet that would be able to warn the American Navy in time of war and thus preserve perhaps numerous units of our fleet and thus American lives, I think the sum of $5,000,000 would be very well spent.

If you itemize the amounts as specified in the report of the committee you will see that they are for the building of a breakwater, dredging the harbor, and providing for parking space and ramps for seaplanes that Admiral Cook said could not exceed 24 planes. I do not think we should be hysterical about it.

I think we should be cognizant of the fact that we have to defend the shores of the United States. Everyone knows that it was because we allowed our Navy to deteriorate in the 10 years between 1922 and 1932 that it is now necessary for us to be somewhat frantic about the adequacy of our own national defense. Had we proceeded with an orderly expansion of our Navy we would have no fear today that our Navy was not strong enough to protect us and to obviate the need of any entangling alliances with any other power.

I think the debate upon this floor demonstrates the fact that this item in this bill is not a step in the direction of aggression, but that it adds to the efficiency of the operation of the United States Navy and to the defense of our own shores. I hope the Committee will pass the bill, including the item for the island of Guam. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to establish, develop, or increase naval aviation facilities, with which shall be included the authority to purchase, accept by gift, or otherwise acquire land and to construct buildings and accessories, with approximate costs as indicated, at or in the vicinity of Kaneohe Bay, $5,800,000; Midway Island, $5,350,000; Wake Island, $2,000,000; Johnston Island, $1,150,000; Palmyra Island, $1,100,000; Kodiak, Alaska, $8,750,000; Sitka, Alaska, $2,900,000; San Juan, P. R., $9,300,000; Pensacola, Fla., $5,850,000; Norfolk, Va., $500,000, for acquiring the land described and authorized by the act of June 14, 1934 (48 Stat. 957), as amended by section 5 of this act; Tongue Point, Oreg., $1,500,000; Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, $2,800,000; and Guam, $5,000,000, the total cost not to exceed $52,000,000, except as may be otherwise authorized by law: Provided, That the approximate cost indicated for each project enumerated above may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be varied upward or downward by an amount not to exceed 25 percent of the approximate cost indicated, but the total cost of $52,000,000 shall not be exceeded: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as authorizing the expenditure of more than $5,000,000 at Guam. In addition to other authority contained in this section the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to proceed with the construction of aeronautical engine and materials laboratory buildings at the Naval Aircraft Factory, Philadelphia, Pa., at a cost not to exceed $1,800,000. In addition to other authority contained in this section, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to accept, free from all encumbrances and without cost to the United States, title in fee simple to land or other realty at or in the vicinity of Corpus Christi, Tex., to be used for the purpose of establishing a naval aviation training station.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUTPHIN: On page 2, line 5, after "$2,800,000", strike out "and Guam, $5,000,000."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, by agreement entered into yesterday it is understood that section 1 with the amendment would be passed over until tomorrow. I therefore ask unanimous consent that this section and the amendment thereto be passed until tomorrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the amendment should also provide for the reduction of the total amount the bill carries in the event the amendment is adopted.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We will deal with that in the event it becomes necessary. We will correct the bill if Guam is thrown out, so that the total will correspond with the action of the Committee in that regard.

Mr. CHURCH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, it is understood there is to be no limitation on debate as regards Guam.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is clearly in error. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] agreed to a 30-minute limitation of debate on this item.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The understanding was that there would be 30 minutes allocated to debate on the Guam item tomorrow.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it permissible to speak under the 5-minute rule on the general aspects of the bill, making some reference to the Guam situation?

The CHAIRMAN. That may be done if there is no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, may I call the gentleman's attention to the statement made yesterday by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]:

Let us have this understanding then: That tomorrow we shall complete the consideration of the bill with the possible exception of Guam, and the vote in the Committee on that question will be on Thursday.

He further stated that there should be 30 minutes of debate, 15 minutes on each side, under the 5-minute rule, on the Guam item.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, Section 10 (a) of the Philippine Independence Act of 1934 provides that—

On the 4th day of July immediately following the expiration of a period of 10 years from the date of the inauguration of the new government under the constitution provided for in this act, the President of the United States shall by proclamation withdraw and surrender all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty then existing and exercised by the United States in and over the territory and people of the Philippine Islands, including all military and other reservations of the Government of the United States in the Philippines—

And so forth. Section 11 of the same act provides:

The President is requested, at the earliest practicable date, to enter into negotiations with foreign powers with a view to the conclusions of a treaty for the perpetual neutralization of the Philippine Islands, if and when Philippine independence shall have been achieved.

Yesterday, in addressing the House on the bill now under consideration, I made the observation that the present members of the House would not live to see the day when the Philippines were politically and economically an independent Republic. That statement was not restricted to the full consummation of the propositions laid down in the independence act. There is operating in a most effective manner in the Philippines at this very moment what might be termed "a racial influence" the metes and bounds of which have not yet been appraised by the people of the United States. This racial influence flows from the orientalism and blood relationship existing between the Japanese and the Filipinos. Long before the farewell kiss is extended by the Filipino to his American coddler, the 1898 adopted protegee upon whom we have lavished only blessings and ease for the past four decades, actively takes up his flirtations with his Japanese cousin and this lovetripping is rapidly blossoming into what we shall soon witness as a complete but very quiet marriage.

Mr. Chairman, have we ever thoughtfully considered the fact that in every appeal which has been forwarded to our people by the Filipinos in which they have asked for or demanded their political and economic independence, without a single exception insofar as I am able to establish from the record, expressions of gratitude and thankfulness have been heaped upon us for the consideration, kindness, and help we have extended to the ones asking for their independence. Square this with the treatment accorded our country by our British ancestors in the early days of the formation of this our Republic. Did we ask for independence because of the kindness, consideration, and help which was being extended to us by the British? Indeed, we did not. We complained of the unjust taxation. We pointed out we were being taxed without representation. We set forth one protest after another, until at last our patience was exhausted and we revolted against the unfair treatment accorded us by the British.

Behold the Filipino. We have driven him away from us through kindness. We have protected his lands, his industry, his political rights. We have turned over to him the internal affairs of his own country. We have left our own nationals residing in his land without representation. We have permitted discriminations—we are now permitting persecutions—against the American citizens trying to do business in the islands. We have encouraged the Filipino politicians to literally "drive out of the islands" former employees who are citizens of the United States and who went to the islands for the purpose of helping the Filipino "toward independence." These American citizens are discarded as if they were an old, worn-out rag of no further use. The "Japanophiles" of the islands know full well these American citizens would not sit supinely by and watch Japan quietly acquire control of the islands. So they are set aside to come back to the States and seek new opportunities as best they can in this land of the ten million unemployed. Their removal from the islands makes way for more Japanese nationals.

NIPPONESE INFLUENCE

Some years ago Commissioner Pedro Guevara, who represented his people on the floor of this House, made the keen observation:

Only a blind man can fail to see that Japan desires to dominate the Philippines, with their undeveloped resources and strategic location. First will come Japanese economic investment, then immigration, finally political rule.

Some months ago President Quezon greatly embarrassed the State Department through a visit which he made to Tokyo. While there he was entertained by the great and the near great of the Japanese Empire, including the Premier and the Foreign Minister. Following his visit to Japan and after his return to Manila, it is reported he released a statement to the effect that the Japanese foreign officials had indicated to him they would sign a treaty observing the neutrality of the islands if the Filipinos gained their independence. I submit the question: Could the Philippines maintain independence even if it was granted to them?

TREATY SIGNATORIES

Let us assume, for debating purposes, that the thoughts carried out in section 11 of the act with reference to a neutrality agreement is consummated. What powers will be called upon to sign the agreement? Certainly, as the world is now organized, Great Britain, France, the Netherlands, Japan, and the United States would be the minimum countries required. A neutrality agreement under the status quo without the signatures of these present world powers would, indeed, be of little consequence. Now, if the United States does not propose to make its Army and Navy and general offensive machinery effective in the Philippines in behalf of protection for the Filipinos before or after independence, I submit to you the question: What force and effect would the signature of the United States have on such an agreement? If Great Britain continues the policy which it has consistently followed in recent years wherein Great Britain has, through inaction, opened wide the gates to China, permitting Japan to aggressively dominate and control the affairs of the Chinese people, I ask, What effect would the signature of Great Britain have? If Great Britain will not use her naval and military strength in protecting Hong Kong and British interests throughout China, and particularly Canton and the British railroad operating between Canton and Hong Kong, what will happen to the flow of trade from south China, which has for so many decades been under the absolute control of the British Empire?

If Great Britain is thus so supine and, through inaction, forfeits all her interest in south China, including Hong Kong, wherein would the Philippines obtain any particular comfort out of the signature of Great Britain to such a neutrality treaty? Insofar as the Netherlands are concerned, with the rapid progress Japan is now making in her direction toward the East Indies, her signature would be of small consequence. The public statements that have been made from time to time by high-ranking Japanese officials with reference to their plans and aspirations toward the Dutch possessions are significant. Having in mind the relative power of Japan in the far eastern military and naval zone which Japan, as shown by the debate on this bill, does exercise in the Far East, I ask you what comfort the Philippines can obtain from the signature of the Netherlands on a neutrality treaty?

This brings us to the signature of Japan on such a treaty. In this regard I do not propose to insult the intelligence by asking you what would be the position of Japan. That has been answered by Commissioner Pedro Quevera in a most definite manner. I emphatically say that Japan would, under a neutrality agreement, form and execute the policies under which the Filipinos would operate. Japan could, in a most unusual manner, continue the operation of the Philippine Government very similar to that now in existence, closely following the provisions of the present Constitution of the Philippine Commonwealth, permit the Philippine flag to fly over the islands, and at the same time maintain complete control over Philippine external affairs and dominate in every detail her internal affairs. Japan has a way of doing such things, and one only needs to refer to Japan's most successful demonstration and operation of the affairs of Manchukuo. With a few Japanese experts located within the islands and in constant touch with the foreign office at Tokyo, the entire operation could be carried on in the efficient, quiet, and successful manner in which Japan excels all other nations.

Certain Philippine officials now holding office and other high-ranking Filipinos who hold within their hands the industrial, financial, and economic powers of the islands will be glad indeed to go along with their brother orientals, the Japanese, and furnish within the Philippine Islands the necessary leadership and provide the way for the social and cultural relations for the two countries to become more closely connected in every way. Past and current developments in the Philippines are sufficient proof to any open-minded student that this program is now operating in an amazing manner. The Philippine Society of Japan, the exchange of professors by the two countries, mutual arrangements with reference to exchanges of cultural facilities, the intense manner in which Philippine citizens are now taking up the serious study of the Japanese language, and the operations being carried on in the city of Manila, all go in a direction the net result of which will be to impress the Philippines with the great strength and friendliness of the Empire of the Rising Sun. Throughout the islands it is now an easy matter to mark the "Japanophiles," who not only favor but preach the complete overlordship of Japan of the affairs of the Philippines.

One only needs to walk through the streets of Manila and observe the gaudy bazaars, novelty shops, and general atmosphere which has been created through the establishment in recent months and years in Manila of the retail outlets for Japanese-manufactured goods.

On page 28 of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs report, which has just been released, it will be found that in 1936 the people of the United States purchased 79 percent of the total exports and in 1937, 80 percent of the total exports of the Philippine Islands. On the other hand, it will be found on page 30 of the same report, that in 1936 the Filipinos purchased from the United States only 61 percent of the imports and in 1937 only 58 percent. The Filipinos are rapidly shifting their purchasing of supplies from the United States to Japan. Out of 80 percent of the dollars which constitute the purchasing power of the Philippines, flowing from the United States, a great amount moves directly to the Japanese factories and shops through the Philippine Islands conduit. As an illustration, we sell to the Filipinos only 38 percent of the wheat flour; 26 percent of the dairy products; 36 percent of the silk, rayon, and manufactures; 30 percent of the fish and fish products; 48 percent of the meat products and 31 percent of the glass and glassware. Startling as it may appear to those from the southern cotton States while we sit here today with 11,000,000 bales of cotton bulging the side walls of Commodity Credit Corporation, the Filipinos in 1937 purchased only 44 percent of their cotton goods from the United States. While other startling evidence could be submitted, is it necessary to go any further in establishing the fact that Japan is rapidly acquiring control of the internal and external affairs of the Philippines?

JAPANESE INTRUSION

Recently, in speaking before a group at the University of the Philippines, the Japanese consul general at Manila said:

In all probability, the American trade with the Philippines will gradually sink as the time for independence approaches, and Japanese-Philippine trade will correspondingly increase. The Philippines have the raw materials that Japan needs while Japan could easily supply the greater bulk of the needed industrial goods at prices very much lower than those obtainable in other countries. In dealing with a matter which may affect future relations with foreign countries, especially with the oriental countries, you must take the utmost care to prevent any possible misunderstanding.

Again in 1934 the consul general declared:

The Philippines should not at this time when independence is coming, try to antagonize Japanese feeling.

The penetration of Japan into the affairs of the Philippine Islands is today as persistent as any aggressive nation has ever carried on in a peaceful manner in the history of the world. From every standpoint, there is substantial evidence to support the contention that the Philippine officials are afraid to resist the penetration on the one hand, and other Philippine officials welcome the penetration, and still others go out and assist the Japanese in every way possible. In support of this last statement, one only needs to delve into the facts surrounding the building up and the acquisitions of the Japanese colony in the port of Davao in the island of Mindanao. There it can be observed how the Japanese are furnishing manpower, financing capital, banks, schools, importing houses, exporting houses, cultural leadership, and, in addition, it is no job at all to establish the fact that the entire operations of that section of the islands are rapidly falling under the complete power and domination of Japanese influence directed from the foreign office at Tokyo. While Davao is the back door of the Philippine Islands, it is the front door to the richest island in the entire group. Industrially, agriculturally, from the standpoint of geographical climate, unoccupied space, and vast stores of natural resources, it is indeed heaven on earth to the Japanese as they move from the cold, crowded areas in Japan proper, with its destructive climate, into the sunshine and perpetual June atmosphere of Mindanao. It is not unreasonable to say that in this area the Japanese are now operating an independent state. The Filipinos as lawyers, as shopkeepers, as homesteaders, are working hand in glove, side by side, cheek to cheek, with the Japanese in their illegal acquisition of titles to Philippine land, all in direct violation of the public-domain laws of the islands, with full knowledge of the developments on file in the public-lands office at Manila, and, as a matter of fact, the President of the Philippine Commonwealth has impliedly sanctioned the entire operations of the Japanese. Davao is the first independent state to be set up in the Philippine Islands by Japan, and others are to follow. Japan does not wait the departure of the United States; she now moves in.

Now, what has all this to do with the bill under discussion today and the first move toward the fortification of the island of Guam? The situation shapes up about as follows: The independence act is now law. With grace, we could not now go to the Filipinos and withdraw that promise made to them with all of its implications and build-up over the past 40 years. The Filipinos could come to us and ask for and demand dominion status. Could we then deny it to them? If Japan continues her aggressive program in the Far East and it became necessary, in our judgment, to go along with England in the Far East and with England and France in a general way; and if England and France pressed us to remain in the Philippines with the Filipinos demanding dominion status instead of independence, what do you think we would do about the matter? You know exactly what we would do. We would go along with England and remain in the Far East with all of the responsibility it would incur.

FILIPINOS MAY CHOOSE TO TRAVEL WITH JAPAN

But Mr. Chairman, instead of accepting independence as defined in the 1934 act, with all of its hazards and burdens, together with the neutrality agreement, the Filipinos may, on their own accord, prefer and choose to go along with Japan. Such a choice would put the United States on the spot in the event world developments in the meantime lead us to where we desire to go along with Britain and France. The Gallup poll published this very day and in its way reflecting the fleeting surface opinion of our people, is significant in this respect. Through our alignment with the British Empire in the Far East we might on the one hand defer actual combat with Japan for decades. Through such an alignment we might even bring about a situation wherein Japan would be unable to completely dominate the Chinese Republic, southern China, and the Hong Kong area. In the absence of protests on our part, the Filipinos can very nicely go along with Japan and continue the present Japanese peaceful penetration of all the islands. With our people now thoroughly determined to get out of the islands, on what grounds would we protest the economic, agricultural, industrial, and social invasion of the islands by Japan? My contention is that we will not protest so long as both England and the United States and France follow the present procedure in letting Japan have her own way.

With the Filipinos choosing to go along with Japan and at the same time insisting upon our granting to them independence, as set forth in the act—plus such favorable modifications as may be made to the Filipinos between now and July 4, 1946; my contention is that the United States will not repeal the 1934 act. That then would leave the Filipinos their independence of American supervision. But their independence would be modified by such restraints, domination, and control politically and economically, as their alliance with Japan might involve. Should this be the course followed by the Filipinos and the United States, then I submit that we should not be involved in the partial or complete fortification of Guam. It is my opinion at this particular moment, based on the developments of the hour, that the Filipinos will choose this last-mentioned course. For this reason, I am opposed to our including in this bill this item of $5,000,000 for Guam. The uncertain course of world events may take a direction long before 1946 that will entirely change the situation. In that event I, as a Member of Congress and as a private citizen, reserve my opinion as to what my position will be based on the new developments at some future date. The Filipinos now control the general situation and we must await developments.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. Whenever deemed by him to be advantageous to the national defense, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to employ, by contract or otherwise, outside architectural or engineering corporations, firms, or individuals for the production and delivery of the designs, plans, drawings, and specifications required for the accomplishment of any naval public works or utilities project without reference to the Classification Act of 1923 (42 Stat. 1483), as amended (5 U. S. C., ch. 13), or to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (41 U. S. C. 5). In no case shall the fee paid for any service authorized by this section exceed 6 percent of the estimated cost, as determined by the Secretary of the Navy, of the project to which such fee is applicable.

SEC. 4. (a) To enable the Secretary of the Navy to accomplish without delay or excessive cost those public-works projects authorized by this act to be located outside the continental limits of the United States, he is hereby authorized to enter into contracts upon a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis after such negotiations as he may authorize and approve and without advertising for proposals with reference thereto. Approval by the President shall be necessary to the validity of any contract entered into under authority of this section. The fixed fee to be paid the contractor as a result of any contract entered into under authority of this section shall be determined at or before the time such contract is made, and shall be set forth in such contract. Such fee shall not exceed 10 percent of the estimated cost of the contract, exclusive of the fee, as determined by the Secretary of the Navy. Changes in the amount of the fee shall be made only upon material changes in the scope of the work concerned as determined by the Secretary of the Navy whose determination shall be conclusive.

(b) Negotiations under this section shall be between the Secretary of the Navy, or a duly authorized representative, and three or more reputable and qualified contracting individuals, firms, or corporations regularly engaged in work of comparable magnitude and class to that contemplated by the negotiations, as determined by the Secretary of the Navy, and contracts may be made with any such individual, firm, or corporation, or with any two or more of them jointly, upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Navy may determine to be fair and equitable and in the interests of the national defense. For each contract entered into under authority of this section the Secretary of the Navy may detail a naval officer to duty, without additional compensation, as an executive representative of the contracting officer. The contract shall provide that the officer so detailed shall have the right to attend any meetings of the board of directors or other executive or administrative board or committee of any corporation, partnership, firm, or syndicate which is or may become a party thereto for the purpose of submitting propositions, propounding questions, and receiving information relative to any matter within the purview of the contract with the intent and for the purpose of safeguarding the interests of the United States, coordinating efforts, and promoting mutually beneficial relationships, and making decisions within the scope of his delegated authority and not in conflict with any provision of the contract.

(c) In any project the contract for which is negotiated under authority of this section, the Secretary of the Navy may waive the requirement of a performance and a payment bond and may accept materials required for any such project at such place or places as he may deem necessary to minimize insurance costs.

(d) Any contract negotiated under this section may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, contain provisions under which any loss of or major damage to the plant, materials, or supplies of any contractor, not due to his negligence or fault or to the negligence or fault of his agents or servants, while the same is necessarily in transit upon or lying in the open sea for the purposes of the contract, will be investigated by a board of naval officers appointed for the purpose and reported to the Secretary of the Navy, who will transmit to the Congress the findings of fact and his recommendations in the premises.

(e) The Secretary of the Navy shall report annually to the Congress all contracts entered into under authority of this section, including the names of the contractors and copies of the contracts concerned, together with the amounts thereof.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Page 5, line 22, after the word "Navy", strike out the word "certain" and insert "contain."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. The act of June 14, 1934 (48 Stat. 957), after the enacting clause, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, authorized to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, additional lands adjacent to the Hampton Roads Naval Operating Base, Norfolk, Va., such lands lying north of the Virginian Railway and west of Granby Street. The sum of $500,000 authorized by section 1 of the bill H. R. 4278, as enacted, for the acquisition of land at or in the vicinity of Norfolk, Va., shall be available for the purposes of this act."

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this occasion to state that I take it to be a sound conclusion that the Congress of the United States and the people of this country have a right to voice and express apprehension concerning the safety of their most priceless heritage, as a matter of inalienable fact and supported by history, ancient and recent. A matter has come to my attention during this debate which I feel should be called to the attention of the Congress and to the country.

In the heated debate over the provisions of this bill concerning the development of harbor facilities adjacent to the island of Guam, one thing has been overlooked and that thing happens to be a matter which I consider of vital importance. The people of a country such as ours have throughout history maintained a position staunchly opposing aggressions of any sort, foreign involvement of any character, but at the same time have never weakened in sustaining their definite rights and in sustaining a respectable posture in the eyes of the world.

Failure on this occasion to take action in accordance with the study and survey made by this committee, and report of naval experts in connection with the item of the bill which refers to Guam, would, in my candid opinion, be tantamount to a reversal of the historic maintenance of a posture demanding respect from all the world in the performance of our duty as we see it. China recently gives evidence of a failure to maintain such posture. What has gone on there is definite evidence of the correctness of my statement this evening that for the Congress of the United States to fail to go ahead with a reasonable performance of the necessary functions concerning one of our possessions, such as is contained in the provision concerning Guam, would be to blazon to the rest of the world that the United States is afraid, and because of fear would be reticent to carry on.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WHITTINGTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4278) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ELLIOTT, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. BOYKIN (at the request of Mr. GRANT), for 1 week, on account of important business.

To Mr. HARTLEY (at the request of Mr. JEFFRIES), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan (at the request of Mr. MAPES), indefinitely, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. HAWKS, Mr. MARCANTONIO, and Mr. SHANLEY asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend in the RECORD the remarks I made today in the Committee of the Whole and to include therein some brief excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on the bill (H. R. 4278) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESSANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address I delivered at the Washington Monument at Baltimore, Md.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement I made before the Committee on Ways and Means on the bill H. R. 2.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE STATE OF WASHINGTON

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, today we commemorate the birth of George Washington, the Father of His Country and the first President of the United States. In doing this, we not only honor that distinguished American but also pledge anew our faith and loyalty to the Government which he was so influential in founding. This Government has weathered the many fierce storms of the past 150 years and has proven thus far to be the best for the common good on the face of the earth. May its services be extended so as to reach the humblest of its citizens and achieve the purposes so clearly and splendidly expressed in the preamble of our Constitution. May it be the steadfast aim of all who have the privilege of serving as officials in this Government to promote the general welfare, to attain the greatest good to the greatest number.

This day we of the State in the far northwest corner of these United States celebrate another anniversary. Fifty years ago today on February 22, 1889, Congress passed an enabling act providing for statehood for the only State in the Union to bear the distinguished name of Washington. Originally a part of the expansive and historic Oregon Territory, it was first named Columbia. In the enabling act, because of the date and the great American whose birth it commemorated, the name was changed to Washington. So 50 years ago it was christened, and on the following November 11 it was admitted into the sisterhood of States. With becoming modesty and an unassuming grace she has been growing into young womanhood almost unnoticed by her older sisters while some of her younger sisters by their sprightly forwardness and youthful gaiety have temporarily held the spotlight. Laughingly we have been chided: "We know of only one Washington, and that is Washington, D. C." We respectfully but confidently reply that Washington State is just entering upon the stage and making her debut. This year is her golden jubilee, and as States go, this is "sweet 16." In the next 150 years she will take the stage, and then let her splendid sisters look to their laurels.

Many of us who love our State so fondly were not privileged to be born there—we went there from the Middle West, the East, the South, just as soon as we learned of her beauty and opportunities. Now we are as loyal as any native sons and daughters. The slogan is splendidly true: Once a westerner, always a westerner. We are proud of our State; we are proud of our great Northwest; we are proud, too, of our grand country—the United States—of which we are a part. We need only take one look at Europe and Asia to fervently thank Almighty God that we live in these United States of America.

The State of Washington! The land where there are no hurricanes, no tornadoes, no destructive earthquakes. Where there are no sudden extremes of heat and cold, no sweltering days of spring and summer; where the climate is not only conducive to health and longevity but exhilarates one to action and success. Washington State! Where the scenery of its majestic mountains rival the Canadian Rockies and the Swiss Alps; whose snowcapped peaks, clad in eternal ermine, are kissed by the first rosy gleams of the morning sunrise and are fondly carressed by the last lingering rays of the sun as it slowly sinks in the Golden West. Washington State! Where the crystal clear mountain streams come sparkling and rippling down over their rocky beds to gladden the hearts of both fishermen and campers as the laughter and singing of Mother Nature alone can do. Washington State! Where the broad rivers, the lakes, Puget Sound, and the limitless ocean abound with trout, salmon, and countless varieties of the finny tribe. A State ranking among the first in the production of fish, with an annual catch of over 90,000,000 pounds. Washington State! Where on the Olympic Peninsula we have the largest stand of timber in the United States—Douglas fir, spruce, and hemlock—stately evergreens that reach up into the limitless blue sky. With bowed head one stands before these magnificent monarchs and repeats Joyce Kilmer's verse:

Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree.

And in a commercial way our State ranks first in lumbering. Washington State! Where the orchards of the Yakima Valley and Wenatchee are a panorama of perfumed blossoms in April and a rosy harvest of fruit in September. Our State produces one-third of the commercial apples of the United States. Washington State! Where the hills of Walla Walla and the Palouse country are green with grain in the springtime and a golden sea of waving wheat at autumn time. We produce a crop worth more than $39,000,000 of wheat annually. Washington State! Whose surface has scarcely been scratched for the wonderful wealth of minerals and other natural resources. Magnesite is one of the coming minerals of this modern age when airplanes are coming into their own. We have almost limitless deposits of magnesite in north-eastern Washington from which magnesium is manufactured. I have here in my hand two pieces of metal of the same size—one of steel three and one-half times as heavy as this one of magnesium which in turn is 13 times as strong as the steel—a very vital element in the construction of aircraft.

Washington State! Where we have wonderful highways, as those of you who have traveled over them can attest to, and they have been built on the pay-as-you-go policy. Washington State! Where dairying flourishes on the west side and contented cows furnish Carnation cream and better butter for the home table. Washington State! Where the raising of poultry has become a leading agricultural vocation, and the prices of poultry products are reasonably controlled by an extensive egg cooperative. Washington State! Which possesses 20 percent, or one-fifth, of the potential water power of the United States—the white giant of this modern age, generated from the perpetual source of the mountain torrents as they rush on their mad way to the ocean now harnessed to serve in innumerable ways; to develop our manifold natural resources; to turn the wheels of coming industries; to furnish light and heat and comfort in the homes of the farmers and laborers as well as the bankers and merchants; to transform transportation from slow and sooty passenger trains to a quick and clean method of travel. Electricity is as necessary to modern life as are sunshine, air, and water. Bonneville, Roza, and Coulee Dams—the greatest undertaking ever attempted by the hand of man—will bring decency, comfort, and contentment into the homes and lives of those now in the State of Washington and millions yet to come there.

These mighty dams will also store water for the thousands of acres of fertile land which now lies idle for the lack of water. In the West water is king; and when irrigation gives it to the thirsty soil the barren waste is made to blossom like the rose, and hundreds of thousands of homes will be made available for the millions who will eventually follow Horace Greeley's advice, "Go west, young man, go west." Upon the placid bosoms of these broad rivers of the near future will be transported the products of the factory and field to the boundless Pacific to be carried to the teeming millions of the Orient, our future customers when the war lords have been put aside like little tin soldiers and the common men and women of the East and West shall fully realize the futility of war and shall be the real rulers in the lands in which they live. And right here, since we are today considering the Navy bill, I want to enter my vigorous protest against the fortification of Guam—fifty-five hundred miles from our shores. It is said that it is not fortification. "A rose with another name is still a rose."

It has ever been my contention that it was a grave mistake for the United States to have adopted the imperialistic policy of acquiring the Philippines. Ever since their acquisition they have been a white elephant on our hands. We of the Yakima Valley who have a very serious Filipino problem in that section realize this in a special way. Now that the United States is abandoning this imperialistic policy and giving the Philippines back to the Filipinos, let us go the whole way and abandon Guam also. We have no business there in a military sense or for defense. Let the Hawaiian Islands be our western frontier and let us rather use these funds for the development in Pearl Harbor.

Now, back to the State of Washington, where education is held in high esteem, where illiteracy is less than 1 percent, and where the public-school system ranks among the foremost in the United States.

Washington State! The land visioned by Thomas Jefferson, explored by Lewis and Clark, pioneered by Dr. and Mrs. Whitman, the Spauldings, Ezra Meeker, and thousands of other men and women ready for adventure and who were not afraid to try something new—they with their children and children's children building a State worthy of their loyalty and best efforts and to which even today thousands are coming seeking homes and opportunities for success and happiness and contentment. A State where a man's a man and a woman's a woman because of character, integrity, and industry alone. A State peopled by men and women who are sanely progressive, clinging fast to that which is good of the old—not afraid to venture into that which is good of the new—looking with reverence to the historic past but reaching with eager hearts and minds to the unfolding of the living future.

Washington State! The golden jubilee! The State of the golden West, the land of the setting sun, but ever facing the east toward the dawn of the new day where the ideas and ideals of true democracy shall prevail, the land which beckons to you of the Middle West, the South, the East, to come and live in this workshop, bread basket, and homeland of the United States. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma). Under a special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain tables I have prepared.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

ADEQUATE DEFENSE FOR THE NATION'S CAPITAL AND FULL PROTECTION FOR THE POWER CONSUMERS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, our program of national defense will simply be a joke, a farce, and a failure, if we leave the Nation's Capital without adequate protection.

We had a bitter experience in the War of 1812 when a ruthless enemy invaded this city and burned both the White House and the Capitol.

That must not occur again!

We are told that one of the most essential elements of national defense now is an adequate supply of electric power—which can be easily supplied here from the waters of the Potomac River that are now going to waste, while our electric supply is inadequate, and it, or the material from which it is produced, is brought in over lines of communication that in case of war would be exposed to attack. If those lines should be severed in time of an emergency, Washington might experience another humiliating disaster such as that of 1814.

Besides, this city and the surrounding country need protection from the disastrous floods such as they have experienced in recent years, and the electric consumers of the area need relief from the exorbitant rates they are now compelled to pay for electric lights and power.

I have introduced a bill, H. R. 2749, setting up a Potomac Valley Authority. Such an authority is a national necessity from the standpoint of national defense as well as that of flood control, and the establishment of a fair yardstick for the protection of the electric-rate payer.

I will briefly refer to the first two items and will cover them more in detail at a later time. My principal remarks today will cover the immediate application of the electric yardstick in the District of Columbia.

The National Capital is the center of our national life, as well as the key point in any defense program. Everything radiates from Washington. The strategic gun and supply factories are located in and around this city, and electric power is the basic element in any defense-supply program. Under a power shortage any such program will fail. During the World War an inadequate power supply crippled preparations and delayed supplies. The bill that I have introduced will augment the inadequate power supply now available to the National Capital, control floods, and improve navigation on the Potomac River, and furnish an adequate supply of electric energy at reasonable rates.

The construction of an airport to be located at Gravelly Point has been started with P. W. A. funds. I understand that in the construction of this airport an earth fill averaging 20 feet in height is contemplated. Such a fill, costing some two and a half million dollars, has been suggested in order to raise the field above the elevation of the highest flood crest. Flood crests can be eliminated with multi-purpose dams, and this airport construction can be decreased in cost nearly a million dollars by taking these facts into consideration.

The rate regulation for electric light and power, as now practiced in the United States, is an ineffective and obsolete method of protecting the rate payer. What is needed is a fair, honest yardstick to enable the electric consumers to judge for themselves the true cost of electricity. It is their inalienable right to have such information; it is our duty to furnish them such protection. When this information is available and is thoroughly understood, the people will be able to act for their own protection, and we, as their representatives, will be able to act for them.

The American rate payer should have an example of such a fair and equitable rate structure in his National Capital. This is easily possible, as I will demonstrate from the official earning and operating statements of the Potomac Electric Power Co., which serves, or is served by, the people of the District and its environs. The evidence which I shall present has been secured from the official figures of the Federal Power Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Utility Commission of the District of Columbia. I have the base data from these official sources to back up every statement I shall make.

During the recent T. V. A. congressional hearings the paid representative of the Power Trust held up the Potomac Electric Power Co. as an outstanding example of a "lily white" private power organization with low consumer rates. In view of such statements, I propose to discuss this company's earnings, financial structures, rates, and pertinent transactions for the benefit of my colleagues and the information of the American public.

ANNUAL PROFIT OF 75 PERCENT

The Potomac Electric Power Co. is now operating under a sliding-scale rate plan, made effective supposedly under congressional sanction by a consent decree entered by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia on December 31, 1924. In my study of this problem I have come to the conclusion, as I will hereafter point out, that the application of the consent decree represents a violation of the intent of the statute.

From the operating statements of the power company filed with the Utility Commission of the District, I have prepared a tabulation of the rate index and the net amount available for dividends on both preferred and common stock, after deducting every item of expense, including taxes and depreciation. This I submit as table 1. This table which I present is very illuminating, and I trust that everyone interested in the rate problem will study it. Read and reread it carefully, for it tells a tale that is sufficient to "harrow up the soul" of the average electric consumer throughout the country who pays an electric bill every month that carries an overcharge ranging from 50 to 500 percent.

² Reductions given in each year by reducing bottom steps of rate from 3 cents to 2, 1.5, and intermediate steps from 3.8 cents to 3.6 cents, 3.3, 2.0, 1.9, and 1.5 cents, respectively.

From this table it will be noted that as the rate charged the ultimate consumer decreases the net earnings of the common-stock holder increases. These figures demonstrate, beyond question, that it is good business to reduce rates. When the rate payers of Washington were charged 10 cents per kilowatt-hour on the first step of the residential rate the power company earned around 10 percent on the common stock. In 1937, with a 3.9-percent top rate, the company earned practically 75 percent on its common stock. In 1931, almost at the extreme depth of the depression, because of excess earnings, the rate of return was dropped by the Commission, and in each succeeding year under the operation of the plan there was a further rate reduction. Under this series of double-rate reductions full earnings for the common-share holder were recovered in about 4 years. In 1936 the consent decree was again revised. Under better business conditions full recovery was not only made in a year but the common-stock earnings increased from 64.4 to 74.9 percent, at the rate payers' expense.

LXXXIV—113

The local power company operates wholly through congressional sanctions. These sanctions when combined with the consent decree operate to give the few real ultimate owners of the common stock a guaranteed earning power of 60 to 75 percent annually.

When these facts are known, how can Congress justify such extortionate earnings! How can Congress explain to the hard-pressed American farmer that through its sanction it allows such an abnormally high earning rate! How can Congress vindicate such a guaranteed earning power when so many of our people cannot even make ends meet! Why is this permitted to continue! What is the reason! There evidently is one! Congress should investigate and then act!

The excess annual earnings of the local power company over a 10-percent dividend rate amounts to $3,891,930, as I shall hereafter demonstrate. Placing the T. V. A. yardstick rates into effect in Washington will cost $3,735,400 for the first year, $256,530 less than the excess earnings of the company. With the lowering of rates the consumption will increase in the succeeding periods, and the amount of the rate reduction will be recovered in a comparatively short time. Table I, which I have presented, bears out the experience of 13 years.

WHO OWNS THE COMPANY?

The Potomac Electric Power Co. is controlled through a 100-percent voting-stock ownership by a holding company, namely, the Washington Railway & Electric Co. This latter company is controlled by the North American Holding Co. through 50.02 percent voting-stock ownership. The North American Co. is in turn controlled by another superimposed holding company, the Central States Electric Corporation. On top of this elevated holding company the control is vested in an individual, Mr. Harrison Williams, frequently noted in the press as the owner of the world's largest yacht.

The Capital Transit Co. is also controlled by the North American Co. through the ownership of 50 percent of its stock by the Washington Railway & Electric Co. and partly through ownership or control of 3,012 shares of the transportation company's stock. These two sets of stock ownership give the North American Co. 51.2 percent control. This same interlocked company also controls the Montgomery Bus Lines, Inc.; Washington & Glen Echo Railway Co.; Glen Echo Park Co.; and the Washington & Rockville Railway Co. Thus we see one man controlling the electric and transportation facilities of the District of Columbia. Mr. Williams' personal control is exercised by holding 51 percent of the stock of the superimposed holding company, namely, the Central States Electric Co.

THE OWNER'S RECORD

In the spring of 1937 Mr. Harrison Williams, controlling officer of the North American group, testified before the Securities and Exchange Commission during the investment trust study of his superholding company, the Central States Electric Corporation. From the record proceedings of the testimony in this case, Securities and Exchange Commission File 39-91-1-1, I have taken some pertinent facts for the information of my colleagues.

On page 12321 of this record, it was brought out that Mr. Williams' original investment in the common stock of the Central States Corporation amounted to $2,072,000. Of this amount, Mr. Williams borrowed for investment purposes a half million dollars from the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York City. Thus we see that his original investment was a trifle over one and a half million dollars. On August 30, 1929, this original investment of Mr. Williams had an estimated market value of $612,000,000. From May 19, 1924, to December 1929 the North American Securities Corporation, which was controlled 100 percent by Mr. Williams, pegged the price of the North American stock by the purchase of $131,000,000 of North American common stock which the Securities Co. in turn sold widely throughout the United States to unsuspecting investors.

The market value of the Central States stock as of August 30, 1929, amounted to $680,000,000, with stated assets valued at two hundred sixty million. The Central States stock, through manipulation, was advanced from $10.50 a share to $5,600 a share during the period 1922 to 1929.

After the stock-market break in the fall of 1929, Mr. Williams disposed of enough of his original investment of $2,027,000 in the common stock of the Central States Corporation to realize $27,200,000 in cash and kept, in addition, 51 percent stock control of this superimposed holding company, which controls or influences the management of private utilities with stated assets of nearly $3,000,000,000.

This testimony, covered in pages 12321 to 12480 of the S. E. C. record, shows that Mr. Williams, through manipulation, obtained control of electric utilities aggregating $3,000,000,000 on an actual cash investment of a little over one and a half million dollars. He came out of the crash in great shape. However, the fate of the investing public presents a different story—since they lost two-thirds of their investments. Some Members may answer this sordid record by stating that it occurred before the 1929 crash. I want to point out, however, that very recent manipulations, which I will later cover, are just as black.

RATE LITIGATION

On March 3, 1913, the act creating the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia was passed. Following the passage of this act, the Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia was created and organized to carry out the regulatory provisions of this law. Previous to the Utility Act of 1913, Congress had set a limitation on the charge price for electric current in the act of March 1899. The 1899 act established a rate of 10 cents per kilowatt-hour with a delayed payment charge of 1 cent per kilowatt-hour, if the bills were not paid within 10 days of the billing date. The maximum price charged by the company prior to the act of 1899 was 15 cents per kilowatt-hour.

In order to carry out the provisions of the 1913 act it was necessary for the Commission to make a valuation of the power company's plant. This valuation was started July 1, 1914, and completed during the month of May 1916. After hearings, the Commission issued a valuation order. The company then filed an injunction suit against the Commission in the District Supreme Court, attacking the valuation. Following the valuation it was then necessary to determine on the rate of return, and hearings on this phase of the subject were started and the return and sale rate orders were issued in July 1917. Under this order the rate of return was set at 7 percent and the maximum residential rate 7½ cents per kilowatt-hour. The company followed the second order with another injunction in the District Supreme Court.

On August 20, 1917, this court allowed the injunction but required the utility to impound the difference in bills under the rates in effect and those ordered from August 1, 1917. On March 2, 1920, Justice Gould of the District Supreme Court upheld the Commission's valuation. The company thereupon appealed the litigation to the District of Columbia Court of Appeals. On this appeal the company was successful in an opinion rendered November 17, 1921. The Commission then appealed the valuation case to the United States Supreme Court but this Court refused to take jurisdiction, in an opinion rendered April 9, 1923. For 9 years the rate payers of the District were denied relief through obstructive litigation.

The decision of April 9, 1923, resulted in the lack of fixed determination as to the rate base and the rate of return. This unsettled legal status made it necessary for the Commission to attempt to settle the controversy by negotiation. These negotiations were in process for 2 years and resulted in the consent decree of December 31, 1924. This consent decree made no attempt to fully comply with the provisions of paragraph 18 of the Utility Act of 1913.

Big business during these years seemed to influence or control Congress and the administration of congressional acts. It was currently reported during that time that Senator Norris' Senate bill No. 746 was pigeonholed in the House District Committee, and it was further reported that the power company spent in excess of $80,000 for lobbying expenses to secure their objective.

GENESIS OF THE SLIDING SCALE PLAN

The sliding-scale plan was a gas regulatory device evolved in England in the gas-age period from 1841 to 1876. This English plan in its final form enacted by Parliament was modeled after a local plan initiated at Sheffield, England, in 1855. This English sliding-scale plan is an interlocked system of sale price and dividend control. Such a plan grew out of a long extended conflict between the gas consumers and Parliament on one side and the illuminating gas companies on the other.

The early English charters given to the gas companies, which commenced business about 1810, contained no limitation as to the sale price of the product and the permissible company earnings. Parliament passed the first limiting act in the Acrinton statute of 1841, which act set a limit of 10 percent for dividend earnings, with the right reserved to the company to make up earning deficiencies of the lean years during better times.

This act was followed by the Bilston Gas Act of 1846 which set a maximum sale price for gas. This early remedial legislation did not accomplish the purposes intended as competing companies entered the field and dividend arrears accumulated. This competitive condition resulted in statutory exclusive assignment of territory in the Gas Act of 1860. The Parliamentary Investigating Committee of 1859 suggested the inclusion of the Sheffield plan in the 1860 act, but this recommendation was rejected by Parliament due to pressure from the gas companies.

The Metropolis Act of 1860 was so abused by the companies as to become ineffective in protecting the gas consumer, and as a result the feeling against the gas companies in Great Britain became so acute that Parliament in 1866 was forced to settle the regulatory problem or embark Great Britain on a wholesale program of publicly owned competing gas plants. The problem of publicly owned gas plants was before Parliament from 1868 to 1876, and ended with the enactment of the sliding-scale Sheffield principle. The 1876 act set a dividend rate of 10 percent with allowable change in the dividend rate of one-fourth of 1 percent for each 2 cents change in the price of gas. During this long period of struggle between the public and the companies, publicly owned gas plants in the British Isles increased until at the present time about 41 percent of the gas produced in England, Scotland, and Wales is manufactured in public plants. The adoption of the sliding-scale plan settled the gas controversy up to the time gas ceased to be used for lighting and competition with electricity regulated the price.

The first English legislation on electricity was the act of 1882. This Electric Act grew out of the 40 years' experience in the gas struggle. In this act of 1882 public bodies were given the right to purchase private chartered companies at values existing at the time of purchase and without any price addition or the inclusion of goodwill values. In 1931 the franchises of the London Electric Companies expired, giving the city of London the right to purchase. With this right the public held the whip hand. The expiration of the franchises in 1931 initiated an electric struggle which ended in franchise renewal, adoption of the sliding-scale rate and dividend plan, limiting dividends to 7 percent plus an increase dividend bonus depending on the resale rate.

THE TRANSPLANTED PLAN

The Sheffield sliding-scale plan was transferred to America in 1887 at Toronto. The Toronto plan, covering the operations of the Consumers Gas Co., was a successful modification of the English sliding scale. In the Toronto plan a reserve fund of $1,000,000 was set up by the Canadian Act of 1887. Dividend payments and officials' salaries were charged against this fund. The dividend was set in the Toronto plan at 10 percent. The sale price of gas under this Canadian plan was regulated by the reserve fund, which was kept at the million-dollar level. When the fund fell below this amount, the company was authorized to increase the sale price of gas, and when the fund was over a million dollars the prices were lowered. As a result of this plan in Toronto, gas prices are nearly 25 percent lower on an average than the private companies. The Toronto plan has been a success due to its simplicity and principally because the operating company has been free from holding-company connections during the entire 90 years of its existence.

As a result of early wholesale company exploitation, the London sliding-scale plan was introduced in Boston, by the Massachusetts legislative act of May 26, 1906. This Massachusetts Sliding Scale Act set the standard sale price at 90 cents per 1,000 cubic feet and the standard dividend at 7 percent on the par value of the outstanding stock. The utilization of the sliding scale in Boston was never a success as the statutory regulation was bypassed, through holding company manipulation, and the creation of separate producing companies, wholesaling to the distributing agencies. The Boston plan was abandoned by legislative enactment in 1926, because of obnoxious manipulation. The sliding-scale plan has also been attempted in Detroit, Memphis, Philadelphia, Houston, and Dallas, but all of these were so markedly different from the English plan as not to be classed as successful.

CONSENT DECREE

The consent decree covering the present rate operations in Washington grew out of the negotiations between the commission and the company during the 2 years prior to December 31, 1924, supposedly based on paragraph 18 of the act of 1913. This section of the 1913 act, in part, is as follows:

That nothing in this section shall be taken to prohibit a public utility, with the consent of the commission, from providing a sliding scale of rates and dividends according to what is commonly known as the Boston sliding scale or other financial device that may be practical and advantageous to the parties interested.

The consent decree was entered and has been accepted to date as complying with the provisions of the act of 1913, but it will be noted from what follows that a sliding scale of rates was provided but reference to dividends was carefully omitted.

If the Washington sliding-scale plan had included dividends as well as rates, the District of Columbia today would be enjoying the T. V. A. yardstick rates.

The consent decree, entered in cases 35336 and 33341, provided:

First. The fair value, used and useful, as of January 1, 1925, including the Maryland properties, was set at $32,500,000. This figure was compromised in spite of the historical cost of the property on that date, of $24,400,000 and the further fact that there was only $21,320,000 of securities outstanding. If we gave the company credit for the balance-sheet surplus on the date of the consent decree, very conservatively the rate payers of the district were "gypped" in the initial set-up by $7,500,000.

Second. The depreciation reserve as of December 31, 1924, was, in round figures, $4,000,000. In the consent decree it is stated when the depreciation reserve is below 15 percent of the property value the depreciation rate of 2.3 percent shall be used. When the depreciation reserve is 15 percent of the value but less than 16 percent, a rate of 2.1 percent shall be used. When the reserve is 16 percent but less than 17 percent, 1.9 percent shall be used. A sliding-scale depreciation reserve accrual is continued to 20 percent of the value, when the depreciation rate is 1.3 percent of said value. The annual accretion to the depreciation reserve shall be considered as an operating charge met by the rate payer.

Third. The sale rates shall be based on a return of 7½ percent on the rate base plus the cost of undepreciated additions.

Fourth. If the rates yield more than a 7½-percent return on the rate base, one-half of said excess shall be used in rate reductions, thereby creating a so-called sliding scale of rates under the provisions of paragraph 18 of the act of 1913. Reference to dividends as provided in the act has been omitted. If the rate of return for any one year should amount to $100,000 over and above 7½ percent on the rate base, then the charged rates in the succeeding year shall be automatically reduced to absorb $50,000 of such excess during the following year.

Fifth. If the average rate of return for any consecutive 5-year period shall fall below 7½ percent on the rate base, or if the average return for any consecutive 3-year period falls below 7 percent, or if the average return on any consecutive 12-month period falls below 6½ percent on the base, the Commission shall promptly increase rates so as to yield 7½ percent on the rate base.

Sixth. The impounded fund, as a result of the court decree of August 1917, shall be divided between the consumers and the company and in addition to paying the company's franchise and Federal income taxes. Reverts to consumers shall cease on December 31, 1924.

Seventh. The company agrees to make refunds as promptly as possible.

Eighth. Any amounts due consumers, unclaimed at the end of the prescribed period, shall be considered as income of the company and prorated over a term of 20 years.

It will be noted from the above that all reference to dividends has been omitted from the consent decree and furthermore, the impounded fund which under the court order of August 1917 belonged to the consumers, was divided between the consumers and the company.

On the date of the consent decree the impounded fund amounted to $6,401,576, and of this amount only $2,635,067 was actually returned to the rate payer. The company retained $2,950,788 of this fund and used $428,996 in paying taxes. The income portion of the fund amounted to $386,725. Out of the amount of the impounded fund received by the company a cash dividend of 48 percent was paid to the common-share holder, and this totaled $2,888,000.

CONSENT-DECREE JOKERS

The Creator has so ordained nature that not one of His works has been endowed with perpetual life. In spite of this precept, the consent decree provides an undepreciated rate base.

The insertion of the word "thereafter" in the decree operates to allow the company to retain 100 percent of the excess earnings in the year these earnings accrue. Thereafter the division is 50 percent to the company and 50 percent to the rate payer. A little reflection will show that in operation this results in the company retaining 100 percent of the excess earnings the first year, 50 percent the second year, 25 percent the third year, 12½ percent the fourth year, and continuing for 20 years until the given years' excess is absorbed. This accumulates in each succeeding year. The accumulation of excess earnings from 1925 to 1937 over the rate base return allowed amounted to $12,921,311. The plan operated to allow the company to retain the full amount of these excess earnings.

The theoretical reduction in rates is based on static conditions and becomes a joker for two reasons:

First. The ever-increasing gross earnings, with rate reductions; and Second. The customer control of this allocation is in the hands of the company.

In 1930 the company earned 10.7 percent on the rate base. This high rate of return, and the excess accumulation of the reserve funds caused the Commission to enter its order 919 reducing the rate of return to 7 percent. The company again attempted litigation and Congress as a corrective measure passed a bill authorizing the R. A. U. report on a proposed District municipal plant which President Hoover approved.

It will also be noted that in the consent decree, the company is guaranteed a rate of return which results in excessive dividend earnings. The company, by legal "sleight-of-hand manipulation" has placed Congress in the position of guaranteeing an income to give nearly a 75-percent annual earning on their common stocks to a handful of yacht-riding beneficiaries.

The financial effect of the jokers in the so-called Washington sliding-scale plan can be judged by the following:

First. Allowed 89.9 percent of the total rate base to be paid for by consumer in the form of cash for extensions, excess dividends, company taking part of the impounded fund, and arbitrary upping of the initial rate base.

Second. In period 1925 to 1937 gave $12,921,311 additional earnings over the rate of return on rate base ordered by Commission.

Third. Sum of consent-decree allowances for rate reductions in the 1925-37 period was only $7,536,437 or an average yearly rate-reduction allowance of $579,000, or less than 15 percent of the 1937 excess earnings over a 10-percent fair dividend on common stock. This 14-year accumulated consent-decree allowance for rate reductions was divided amongst the different classes of consumers as follows:

Class of service	Total allowance	Average yearly allowance	Average yearly allowance in percent of 1937 excess earnings
Residential consumers.....	$3,437,398	$264,000	6.8
Commercial consumer rate.....	294,921	20,400	.5
Commercial consumer rate, E. and L.....	732,258	56,300	1.5
Other commercial consumers.....	2,766,717	213,000	5.5
Street lights.....	503,133	23,300	.6
Miscellaneous.....	32,010	2,470	.66

Four. Allowed building up a retirement reserve of $14,037,265 in the 13-year period, of which $9,566,461 was charged to operating expenses and paid for by the rate payer. And $4,470,804 came from interest charges on fund balance, at 4 percent. Property taken out of service and retired is supposed to be charged against this fund. The 1937 balance sheet shows the amount of the retirement reserve to be $12,844,177 which would allow the absorption of 64.3 percent of all bonds outstanding.

Five. Allowed building up a surplus of $31,387,729, which is 44.2 percent of the total balance-sheet value of the plant account.

Six. Allowed investments of $1,008,713 in stocks and bonds, gave a cash bank balance of $4,445,074 and permitted loans and notes aggregating $2,367,834.

This array of money facts certainly shows that the Washington plan was built to fatten the coffers of the common-shareholder rather than give to the rate-paying consumer an equitable share in the excess earnings, as the English sliding-scale plans would have accomplished.

⁴ Schedule L; bills are for primary service.

This table 2 presents typical bills for four classes of electric service applicable on January 1, 1938, in Tupelo, Miss. (T. V. A. rates), Tacoma, Wash., and Washington, D. C. The January 1, 1938, figures are the latest complete returns that are available, representing all the elements of the problem that have been used.

As is well known, the T. V. A. standard schedules were applicable in Tupelo on the date of this comparison. However, since that date, because of excess earnings, Tupelo has again reduced its rates. Tacoma, Wash., is also included to show what the rate should be when the debt amortization principle is applied. On January 1, 1939, Tacoma also reduced its rates and the present levels in effect in Tacoma are lower than those shown in table 2. For example, 100 kilowatt-hours of residential lighting under the Tacoma schedule of January 1, 1938, cost $2.12, whereas under the schedule effective January 1, 1939, Tacoma citizens pay $1.70 for this quantity of electricity or a reduction of 20 percent below bills of January 1, 1938. As of January 1, 1938, the calculated difference between the T. V. A. bills and the Washington, D. C., bills for residential, commercial light, commercial power, and industrial power are presented in table 2.

Based on these average percentage differences, I have taken the 1937 gross earnings of the Potomac Electric Power Co. for the different classes of service and applied the bill percentages to arrive at the annual cost of reduction. This information is presented in table 3, which I am inserting for your information.

It will be noted from table 3 that the Federal and the District Governments are contributing $459,000 annually in excessive rate charges toward the 75-percent stock earnings of the power company.

Miscellaneous service	241,150	15	36,200
Total annual cost of reduction to Tennessee Valley Authority levels			3,735,400

In table 3 is also shown the net earnings of the power company after all operating expenses, depreciation, taxes, bond interest, and preferred dividends up to the common-stock dividend earnings. During the year 1937, after all items of expense were deducted, the power company earned $4,491,930 net. From this amount, in fairness, is deducted the English dividend standard of 10 percent. The difference gives an excess annual earning figure of $3,891,930 for this company.

It will also be apparent from table 3 that it would cost the power company, based on 1937 static consumption, $3,735,400 to reduce the rates in effect in Washington on January 1, 1938, to T. V. A. levels. It should be pointed out, with all emphasis, that the T. V. A. yardstick rates could have been put into effect in Washington on January 1, 1938, at a cost less than the excess earnings of the local power company.

With the lowering of rates to T. V. A. levels the consumption will increase greatly. This has been the universal experience in the T. V. A. and also with normal rate reductions. The earlier presentations have also shown that the same results have been achieved in the National Capital. It will only be a comparatively short time in Washington before the increased consumption will compensate for the static cost of such a reduction. Aside from the social aspects of this problem it will be good business for the local company to reduce the rates to the T. V. A. levels. This presentation, based entirely upon official earning and operating statements, demonstrates beyond any question that the T. V. A. yardstick rates are just, fair, and equitable. The whole fight of the power companies is centered on the concealed objective of preventing the American people from knowing what it really costs to produce, transmit, and distribute electricity. In this presentation I am giving that information, at least so far as the District of Columbia is concerned.

Study carefully the following table:

RATE BASE AND SECURITIES

Although paragraph 18 of the act of 1913 provides a regulating option of "a sliding scale of rates and dividends according to what is commonly known as the Boston sliding scale," the consent decree was built upon a rate-base theory which was substituted without provision for dividend regulation.

In table 4 is presented the company's bonds and stock outstanding as of the date of the consent decree and as of December 31, 1937. It will be seen from this tabulation that $11,680,100 of additional securities were put out between 1924 and 1937, although $41,293,000 was invested in the property, according to the rate base, during this same period. This means that $29,612,100 of the company's plant investment was directly contributed by the rate payer. If we add to this direct donation the excess dividends, the amount the rate base was "upped" by the consent decree, and the accretions to the retirement reserve fund charged to operation, we see that the rate payer directly and indirectly contributed to the rate base $66,478,344, which is equivalent to 89.9 percent of the plant investment.

Another joker in the consent decree results from the fact that the rate payer is required to pay interest to the company on his own donations, as is shown by table 5.

For your information, I am presenting table 6, showing the rate base, the rate of return, the actual net earnings, and the actual earned rate of return from 1925 to 1937. It will be seen from this tabulation that even with a set rate of return on the investment made by the people, the company actually earned far in excess of the return rate set by the Commission during this entire period.

Study this table and be convinced:

THE CRUX OF THE PROBLEM

The crux of the problem of low electric rates lies in honest finance, proper accounting, amortization of debt, and the application of the principle that it is good business to lower rates. Tables 7, 8, 9, and 10 are presented. The tables are collateral and informational. Table 10 shows that in the period from 1925 to 1937, $27,090,000 was paid to the common-share holder. This represents 34.8-percent average dividend paid out during the 13-year period. It must be remembered that, in addition to this large dividend cash withdrawal, the company also built up the property from funds paid in by the rate payer.

OPERATING COSTS

Tables 11, 12, and 13, showing the 1937 earnings and expenses of the Potomac Electric Power Co., are also presented for your information. These tables are so detailed that each class of electric consumer can see for himself what the costs are and how they are charged by the power company. In table 13 I have analyzed the operating, depreciation, and tax expenses, together with production, transmission, and distribution costs, and have shown these items in mills per kilowatt-hour sold. It can be seen from table 13 that the total average electric cost, including all items, in Washington is 14.58 mills per kilowatt-hour. I would like to have this cost, for example, compared with the residential sale price of 29.62 mills, shown in table 11.

INVESTMENT PER METER

Table 14 presents the consumer data of the power company. It will be noted from this table that the rate base in Washington represents $386 per meter, while the securities outstanding only amount to $172.50 per meter. The electric construction in Washington is essentially high class and the distribution system is largely underground. Underground construction is at least 25 percent higher in first cost than the overhead type of construction. Nationally, the average of all private utilities in America, based on securities outstanding, is $480 per meter. If this were all underground construction the securities outstanding would represent about $600 per meter. Therefore, nationally the securities of power companies outstanding are over three times what they are in Washington and nearly double the rate base per meter, when comparison is made on a common standard. These simple figures tell the story of why, nationally, electric rates are so high.

STEAM VERSUS HYDRO

The energy used in Washington, D. C., is partly steam and partly hydro generation. The operating figures of the local company, which are here offered, are a contribution to this controversial subject.

APPROXIMATE COST OF BENNING AND BUZZARD POINT STATIONS

	Dollars per kilowatt of capacity
Benning.....	77.38
Buzzard Point ¹	81.87

¹ Based on 1938 capacity and cost. Second generating unit of 35,000 kilowatts cut into service in July 1938. The kilowatt capacity of Buzzard Point is therefore here used as 70,000 kilowatts.

The local power company operates two steam-producing stations known, respectively, as the Benning and Buzzard Point stations. The Benning station is an old, although fairly efficient steam producer, while the Buzzard Point station represents the latest ideas in steam-plant construction.

Table 18 presents the energy cost of the two steam-producing stations, based first on the fixed costs and rate of return allowed by the Public Utilities Commission of the District and secondly on fixed costs based on actual securities outstanding. It will be noted from table 18 that the production cost in the older station lies in the range between 5.3 to 6.5 mills per kilowatt-hour, whereas in the modern Buzzard Point station these costs range from 4.44 to 4.48 mills per kilowatt-hour. Due to the lower costs of the Buzzard Point station, base load is carried on this station, whereas the Benning station is lightly loaded at times. At this point it should be noted that current is being produced with steam at the Buzzard Point station at a lower cost per kilowatt-hour than the city of Tupelo pays wholesale to the T. V. A.

All this power could be sold to the people of the District of Columbia at the T. V. A. rates with profit to the power company.

Table 19 sets out the over-all production cost in mills per kilowatt-hour from the book figures of the power company. This over-all production cost includes the energy produced in the two steam stations, together with the Susquehanna hydro energy imported into Washington. Again it will be noted that the total over-all cost of producing energy in Washington is lower than the city of Tupelo pays to the T. V. A. for wholesale electricity.

Table 20, showing the interchange transmission contract data, is very illuminating. The net cost of delivered current, imported into Washington from the Susquehanna hydros and the Baltimore plants, is 2.099 mills per kilowatt-hour, which is less than half what Tupelo pays for T. V. A. power.

This hydro energy, delivered by outside private companies to the Washington company, is sold for less than half the cost of producing power in the highly efficient Buzzard Point generating station. It goes without saying that the Susquehanna private companies have included their profit in this 2.099-mill sale price. Private hydro energy delivered in Washington is over 60 percent lower than the city of Tupelo is paying to the T. V. A. With this comparison, how can it truthfully be said that T. V. A. wholesale rates are too low?

If Washington retail rates were reduced to the T. V. A. yardstick rates, the company would still make money and the consumers of the District would save $3,735,000 a year, even on the present load.

EXCLUSIVE CONTRACT

An exclusive contract exists between the Potomac Electric Power Co. and the local transportation subsidiary of the North American Co. Under this contract the power company delivers to the transit company about 81,000,000 kilowatt-hours annually and receives a gross return of 6.35 mills per kilowatt-hour as is shown by table 21. There are deductions from this gross charge for operation and maintenance of the railway company's property, leased to the power company without compensation. Evidently the power company—and the figures I have presented bear this out—are not selling this exclusive energy below cost. The Federal Government is paying the power company 10.50 mills a kilowatt-hour which is over 63 percent more for its current than the transit company is paying. The District is paying 22.02 mills, or more than three times as much as the transit company pays. This is evident from a comparison of tables 11 and 21.

"As part consideration for the promises of the power company contained herein, the railway company does hereby lease, without other compensation to the power company, all of its property used and useful for supplying electrical energy to the railway, the power company to operate and maintain at its own cost (taxes and insurance excepted)."

Propagandists for the private power companies frequently assert that the taxes paid by the power companies account for the difference between public and private consumer rates. This is not a fact. Therefore, in table 22, I am presenting the tax bill of the local company. The surprising fact is that the company pays in local taxes about half what it should. The Tacoma public plant, for example, pays over 10 percent of its gross earnings for State and local taxes. Compare this with the 4.68 percent paid by the Potomac Electric Power Co. If the power company paid the same proportional local taxes that the Tacoma public plant pays, they would be turning over to the local authorities $1,510,000 annually, instead of $686,790, it now pays. The total tax bill of the local power company, including Federal excise taxes, income, and miscellaneous taxes amounts only to 2½ mills per kilowatt-hour, and the majority of this amount is income taxes on their enormous incomes derived from these overcharges.

These enormous incomes result from the 75-percent earning power of the company's common stock.

FRANCHISE

It has been frequently stated, for financial reasons, that the franchise of the power company is perpetual. Such a statement is contrary to the fact. The authority of the company to use the streets, avenues, and public places in the District is covered by 16 acts of Congress. Such rights which have been given by congressional action are not perpetual, neither are they exclusive. Congress can at all times control the rate situation in Washington, with fairness to both the company and the rate payer, by amendments to these 16 acts. Congress therefore is in control of this rate situation. Congress also has in its power the elimination of such extortionate earnings and can pass along equitable benefits to the electric consumer, by appropriate legislation.

ANTISOCIAL TACTICS

The stock-pegging activities of the Harrison Williams interests, through which innocent American investors lost savings totaling at least the present investment of the T. V. A., occurred in 1929 and prior years. The reply of the Power Trust to this will be, "We have reformed and are now good boys." Let us look into the recent record and see if the American people can accept their word or statements at face value.

In 1905 the Hughes utility investigation in New York State disclosed excessive abuses of overcapitalization, security manipulations—adversely affecting the innocent investor—fraudulent practices, rebates, discrimination, and wholesale corruption in the securing of franchises, public contracts, and rate approvals. Public opinion was aroused. The Power Trust of that day said, "Give us commission regulation, and we will live within the law."

In the following 25 years this trust not only controlled the regulatory commissions but attempted to manufacture public opinion and to buy their way. Then followed the Walsh resolution and the disclosures of the Federal Trade Commission. Again the Power Trust promised the American people to desist their antisocial activities. Present circumstances and events would seem to indicate that the Illinois-Iowa Power Co., also a Williams' subsidiary, formerly the Illinois Power & Light Corporation, is still continuing the abuses disclosed by the early Hughes investigation and the later Federal Trade Commission's disclosures and circumventing the Holding Company Act in every possible way.

PRAIRIE PRACTICE

The Illinois-Iowa Power Co. is at present operated and controlled by the North American, although this interest has only minority control. This $212,000,000 company, from information furnished me by the S. E. C., is now operated by two directors of one of the local North American properties. One of these directors has appeared as counsel for the North American interests before the S. E. C. and the Utility Commission of the District.

From about 1924 to 1932, $44,632,200 of preferred stock in this company was largely sold in the operating territory of the company to the consuming public. This stock was sold by the company employees working, in teams, under high-pressure sales supervisors. Verbally those agents represented that the company guaranteed to buy back the stock at any time the owners wished their money back. This stock was sold at par when the New York curb quotations were substantially lower. The company did buy back and resell fairly large amounts, in the years before banking conditions became tight. This practice was bait for the innocent investor. The company operated so as to make no guaranties in writing. It was all done by word of mouth. If it were not for these verbal representations and accompanying manifestations, the stock would not have been sold to the consuming public. The relief rolls of the Midwest today contain numerous good people who put their life savings into this misrepresented stock.

In 1932 this company ran into financial difficulties. In the spring of 1933 it suspended dividend payment on its cumulative customer-owned preferred stock. The accumulations on these dividends, which were running annually $2,- 901,000, presented a problem. The answer to this problem, solved in Wall Street, was to write down this stock at the expense of the preferred stockholder.

Prior to February 1937 Mr. Williams' organizations fought the Holding Company Act in the courts. Suddenly Mr. Williams reversed his course, and his companies registered under the act. A short time thereafter the Illinois Co. applied to the S. E. C. for a report on a plan of recapitalization submitted by the company.

In this plan it was proposed to reduce its capital $30,869,700 by reclassifying and writing down the preferred and common stocks, although the company had, at the time of their request, cash on deposit in banks and with the bond trustees and receivables totaling $14,213,253.

Under this proposed plan, the preferred shareholders, who supposedly purchased stock guaranteed as to principal and earnings, were asked to surrender $3.50 per share, or 62½ percent of preference as to annual earnings, and $50 per share (one-half of value) in asset value. In return they were given some common stock equity, the value of which was uncertain. Following hearings in Washington, at which no protests were entered, the preferred stockholders were circularized through the mails. The S. E. C., in their press release of March 25, 1937, made it plain that the "statement of earnings and expectations discussed in this report are those of the company and not those of the commission."

In its declaration the company estimated its expense of reclassifying the stock at approximately $80,000, of which about $34,000 would be spent for solicitation of proxies. Proxies were needed to secure stockholders' consent to place the plan into operation—an expense which was paid for by the shareholders, who by proxy consented to surrender to the company over $1,700,000 in annual guaranteed dividends and $30,869,000 in principal. These proxies were verbally solicited and secured largely by the same supervisors who originally sold the stock. The plan was put into effect by proxy vote in the early summer of 1937.

Since reclassifying, the company has earned money on its preferred stock, but to date has paid nothing to the preferred shareholders. No doubt the company will reply to this and state that the outstanding mortgage and debenture indentures prohibit the payment of dividends except out of earned surplus accumulated since 1922. To this I will answer "the underlying reason for recapitalization" given by the company in its declaration, was the refinancing of outstanding bonds at lower interest rates. If the company had refinanced some $106,000,000 of 5, 5½, and 6-percent bonds between 1935 and 1937, instead of fighting the Holding Act in the courts, the preferred holders would now be better off, and some of those who are now on the relief rolls could have resumed their former position of security or semi-security. The preferred holders, from information I have secured from the S. E. C., are the real majority owners of the company. Unless I am badly mistaken, these stockholders can collect from the North American officials for mismanagement.

The theory behind the holding company act was to eliminate the abuses brought out by the Federal Trade Commission's investigations. The act is based on the use of the mails in interstate commerce. It can, however, be circumvented by verbal representations such as securing proxies by promises.

My study of this midwest utility situation leads me to ask several questions applicable to this company, which is a part of the chain that operates in Washington:

First. What verbal promises were made to preferred-stock holders by proxy solicitors to secure proxy signatures?

The answers should come from the preferred-share holders.

Second. Why were 95 new street-lighting contracts secured in Illinois from January 1, 1937, to December 31, 1938? What methods were used in securing these contracts, especially those at Collinsville, Edmundsville, Du Quoin, Ottawa, and Granite City?

Third. What political contributions were made in Illinois from February 1937 to date?

Fourth. Why were the services of a Milwaukee propaganda agency used to draft misleading advertisements, which were printed in Illinois papers, where there were rate and service agitations in progress?

Congress should demand the answers to these questions, as well as the answer to the query, Why are yardstick rates not in force in the District of Columbia at this time in view of such excess power company earnings?

The American people need to know these facts so as to judge whether the power companies are going to circumvent the recent protective legislation as they did the regulatory legislation which followed the Hughes investigations of 1905.

The power companies are today repeating the false wails of railway management which followed the 1873 panic, and the Grange decision of the United States Supreme Court. These former insincere expressions of distress resulted in many States relaxing their railroad laws. With this lessening of control the railway management again betrayed public confidence. Many roads slipped back into the hands of unscrupulous financiers. Private profit instead of public service became the rule. Rates were raised and discrimination against the small shipper increased in large proportions. Again an incensed public opinion reacted. Congress in 1887, as a result of continued shipper maltreatment, passed the first Federal act to regulate commerce.

It is necessary to be on our guard. The records of the men who now control the destinies of private power are not such that we can afford to relax the protective administration of the Holding Company Act.

So, Mr. Speaker, why fortify the islands of the far Pacific; why build an air base on Wrangell Island in the extreme range of the frozen North; why spend all these billions of dollars on an Army and Navy air force and leave the Nation's Capital unprotected?

As I said, it is conceded that the most essential element of national defense is an ample and secure supply of electric power. This can be provided for by the development of the hydroelectric resources in the Potomac River.

We are the legislators for the people in the District of Columbia, and it is our double duty to protect them from extortion at the hands of selfish utilities, and from disastrous floods, as well to protect them against any foreign foe.

All this can be done by the development of the Potomac Valley Authority, and the application of the yardstick rates.

In the name of real, sane, national defense, that would mean the protection of the Nation's Capital at all times; in the name of common honesty and common justice to the people of the District of Columbia and the surrounding territory, in the name of fairness to the people now living in this area and the generations yet to come, I submit that we should pass this bill for the creation of a Potomac River Valley Authority. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, February 23, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou whose power unrelenting and unrelenting flows as secret music in an enchanted silence to renew the universal vision of the soul: Help us ere we undertake the duties of another day to surrender all to Thee, our spirits, souls, and bodies, that no taint of sin may thwart in us Thy purposes, for Thou wouldst have us to be true and pure and brave and strong, following in the footsteps of the blessed Christ.

And if our vision of Thee fail, then do Thou bring us back to Thee through these sacred human ties, making us true because of those who trust us, keeping us pure for the sake of those who care, helping us to be brave when courage is so needed and strong for all there is to suffer, until we and all Thy children feel again the blessing of Thy presence and the sanctuary of Thine everlasting arms. We ask it in our Saviour's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On the request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, February 22, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr.

CLARK], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], and the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] is unavoidably detained.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to state that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained on important public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 1102) to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes; and it was signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

HON. SAM G. BRATTON
House Joint Memorial 7

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Thirty-second General Assembly of the State of Colorado (the senate concurring herein), That it is the sense of this general assembly that the Honorable Sam G. Bratton, United States circuit judge of the tenth judicial district, is a most fit person to be appointed as a member of the Supreme Court of the United States; that his long and most honorable record in public life as a judge and as United States Senator from the State of New Mexico has invited national recognition of his talents, attainments, and character; and accordingly this general assembly does recommend he now be appointed to the current vacancy in said United States Supreme Court, both as a tribute to Judge Bratton, as well as a recognition of the claims of the western portion of the United States in that behalf; and further be it

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the United States and to each of the United States Senators from Colorado and that a copy be mailed to the Honorable Sam G. Bratton.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Alabama, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas war clouds hover over the world today; and

Whereas wars are raging today in both Asia and Europe; and

Whereas there is seemingly imminent danger of a general conflagration breaking out among the major countries of Europe; and

Whereas in such event there would be much pressure brought upon the President and the Congress of the United States to induce participation by the United States in such a conflict; and

Whereas in the Spanish-American War which this country fought ostensibly to right the wrongs which had been done this country by the Spanish nation and to relieve dire human suffering in certain Spanish possessions; and

Whereas in that war the United States, after having won the same at a cost of many millions of dollars and many hundreds of human lives, then paid to the Spanish Government $20,000,000 to be allowed to relieve that Government of the burden of the Philippine Islands; and

Whereas the Philippine Islands have since been a burden and a source of worry and trouble to the United States; and

Whereas in the World War into which the United States entered to make the world safe for democracy, the United States spent many billions of dollars and saw the lives of thousands upon thousands of its young men sacrificed; and

Whereas whatever else may have been accomplished by the participation of the United States in the World War, it certainly did not result in making the world safe for democracy; and

Whereas the participation of the United States in the World War caused it to lose the friendship of many nations whose friendship she would still have had she not participated therein; and

Whereas the United States financed in large measure the participation of other nations in the World War by loans to those nations which they have refused to repay and still refuse to repay; and

Whereas the cost of the United States participation in the World War is still being paid for by the citizens of America at the rate of several billions of dollars annually and will continue to be paid for at this rate for many, many years to come; and

Whereas the deleterious effects of the World War have left an ugly scar upon the present generation of American citizens and will continue to leave an ugly scar on many generations yet to come; and

Whereas the best minds of this Nation and the world are convinced that the world has not yet recovered morally or financially from the disastrous effects of the World War, and that another such war will mean the destruction of the civilization of the world; and

Whereas the experiences of the past teach us that no good but much harm can come from further participation by the United States in future foreign wars; and

Whereas the citizens of the United States are overwhelmingly opposed to the United States becoming engaged in another foreign war that will mean a sacrifice of thousands of lives of its citizens in addition to the financial cost of untold billions of dollars: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of Alabama, That it is the sense of the people of the State of Alabama that they are unalterably opposed to participation by the United States in another foreign war; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senate of Alabama and the people of Alabama, through the Senate of Alabama, memorialize the President and the Congress of the United States to do all in their power to keep the United States out of any foreign war in case a general conflagration occurs; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent by the secretary of the senate to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, the United States Senators from the State of Alabama, and the Members of Congress from the State of Alabama.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorials of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

House Joint Memorial 2

To the Congress of the United States, and to the Honorable Anthony J. Dimond, Delegate to Congress from Alaska:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, respectfully represents that:

Whereas the act of Congress approved March 26, 1934 (sec. 2, ch. 86, 48 Stat. L. 465), provides that the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska shall convene on the second Monday in January 1935, and on the second Monday in January every 2 years thereafter; and

Whereas the present fiscal year for the Territory of Alaska, as provided by section 25 of chapter 118, Session Laws of Alaska, 1929, ends on December 31; and

Whereas all offices of the Territory connected with the records of receipts and expenditures of the Territory must close their books as of said December 31 and take their balances, particularly the offices of the Territorial treasurer and the auditor of Alaska, and make necessary reports to the legislature, including the budget for the ensuing biennium, and before making the Territorial treasurer's report the balances must be reconciled with the bank balances of said December 31 in order to estimate available funds for the next biennium; and

Whereas it has been the experience of the officers mentioned that it is impracticable to have balances and estimates prepared and printed reports distributed to the members of the legislature in the short time between the closing of the books on December 31 and the date of convening of the legislature; and

Whereas because of the distances traveled by various members of the legislature, many of whom are businessmen whose business is generally done on a calendar-year basis, it is practically impossible for such businessmen to attend to the closing of their books for the year and to arrive in Juneau before the second Monday in January for the convening of the legislature: Now, therefore,

We, your memorialist, respectfully petition that the act of Congress approved March 26, 1934 (sec. 2, ch. 86, 48 Stat. L. 465), be amended by changing the date of convening of the Alaska Legislature from the second Monday in January of each odd numbered year to the fourth Monday in January of each odd numbered year. And your memorialist will ever pray.

House Joint Memorial 3

To the honorable the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in fourteenth regular session assembled, respectfully submits that—

Whereas under the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, commonly termed the "organic act," the Alaska Territorial Legislature is limited to biennial sessions, occurring in odd-numbered years; and

Whereas, due to advances in development of natural resources and conditions affecting such development and problems arising from the conservation of natural resources and because of the need for a more active association between the National Government and the Territorial government:

Now, therefore, your memorialist urges that the Congress of the United States amend the aforesaid act of Congress to provide for a regular 30-day session in the even-numbered years.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

Approved by the Governor, February 6, 1939.

JOHN W. TROY,
Governor of Alaska.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

House Concurrent Memorial 4

Concurrent memorial relating to assistance for the owners of undeveloped mining properties

To the President, the Congress, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of the United States:

Your memorialist respectfully represents:

There was a time when it was relatively easy for the owner of a good mining prospect to interest capital, in moderate amounts, for development purposes.

Restrictive legislation enacted in recent years, regulating the offering of securities to investors, however sound such legislation may be in principle or in its general application to industry, has placed a serious handicap upon the seeker after capital for the development of mining prospects. When taken in connection with prevailing financial conditions, the securing of capital for such purpose from private sources has become a virtual impossibility.

A very limited recognition of the mining industry's right to participate in the benefits of the Government's program for bolstering the national economic structure through Government loans and other forms of assistance to industry was accorded by the act of Congress approved June 19, 1934 (Public, No. 417, sec. 14), authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans, under certain conditions, to persons engaged in the development of mining properties.

The terms of this authorization, however, restrict such loans within an unfortunately narrow compass, i. e., to the development of ore bodies, or placer deposits, containing gold, silver, or tin.

In this State, while many ores contain gold or silver, or both, there are highly important mineral deposits, notably lead, zinc, and manganese, and most frequently the last-named, which do not contain either gold or silver.

To make this form of assistance still more difficult of attainment, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's self-imposed regulations surrounding the granting of loans on mines containing the approved metals are unduly severe.

As an evidence of the severity and impracticability of the conditions surrounding the granting of loans on mining properties, the fact is cited that, although the act authorizing such loans has been in effect 4½ years and applies to all States, ample funds of the original allocation of $10,000,000 are still available for immediate needs.

It was obviously the intention of Congress in passing this act that it was to be considered as a relief measure, for the benefit of those engaged in mining. That only a small amount of money has been loaned under its provisions shows that the administration of the act, as well as the act itself, is far too rigid.

Wherefore, your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona (the senate concurring), urgently requests:

1. That Congress liberalize the act approved June 19, 1934 (Public, No. 417) so that loans may be made on mining properties which do not contain gold, silver, and tin.

2. That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, without waiting for action by Congress, amend its regulations so that loans may be made on properties containing the approved metals under less rigid and more practical conditions.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Joint Memorial 2

Joint memorial relating to the excise tax on foreign copper

To the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialist respectfully represents:

Since 1932, by acts of Congress, there has continuously been in existence an excise tax on foreign copper of 4 cents per pound, which tax was reenacted in the revenue bill of 1937 and automatically expires on June 30, 1939.

The continued protection of the copper industry is essential to the welfare of the entire United States, since countless employees in many industries are dependent upon the continued operation of the copper mines, not only because of direct purchases of material and equipment, but also because of purchases of food, clothing, and other necessities by those employed by the copper industry.

Because of present world conditions, the United States' program of national defense and international independence demands the maintenance of a healthy copper industry, ready to serve fully and efficiently in the production of a necessary metal.

Without assistance, the United States copper industry cannot survive the competition of the foreign copper industry in the world market because of the low costs of production abroad resulting from higher grade ores, enormous ore reserves near the surface, employment of peon and indentured labor, byproduct copper production, and subsidization of foreign nations as an essential part of defense programs.

The continued maintenance of the copper excise tax has been highly beneficial in that it has successfully prevented the importation of foreign copper into this country and made possible orderly industrial progress and development both in the United States and throughout the world.

Said excise tax has not been detrimental to domestic interests, inasmuch as the price of domestic copper has been consistently in line with world prices, and had advanced only when forced to do so by increase in London quotations.

A healthy copper industry has been created and maintained merely by reserving the domestic market for United States producers without increasing the price to the consumer, whereas the attainment of the same objective by international cooperation has been attempted, with dismal failure the only result.

The State of Arizona and its future progress is so closely interwoven with the copper-mining industry that prosperity or depression within the State depends in large measure upon the conditions existing within that single industry.

Wherefore your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Arizona, prays:

That the Congress of the United States of America enact legislation to continue the excise tax on foreign copper at not less than its present level of 4 cents per pound.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorials from the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Senate Joint Memorial 1

Joint memorial relating to the development, purchase, and storage of metals and minerals necessary to a program of national defense

To the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialist respectfully represents:

Within the borders of the United States there exists an adequate supply of most of the metals and minerals necessary for use in time of war.

In many instances these metals and minerals can be obtained from abroad at a price lower than the cost of domestic production, for which reason the deposits of such metals and minerals in this country have not been properly developed.

In the event the foreign sources of supply should suddenly be cut off, because of war or other emergency, the program of national defense would be retarded until sufficient time had elapsed to develop mines and to accumulate an adequate store of war metals and minerals.

In order to maintain a continuing policy of national defense, to foster the development of natural resources, and to provide employment, a policy of aiding and encouraging operators of mining properties to begin and continue production of war metals and minerals would be both desirable and beneficial.

Wherefore your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Arizona, prays:

That the Congress of the United States enact legislation providing for the purchase and storage, from domestic production only, of metals and minerals necessary to a program of national defense.

House Memorial 2

Memorial relating to the Federal appropriation for predatory animal and rodent control

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist respectfully represents:

Under the act of Congress approved March 2, 1931 (Public, No. 776), the Secretary of Agriculture was authorized and directed to carry out a cooperative program, in conjunction with the States, for the eradication, suppression, or bringing under control of predatory wild animals and rodents injurious to agriculture, horticulture, forestry, animal husbandry, wild game, and other interests, and the Congress was authorized to appropriate $1,000,000 per annum for such purpose.

This program is especially important to the State of Arizona, which has a number of industries affected by it. The livestock industry, occupying many mountainous and forest areas, suffers immense losses through the depredations of wild animals. Its lower ranges are subject to the ravages of prairie dogs and gophers. The farming and orchard areas of the State are likewise subject to injury from rodent infestations, and great losses are annually sustained by reason thereof.

Under the authorization above referred to, Congress has appropriated heretofore from $480,000 to $600,000 annually. The Secretary of Agriculture, deeming this sum insufficient, has requested the appropriation of the full sum of $1,000,000.

From the point of view of this State, and for the best interest of the livestock and agricultural industries, the appropriation of the maximum amount authorized by the act of Congress of March 2, 1931, and its judicious use in the eradication, suppression, or bringing under control of predatory wild animals and rodents is amply justified.

Wherefore your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, urgently requests:

1. That, in compliance with the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Congress appropriate the sum of $1,000,000 annually for predatory animal and rodent control.

House Concurrent Memorial 3

Concurrent memorial relating to an appropriation by Congress for aid to States for wildlife restoration

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist respectfully represents:

The Pittman-Robertson Act (Public, No. 415, 75th Cong.) authorized Congress to make an annual appropriation for Federal aid to the States for the restoration of wildlife.

It is of the utmost importance that the programs of wildlife restoration which have been inaugurated in various States under the terms of the Pittman-Robertson Act be carried forward without interruption, that the gains already made in wildlife restoration be not lost, and that any States which have not yet availed themselves of the advantages of this beneficent law may have opportunity to do so.

Wherefore your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona (the senate concurring) requests:

1. That the Congress appropriate, as authorized by the Pittman-Robertson Act, "an amount equal to the revenue accruing from the tax imposed by section 610, title IV, of the Revenue Act of 1932, on firearms, shells, and cartridges," for carrying out the purposes of the act, and enabling the States to restore their wildlife.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a memorial from the Lima (Ohio) Central Labor Union, remonstrating against the reappointment of Donald Wakefield Smith as a member of the National Labor Relations Board, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Lodge No. 1014, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, of Gary, Ind., protesting against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Local No. 60, United Rubber Workers of America, of Pittsburg, Calif., favoring an adequate appropriation for the National Labor Relations Board and protesting against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Carquinez Local No. 51, International Union of Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers, of Rodeo, Calif., favoring the taking of votes in the Congress by yeas and nays and not in a manner by which the vote of an individual Member cannot be determined, which was referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WHITE presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Maine, praying for the enactment of House bill 11, a general-welfare bill providing old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions, numerous signed of sundry citizens of the State of Maine, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Fontana, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to exempt small independent telephone companies from the provisions of the Labor Standards Act of 1938, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Parsons, Kans., praying that the United States adopt a policy of non-participation in aggression and also discontinue the shipment of war supplies to Japan for use in her operations in China, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying that the United States adhere to the general policy of neutrality as enunciated in existing law and extend the law to include civil as well as international conflicts, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Winchester, Mass., favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. TYDINGS presented resolutions of the Parent-Teacher Associations of the following schools: Anacostia Junior-Senior High School, Congress Heights, John Quincy Adams, Francis Scott Key, Buchanan, Wheatley, Bowen-Greenleaf, Stanton, Taft Junior High School, Randle-Orr, Blair-Hayes, and Edmonds-Maury, all in the District of Columbia, favoring the making of deficiency appropriations for heating and lighting school buildings in the District and also for teachers' salaries, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented the memorial of members of the vestry of the Great Choptank Parish, Protestant Episcopal Church, of Dorchester County, Md., remonstrating against inclusion of religious, charitable, and educational institutions under the operation of the social-security system, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Annapolis, Md., praying that the shipment of munitions, war materials, and supplies to Japan for use in her operations in China may be stopped, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the Finksburg (Md.) Woman's Christian Temperance Union, favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. RUSSELL presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Concurrent resolution requesting the United States Senators and Members of Congress from Georgia to initiate and cooperate in supporting legislation to restore cotton to its former economic importance in world commerce

Whereas by reason of legislation creating trade barriers to the cotton trade, discriminating freight rates, the tariff, and other legislation, and by reason of world economic conditions and competition from cotton growers in foreign countries with living standards below that of this country the cotton farmers in the Southern States have been reduced to a tragic financial condition, their export markets have been almost lost, they are subject to competition which they are handicapped in meeting, and the growing of cotton made economically impossible under existing conditions; and

Whereas unless concerted action is immediately taken by the the Senators and Members of Congress from the cotton States, looking to the relief of the cotton farmers from the handicaps under which such conditions have come about, the growing of cotton may soon become a thing of the past in this country, and the welfare and income of large sections of the United States seriously affected: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Georgia (the senate concurring), That the attention of the Congress of the United States is respectfully directed to the fact that cotton is the leading product in America's commerce and international trade, and that the cotton farmer represents the world's largest primary wealth-producing group, and that it is of paramount importance to the producers of this commodity, as well as to the continued life of world trade on the part of the United States, that this interest be adequately rehabilitated and fostered. To that end, the Senators and Members of Congress from the State of Georgia are respectfully urged to take immediate steps to meet with the Senators and Representatives from all other cotton States for the purpose of securing concerted action by the Congress for the relief of the cotton farmers and of the industry from the handicaps and barriers under which they and it now suffer in the marketing of cotton, domestic and foreign, and it is respectfully suggested that among the things they are called to advocate are the following:

(1) Legislation for the removal of statutory trade barriers, as far as possible, against our cotton trade, such as the modification or repeal of the Johnson Act, the enactment of legislation bringing about the equalization of transportation rates, the revision of the tariff to relieve discrimination against the cotton farmers, and other legislation;

(2) The sale to and use by the Government for the manufacture of equipments and munitions of war of 6,000,000 bales of surplus cotton;

(3) Allocation to producers of cotton from the cotton being carried under Government loans a sufficient number of bales to pay them the balance due on 3 cents per pound subsidy authorized by national legislation effective on 1937 cotton crop and on which only 1.80 per pound had been paid;

(4) Increase the subsidy payment to the cotton producers by the further distribution of Government loan surplus cotton to 65 percent of parity prices on cotton during the crop years 1937, 1938, and 1939;

(5) Selling to the Post Office Department 1,000,000 bales of cotton now being carried by the Government under loans, this cotton to be used to be manufactured into twines and other materials for use of the United States mail service, the Post Office Department to place this cotton through bids to be manufactured for their uses;

(6) To allocate or reapportion from the cotton being carried by the Government under the loans, 1,000,000 bales to be manufactured into cotton bagging to be distributed to cotton farmers as an additional subsidy without charge for baling their 1939 cotton and cotton of subsequent years;

(7) The allocation of cotton, in point of time to comply with the time now required under the law for the sale thereof;

(8) The retention of soil-conservation payments as now made, pending the working out of a definite permanent plan for the future of cotton;

(9) The pledging of the Government to a definite support of cotton production profitable to the cotton growers;

(10) The protection of cotton growers through a subsidy payment increasing the selling price to 65 percent of the parity price of cotton, so that they may successfully compete with foreign growers and regain lost export markets;

(11) The granting to cotton growers of the privilege of planting other money crops than cotton on surplus lands resulting from reduction of cotton acreage, and not needed for production of feed and food crops for home consumption, without imposing a penalty against compliance payments, as now done;

(12) The immediate payment to cotton farmers of all amount due for 1938 compliance, as was promised;

(13) There is no one in the United States Department of Agriculture whose primary interest is the promotion of the welfare of the cotton farmer. To remedy this condition, create an office of cotton commissioner in the United States Department of Agriculture. It should be the commissioner's duty to develop new uses and markets for cotton and to represent producers of cotton in developing farm programs;

(14) In addition to finances otherwise available that a sufficient fund be appropriated from the general funds of the Treasury and made available to the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect this program here recommended and that funds for agriculture be raised in the same manner that funds are raised for other Government expenditures;

(15) The formation in each House of Congress of a bloc to advocate measures for the protection, encouragement, and support of the cotton both now and in the future; be it further

Resolved, That the legislative bodies of the cotton States be urged to take immediate action to request from their Senators and Members of Congress similar cooperation and support of such actions and measures; be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the house do forthwith transmit copies of this resolution to the United States Senators and Members of Congress from this State and to the legislative bodies of each of the following States, to wit: North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Arizona, New Mexico, California, Missouri, Kansas, Texas, and Tennessee.

Mr. CONNALLY presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Senate Resolution 23

Whereas the United States has for many years been divided into zones for the purpose of fixing freight rates, with said freight-rate structure being under the direct supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and

Whereas the freight rates under the zoning system are much higher in certain sections of the Nation than in other sections; and

Whereas because of this zoning set-up the people of Texas and the Southwest are paying from 60 to 85 percent more on their freight than are the people in the East and Central Eastern States; and

Whereas this discrimination is detrimental to the farmer, the stockman, the laborer, the businessman, and the manufacturer of our section of the Nation and does not give them equal opportunity to benefit in agriculture, commerce, or our economic system in general; and

Whereas this discrimination results in our producers being tremendously penalized on everything bought and sold; results in our consumers paying more for commodities than the consumers in other zones; results in producers from more distant areas gaining our own export and domestic markets at lower transportation costs than our own producers; and results in stagnating our industrial development and restricting an even flow of commerce and trade in the southwestern region; and

Whereas from a study of Interstate Commerce Commission reports on transportation costs it definitely appears that transportation operation costs in Texas are even less than in the eastern and northern zone, while our freight rates are from 60 to 85 percent higher; and

Whereas if we are to have industrialization and to promote factories in Texas and the Southwest and to give the farmer, the laborer, and the businessman in this region an even break it is necessary that this discrimination of freight rates be abolished and a fair and equitable system inaugurated: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Texas, That we hereby ask the United States Congress to pass such legislation as may be necessary to eliminate the discrimination in freight rates as between the various regions of the United States, to bring these rates on a parity in level and scheme in all portions of the United States, and to establish and maintain a rate structure to the end that our Texas producers and consumers be no longer discriminated against, and to the end that there be a free flow of commerce between all regions of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Members of the United States Congress from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY also presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Whereas the United States has for a long number of years been divided into zones for the purpose of fixing freight rates, with said freight-rate structure under the direct supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and

Whereas the freight rates under the zoning system are much higher in certain sections of the Nation than in other sections; and

Whereas the people of Texas and the Southwest are paying from 60 to 85 percent more on their freight than are the people in the East and Central Eastern States; and

Whereas this discrimination is detrimental to the farmer, the laborer, the businessman, and the manufacturer of our section of the Nation and does not give them equal opportunity to benefit in agriculture, commerce, or our economic system in general; and

Whereas if we are to have industrialization and to promote factories in Texas and the Southwest and to give the farmer, the laborer, and the businessman an even break it is necessary that this discrimination of freight rates be abolished and a fair and equitable system inaugurated: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives, That we hereby ask the United States Congress to take such steps as might be necessary to obtain from the Interstate Commerce Commission the cooperation and rulings necessary to abolish this discrimination in freight rates and to inaugurate a fair, just, and equitable system; and be it

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Members of the United States Congress from Texas.

Mr. GURNEY presented 14 petitions, numerous signed, of sundry citizens of 14 communities in the State of South Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

RESOLUTIONS OF LEGISLATURE OF SOUTH DAKOTA

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I present a number of resolutions adopted by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota for printing in the RECORD and appropriate references. The resolutions which I present relate to subjects of prime importance to the citizens of South Dakota, and I trust they may be given careful consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be received and properly referred.

The resolutions presented by Mr. GURNEY were referred as follows:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, favoring the enactment of legislation to enable farmers and stockmen to be self-sustaining and to repossess their homes and properties; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 13th instant, p. 1339, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, favoring the appropriation of adequate funds for operations under the Farm Forestry Acts; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 13th instant, p. 1339, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

To the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 3

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to liberalize and amortize the payments of Federal seed and feed loans

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):

Whereas a prolonged and still existing period of emergency exists in agricultural regions due to continued drought, insect infestation, low prices, lack of normal consumption of agricultural products, which said emergency conditions have largely precluded the repayment of Federal seed and feed loans in accordance with the notes evidencing the same; and

Whereas it appears to the Legislature of the State of South Dakota that a continuation of such emergency conditions will absolutely prevent a great number of farmers who have availed themselves of Federal seed and feed loans from repayment of same in accordance with their written agreement: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we hereby request and memorialize the National Congress to enact legislation which will permit the amortization of such seed and feed loans, and the repayment thereof in installments at a rate of interest of not more than 5 percent per annum. Such amortization to permit the repayment of such loan in equal annual installments for a period of not less than 10 years. Such repayment privileges to be available to loans hereafter made, as well as to those heretofore made.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 10

Concurrent resolution relating to the distribution of food commodities by Federal relief agencies

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):

Whereas the distribution of surplus food commodities and clothing to persons in need is necessary to many people in this State, but in many instances the distribution is not made to those who are in the greatest need thereof;

Whereas the present system of distribution is costly to both the United States Government, the State of South Dakota, and the several counties participating in the distribution thereof;

Whereas large quantities of the commodities distributed are not best adapted to the needs of the people of this State, which likewise results in waste and expense; and

Whereas the system of distribution results in diminishing the volume of wholesale and retail sales of commodities in the State, and the total cost of distribution, equals the profit of regular dealers and merchants: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That we memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact such measures as will correct these objections and that direct grants be made to the States for the purchase of such commodities of such kind and quality as are most adapted and suitable to the needs of such recipients, and that such commodities be distributed to persons found eligible and in need through regular commercial channels of trade by the issuance of purchase orders upon merchants and business establishments operating in South Dakota and offering for sale at points of consumption such commodities.

To the Committee on Finance:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 7

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to discuss and give full consideration to General Welfare Act (H. R. 2)

Whereas people of South Dakota have expressed the need for the passage of General Welfare Act (H. R. 2), which seeks to provide for and promote the general welfare of the United States by supplying to the people a more liberal distribution and increase of purchasing power, retiring certain citizens from gainful employment, and alleviating the hazards and insecurity of old age and unemployment, and to provide a method whereby citizens shall contribute to the purchase of and receive a retirement annuity, and to provide for the raising of the necessary revenue to operate a continuing plan thereof; and be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, That— Whereas General Welfare Act (H. R. 2) has heretofore been introduced into the Congress of the United States in an attempt to effectuate such proposals; and

Whereas the said Congress of the United States has failed to give such General Welfare Act (H. R. 2) the consideration to which the same is entitled: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, urged to use its best efforts to bring General Welfare Act (H. R. 2) forth for due and full consideration and discussion; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to the President of the United States, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

To the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 5

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to continue the appropriation contained in the Hayden-Cartwright Act for the construction and maintenance of highways within Indian reservations.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the twenty-sixth legislative session of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):

Whereas the Congress of the United States previously appropriated $4,000,000 for allotment to the Indian reservations of the United States for the purpose of construction and maintenance of highways within and upon such reservation; and

Whereas such allotment and appropriation was made by virtue of the Hayden-Cartwright Act of the Congress of the United States, and which appropriation at the last session of Congress was decreased to $3,000,000; and

Whereas the condition of the roads and highways within and upon the Indian reservations situated in South Dakota is deplorable and unsatisfactory; and

Whereas additional construction, reconstruction, and maintenance would be of great assistance and accomplish necessary results for transportation purposes within such reservations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States continue the allocation and appropriation of moneys in the Hayden-Cartwright

Act to Indian reservations in the United States to the extent of the $4,000,000 previously so allocated and appropriated; be it further

Resolved, That the Members of the Congress of the United States from the State of South Dakota be, and they are hereby, urged to use their best efforts to bring about the reinstatement of the $4,000,000 allocation and appropriation for construction and maintenance of such highways; be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary of state immediately upon adoption of this resolution to each Senator and Representative of the State of South Dakota in the Congress of the United States, to be by them presented to the proper committee in Congress determining such aforesaid legislation.

To the Committee on the Judiciary:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 6

Concurrent resolution memorializing the United States Senate to carefully scrutinize and investigate the qualifications of nominees to be confirmed for judicial positions

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):

Whereas the twenty-fifth session of the legislature of this State did by appropriate resolution record its opposition to the then pending bill before Congress, the object of which proposed law was to subjugate and intimidate the judicial department of the Federal Government; and

Whereas as a result of the courageous and patriotic action of a majority of the Members of the United States Senate, the independence of the judiciary, which is the only safeguard to individual rights and liberties, was for the present preserved; and

Whereas numerous nominees are about to be submitted to the United States Senate for confirmation for positions as judges of our Federal courts, and such personnel should consist of only such men as are believers in and committed to the preservation of the independence of the three coordinate branches of the Government—the keystone of American democracy: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That we urge and earnestly request the members of the United States Senate to carefully investigate and rigidly scrutinize all nominees for judicial positions to the end that our courts may be composed of men whose sympathies and views conform to the principles and traditions of American democracy, to wit, independent, coordinate divisions of our Federal Government.

That a copy of this resolution be mailed to each Senator and Member of Congress from the State.

To the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 9

Concurrent resolution petitioning the Postmaster General at Washington, D. C., to bring about the issuance of a stamp commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of statehood

Be it resolved by the Senate of the twenty-sixth legislative session of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):

Whereas this year 1939 is the fiftieth anniversary of statehood of the State of South Dakota; and

Whereas it is customary for the United States of America to mark such periods of history by issuing a stamp commemorating the attainment of the fiftieth anniversary of statehood; and

Whereas the nationally historic figures carved on Mount Rushmore in the Black Hills of South Dakota are especially adaptable and appropriate as a subject for engraving such stamp; and

Whereas that this request may be placed in permanent historic records in the archives of history as part of the official record of this legislative body: Be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That approval of this above consideration be recorded; and be it further

Resolved, That we hereby petition the Postmaster General at Washington, D. C., to bring his influence to bear in uniting with us to bring about an issuance of a stamp commemorating this statehood event, bearing an engraving of the figures on Mount Rushmore in the Black Hills of South Dakota.

That a copy of this resolution be mailed to the Postmaster General at Washington, D. C., and to each Senator and Member of Congress from the State.

TOWNSEND OLD-AGE PENSION PLAN—PETITION

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a petition submitted by Townsend Club No. 1, of Miles City, Mont., calling for the enactment of the Townsend plan for old-age pensions by the Congress of the United States.

It is represented that this petition is signed by 98 percent of the people of the Miles City community.

I ask that it be referred to the Finance Committee, where this proposed legislation is now pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition presented by the Senator from Montana will be received and referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 539. A bill for the relief of Charles E. Naghel, special disbursing agent, Department of the Interior, and Kammeyer & Medack, contractors, from disallowance of charges for additional work under a construction contract (Rept. No. 81);

S. 783. A bill to amend the act, as amended, entitled "An act to refer the claims of the Delaware Indians to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States," approved February 7, 1925 (Rept. No. 94);

S. 784. A bill for the relief of certain Indians of the Winnebago Agency, Nebr. (Rept. No. 95);

S. 790. A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Prairie Band or Tribe of Pottawatomie Indians of Kansas and Wisconsin against the United States (Rept. No. 96); and

S. 863. A bill to provide for the payment of attorneys' fees from Osage tribal funds (Rept. No. 82).

Mr. CHAVEZ, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1476) to authorize an appropriation to pay non-Indian claimants whose claims have been extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924, but who have been found entitled to awards under said act as supplemented by the act of May 31, 1933, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 83) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 875) for the relief of Andrew J. Crockett and Walter Crockett, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 97) thereon.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 754) for the relief of J. G. Mayfield, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 84) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 10) for the relief of the Fred Harvey Transportation Department, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 85) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 794) relating to banking, banks, and trust companies in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 92) thereon.

Mr. WILEY, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 911. A bill for the relief of Roscoe C. Prescott (Rept. No. 86); and

S. 1174. A bill for the relief of Alex St. Louis (Rept. No. 87).

Mr. TOBEY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 11) for the relief of Hubert H. Clark, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 88) thereon.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 749) for the relief of Harry F. Baker, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 89) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1253) for the relief of John B. Dow, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 90) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1374) for the relief of Cohen, Goldman & Co., Inc., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 91) thereon.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 1523) to authorize the payment of burial expenses and expenses in connection with last illness and death of native employees who die while serving in offices abroad of executive departments of the United States Government, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 93) thereon.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. MCKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. GILLETTE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably, without reservation, Executive C, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, a protocol signed in London on June 24, 1938, amending the international agreement for the regulation of whaling signed in London on June 8, 1937, and submitted a report (Exec. Rept. 1) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT—AGRICULTURAL LABOR

MR. LOGAN. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act, to define agricultural labor. I do not know whether the bill should be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or to the Committee on Education and Labor. I thought, perhaps, as it deals with agricultural labor, it should go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks, to be followed by a statement explaining the provisions of the proposed amendment to the law, and also a list of the farm organizations of the United States which have endorsed the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, will, together with the explanatory statement and list, be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1550) to amend the National Labor Relations Act (Public Law No. 198, 74th Cong., approved July 5, 1935, 49 Stat. 449), to define agricultural labor, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 (3) of the National Labor Relations Act be amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraph:

"The term 'any individual employed as an agricultural laborer' shall include any person engaged as an employee in farming in all its branches and among other things includes the cultivation and tillage of the soil, dairying, the production, cultivation, growing, and harvesting of any and all agricultural or horticultural commodities (including commodities defined as agricultural commodities in section 15 (g) of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended, and including cutting, removal, and transportation of logs, pulp wood, fence posts, fuel wood, and other primary products of farm wood lots, including the sawing of lumber from the timber of such wood lots by the farmer or by contract in which the farmer retains title to the lumber), the raising of livestock, bees, game, fur-bearing animals, or poultry, eggs, and any practices performed by or for a farmer or on a farm as an incident to or in connection with such farming operations, including preparation for market, delivery to storage or to market, or to carriers for transportation to market; and shall also include any person engaged as an employee in connection with or incidental to the (1) cleaning, or otherwise preparing in their raw or natural state, precooling, freezing, drying, grading, packing, canning for market from their raw or natural state, of fresh fruits and vegetables; (2) ginning or compressing of cotton; (3) stripping, grading, drying, packing, stemming or fermenting of tobacco; (4) straining, packing, separating, or otherwise preparing in its raw or natural state of honey; (5) drying, grading, baling of forage, fiber, and miscellaneous crops; (6) cleaning, packing, grading, hulling, or polishing of grains, beans, peas of all kinds, and seeds; (7) cooling, freezing, separating, packing, pasteurizing, or preparing of milk and cream; (8) making, preparing, or packing of butter, whey, and other dairy products for market; (9) receiving, grading, candling, and packing of eggs; (10) hatching of poultry, game birds, and wild fowl; (11) grading or packing of nursery and other horticultural crops; (12) shearing, grading, bagging of grease wool, mohair, and rabbit fur for market; (13) cleaning, grading, preparing, and packing of nuts for market; (14) grading, local concentration, purchase, and sale of livestock for the producer; (15) drying, grading, packing, or preparing other agricultural or horticultural commodities in their raw or natural state; and such handling, storing, or refrigeration of any such commodities (but not including terminal storage or refrigeration) as is incidental thereto or used in connection therewith; when any of such operations are performed within the general territory in any region of the United States where the farming district or districts are located from which such commodity is produced and within or in close proximity to any such farming district; or at such place in the general territory in proximity to such farming district, where such commodity is produced (but outside of the 22 leading centers of distribution as listed by the United States Department of Agriculture except as to the purchase and sale of livestock) as is necessary to obtain reasonably available and adequate transportation, water, power, or other required operating facilities; and such operations are performed on products produced from any farming district within the same general territory."

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. LOGAN and the list of farm organizations, and so forth, are as follows:

STATEMENT SHOWING NEED FOR AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT, DEFINING "AGRICULTURAL LABOR" IN SECTION 2 (3)

1. AGRICULTURE IS UNITED IN THIS REQUEST

The request to amend the National Labor Relations Act is made by the National Cooperative Council, National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation, American Farm Bureau Federation, National Grange, Agricultural Producers Labor Committee, numerous cooperative producing groups throughout the Nation, as well as by numerous commodity groups representing the producers of tobacco, cotton, livestock, fresh fruits and vegetables, honey, nuts, poultry and its products, eggs, grains, beans, seeds, forage and miscellaneous crops in all parts of the United States.

2. PRESENT PROVISIONS OF STATUTE

a. Section 2 (3) of the National Labor Relations Act provides that it shall not apply to "any individual employed as an agricultural laborer." The act, however, contains no definition of that term.

3. HOW QUESTION ARISES

A dispute has arisen in many States between the National Labor Relations Board and the farmers over what constitutes agricultural labor. In California and Arizona, for example, the farmers have been and are now subjected to the activities of the Fruit and Vegetable Workers, a local of the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing, and Allied Workers of America, a C. I. O. union (and its other locals and predecessor organizations). Involved in these disputes in California have also been the citrus packing house workers' unions, originally chartered under the A. F. of L. but whose membership have in many instances transferred to the C. I. O. locals. The same organization has been active in Colorado, New Jersey, Florida, and Texas.

This union, with the direct backing of the C. I. O., has now set out to organize all types of agricultural or horticultural workers for the purpose of controlling the food supply of the Nation. This union contends that no labor, except that actually used in cultivation work in the fields, is agricultural. Agents for the National Labor Relations Board have for many months refused to state their position with reference to such labor and that used to pick fruit or harvest the crops and the Board is supporting the union in its contention that labor used to wash, grade, and pack oranges owned by the farmers in their own cooperative packing house located near their groves, is not agricultural labor. Under this ruling labor used in ginning cotton, stripping and packing tobacco, preparing any fruits or vegetables in their raw or natural state, and much of the labor used in the necessary preparation of other farm crops, would be held not to be agricultural in nature. This work is traditionally and actually agricultural in nature and is intimately connected with the production and harvest of the crops. The issue is squarely presented whether the United States Government should use its police power, through the National Labor Relations Board, and its agents, as is now being done, to assist the U. C. A. P. A. W. A. or any like organization in its efforts to dominate the farmers' labor, and gain control of the sources of the food supply of the Nation, when Congress in passing the act specifically exempted agricultural laborers from its provisions. The farmers contend that conditions over which they have no control make such regulation inadvisable if not impossible.

4. NEED FOR CLARIFICATION BY AMENDMENT

(a) In July 1937 the National Labor Relations Board was requested by agricultural groups to issue a regulation under section 6 (a) of the act defining agricultural labor. The Board has refused to issue such a regulation. The refusal of the Board's agents to state its policy with reference to field and harvesting labor tends to lend the support of the Board to the claims of the labor organizers that such labor is not agricultural. The Board's decision hereafter referred to that labor used to pack farmers' crops before they can be marketed is not agricultural labor would, if such labor should strike or refuse to handle crops harvested by other than union labor, effectively bottle up the farmers' crops, with great loss to the farmers.

(b) The issue of what constitutes agricultural labor has been presented to the Board in five cases.

It is significant to note that in a memorandum written for the the Board prior to the trial of the first case, entitled "In the Matter of the North Whittier Heights Citrus Association," and filed as an exhibit in that case, it was determined that agricultural labor should be limited to the "cultivation and tillage of the soil, the feeding and caring for livestock." The Board is apparently determined to follow this narrow and antiquated concept of agriculture, regardless of what the evidence shows. The blending of the policies of the National Labor Relations Board with the policies of certain labor groups as those policies affect agriculture is strikingly coincidental, if nothing more.

The case in the Matter of North Whittier Heights Citrus Association, No. C-360, was filed in September 1937 and tried October 1937. The issue raised in that case was whether the persons employed in washing, grading, and packing of oranges and grapefruit in a cooperatively owned packing house situated near the groves from which the fruit was produced, and owned entirely by the farmers and handling the fruit of its members only in its raw or natural state, were agricultural laborers.

The Board has just filed its findings and order (more than 16 months after the complaint was filed) holding this labor not agricultural labor within the meaning of the act. The same issue has recently been presented in two other cases involving the same type of organization and labor relating to transactions occurring in August and September 1937; neither of these cases has been decided by the Board. These cases are in the Matter of the Sierra Madre Lamanda Citrus Association et al., No. XXI-C-404, and in the Matter of the Upland Citrus Association, No. XXI-C-360.

These cases also raise the issue whether (1) the discharge of a number of the employees, including some union members, during the slack season because of a lack of available fruit to pack, or the failure to reemploy all the same persons, when the work picked up as the fruit ripened, or (2) the failure to reemploy all the persons on the pay roll during the previous season (after the packing house had been closed for months), or (3) employment of new persons at opening of new season, in place of some old employees, or (4) the failure to evenly distribute the available work among employees, or (5) the employment of the farmers themselves in place of union members for part of the season, all of which are circumstances contended by the farmers to have occurred because of the seasonal and hazardous nature of agricultural operations, constitute unfair labor practices within the meaning of the act, and the Board has ruled that they do and ordered reinstatement with back pay to a large number of such persons. Under the Board's rulings it would be impossible to carry on agricultural operations, with their constant varying demands, without always being subjected to the contention (whether made in good faith or not) that any change in the number of employees, or in the nature or extent of their work, was done because of union activity rather than because of changes in crop conditions or volume of the commodity to be handled. In the Sierra case the Board, in effect, set aside a valid and legal contract in order to hold that an unfair labor practice had occurred and the labor was not agricultural in nature.

The findings of the Board in the North Whittier Heights case and the findings of the trial examiner in the Sierra case demonstrate that the mere fact members of the union may be discharged or not reemployed may be, in and of itself, sufficient evidence for the Board to find that an unfair labor practice has occurred. In the handling of these perishable crops variation in weather conditions require quick and extensive changes in methods and plans, which may create opportunity for persons so inclined to contend that such changes constitute unfair labor practices. By methods best known to the Board and its agents an investigation is made by the Board; a complaint is then filed by the Board against the farmers; the Board selects and pays for the trial examiner; the Board, through its paid agents, appears and prosecutes the case, introducing the evidence it has previously selected; the farmers must appear and defend the proceeding at great cost to themselves; the Board then, either through its trial examiner or its review section, makes its findings and order which in the cases above mentioned was based upon the evidence introduced by the Board, and the findings discounted all the evidence introduced by the farmers showing why such persons were discharged or not reemployed. The only remedy the farmer then has is an expensive proceeding for review before the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. This is a kind of justice the farmers don't understand. When this ruinous situation was called to the attention of one of the Board's regional directors the answer was that it was part of the great leveling out process.

(c) In another case entitled "In the Matter of American Fruit Growers, Inc.," XXI-R-483-510, arising in Phoenix, Ariz., the Board ruled that labor used in packing lettuce in its raw or natural state in a packing shed owned by the grower located on a nearby railroad siding, even when the labor was employed and paid for by the farmer who grew the lettuce, is not agricultural labor. The Supreme Court of Arizona, in the case of Melendez v. Johns (76 Pac. (2d) 1163), had previously held labor of this kind to be agricultural in nature.

(d) In the case entitled "In the Matter of the Growers-Shippers Vegetable Association et al.," the issue was presented whether the labor used in packing lettuce grown in Salinas Valley, Calif., employed and paid for by the farmer who grew the lettuce was agricultural in nature. The alleged unfair labor practices involved in that case grew out of the lettuce strike called during the harvesting season of the highly perishable crop by the Agricultural Workers' Industrial Union, Local 18211, a communistic-controlled organization (vol. 1, p. 99, U. A. R.). The case was tried in May 1936, but the Board has failed to pass upon the issue up to this time.

5. LABOR USED IN THESE CASES IS CLEARLY AGRICULTURAL LABOR

In each of these cases the uncontradicted evidence showed that the work done in the packing house was previously done by the farmer on the farm as an incident to the growing and harvesting of his crops. In the three citrus cases a number of small farmers had combined into a cooperative citrus association in order to insure uniformity of grading and to reduce the pro rata costs of this work to the farmers. The individual farmer could not afford to install an individual packing house on his own ranch. In the lettuce cases the growers were packing their own products in their own sheds. The laws of the State and good commercial practice require that fruit and vegetables be properly washed, graded, and packed before they are sold, and the farmer cannot realize anything for his product until it is so packed. The packing houses are not separate commercial ventures in which the farmers are engaging, but they are an integral and necessary part of the producing and harvesting of their crops. The individual farmer's investment in the packing house is only about 4 percent of the investment in their respective groves.

The cooperative association is the agent of the grower in doing the picking, washing, and packing of the fruit, and merely holds legal title to the fruit so that it may be handled for the account of the farmer. From the funds received from the sale of the fruit is deducted the actual operating costs, including the labor costs, and the balance is paid pro rata to the farmers. The labor is thus paid by funds belonging to the farmer. In these three citrus cases the packing house only picks, washes, grades, and packs the fruit. The selling is done entirely by a separate organization.

The oranges, grapefruit, or lemons are merely picked, washed, graded, and packed, and when the work is complete the fruit is still in its raw or natural state. The fruit of all the members is pooled together, but the identity of the farmer's fruit is retained in the pool. The affairs of the association are conducted by a board of directors selected by the farmers from their own number. There is a general practice for the male labor used in the packing house during the packing season to be interchanged and used on the farm at other times. The packing-house activities have always been considered as agricultural in nature, and the term "agricultural labor" has a general and accepted meaning among the farmers to include these workers.

6. CONGRESS HAS ALREADY HELD SUCH LABOR AGRICULTURAL

The Congress has already held the labor of a nature involved in these cases and covered by the suggested amendment to be agricultural in nature. Section 3 (f) of the Fair Labor Standards Act, in defining "agriculture" (which under 13 (a) (6) is exempt from the provisions of that act) covered the "cultivation, growing, and harvesting of any agricultural or horticultural commodities" and "any practices performed by the farmer or on the farm as an incident to or in conjunction with such farming operations, including preparation for market." In the cases before the Board the product is obviously being prepared by the farmer for market, but the Board has taken the position that because the farmers have grouped together in a cooperative association, the work is not done by the farmer. Furthermore, the provisions now found in 13 (a) (10) of the Fair Labor Standards Act covering the handling, packing, storing, ginning, compressing, pasteurizing, drying, preparing in their raw or natural state, or canning of any agricultural or horticultural commodity for market, or in making cheese, butter, or other dairy products within the area of production, passed both the Senate and the House, as a part of the definition of "agriculture" (vol. 81, pt. 7, p. 7876-C. R.; vol. 83, pt. 7, p. 7401, C. R.). However, as a matter of final draftsmanship, while the bill was before the conferees, the definition of "agriculture" was divided into two sections, and the part now in 3 (f) was left under section 2 of the act which is the "definition" section but referred to and exempted under section 13 (a) (6), while the other part now found in 13 (a) (10) was directly embodied in the exemption section. Mere change in form due to draftsmanship did not change the intent of Congress, however, in passing both as a part of the definition of agriculture. The National Labor Relations Board refuses to follow this congressional definition. The suggested amendment to the National Labor Relations Act is narrower than that contained in the Fair Labor Standards Act.

7. AN ANALYSIS OF THE SUGGESTED AMENDMENT

(a) The amendment is designed to exempt only the operations carried on in the districts where the farms are located from which the crops are produced or at points in proximity to such districts (but outside the major distributing centers), where reasonable available and adequate operating facilities are found for preparing the crops. This is clearly set forth in the last 13 lines of the amendment.

(b) The operations exempted are those intimately connected with the harvesting of the crops and which are generally considered to be agricultural in nature.

The first 16 lines of the amendment cover the operations done on the farm or by or for a farmer in connection with or incidental to the farming operations. These are practically the same exemptions as found in 3 (f) of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The operations contained in subsections 1 to 15, inclusive, cover those operations done off the farm but within close proximity to the farming district which are first necessary to put the product in shape for marketing. These exemptions are narrower than those found in section 13 (a) (10) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938.

In subsection (1) of the proposed amendment to define agricultural labor the operations are limited to the preparation in their raw or natural state, drying, freezing, and canning for market from their raw or natural state of fresh fruits and vegetables. This does not cover any processing except that necessary in the canning of the products as they come from the farm, and does not cover recanning and many other operations that are carried on with reference to fresh fruits and vegetables but which change the character of the product and are not so intimately related to the harvesting operations. The first canning of these highly seasonal and perishable crops as they come from the farm during the harvesting season by canning establishments located in the farming districts directly affects the farmers' income from these crops and offer the only market for large quantities of such crops.

Subsection (2) is limited to ginning and compressing cotton. Cotton gins are usually located in the rural areas near the farms and are highly seasonal in operations and employ labor engaged in other seasons of the year in other farm work. Compressing operations are limited in extent.

Subsection (3) is limited to those operations normally done in preparing the tobacco before it is turned over to the tobacco companies.

Subsection (4) relates to the handling of honey in its raw or natural state only.

Subsection (5) is limited to those things done with forage, fiber, or miscellaneous crops before they enter commercial channels.

Subsection (6) is likewise related to those operations on grains, beans, or peas of all kinds and seeds necessary to prepare them for the market in their raw or natural state before they enter the channels of trade.

Subsections (7) and (8) cover certain operations in the handling of milk, cream, and of making butter, whey, and other dairy products as are necessary to prepare the farmer's products for movement into the channels of trade.

Subsection (9) covers merely the receiving, grading, and packing of eggs.

Subsection (10) covers only hatching operations of poultry, game birds, and wild fowls.

Subsection (11) covers merely the grading and packing of nursery and other horticultural stock.

Subsection (12) covers merely the shearing, grading, and bagging of animal fibers.

Subsection (13) covers only cleaning, grading, and packing of nuts in their raw or natural state.

Subsection (14) covers only the grading, local concentration, and purchase and sale of livestock for the producer. The clause "purchase and sale" covers only the persons involved in buying and selling of the livestock. This is the same class of persons exempted under the Fair Labor Standards Act as salesmen. No slaughtering or meat-packing operators are within the exemption.

Subsection (15) covers only the preparing in their raw or natural state of other agricultural or horticultural commodities.

In all cases the amendment exempts only such handling, storing, or refrigeration as is incidental to the operations specifically exempted in any of the subsections 1 to 15, inclusive.

8. THERE IS NO NEED FOR REGULATION OF AGRICULTURAL LABOR UNDER THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

There is not found in agriculture the same strife between the employer and employee as is found in great industrial operations. The reasons for lack of labor strife in farm operations are many. Agricultural labor does not live under the same conditions as industrial labor. Living in smaller communities and upon farms, they have a higher standard of living, with cheaper rents, light, heat, and civic costs.

The habits and customs of agriculture of necessity have been different than those of industry. The farmers and workers are thrown in close daily contact with one another. They, in many cases, eat at a common table. Their children attend the same school. Their families bow together in religious worship. They discuss together the common problems of our economic and political life. The farmer, his family, and the laborers' work together as one unit. In the times of stress, in the handling of livestock or perishable agricultural commodities, of impending storms, of pest infestation and control, of livestock epidemics, and at many other times the farmer and laborer must stand shoulder to shoulder against the common enemy. This develops a unity of interest which is not found in industry. This unity is more effective to remove labor disturbances than any law can be.

These habits and customs of agriculture should not be disturbed by regulations designed for industry. Such an attempt would violently dislocate the entire structure of agriculture. Agriculture does not fit into the mechanized operations and regulations necessary to industry and any such attempt will produce far greater problems than now exist. The time of the largest employment of agricultural labor is during harvesting seasons and at that time when only a slight delay may cause a ruin of the entire year's work, there is no time for the farmer to stop and bargain with union representatives. The farmer is at enough disadvantage in dealing with labor at that time, without having the Labor Board as a proponent of the union, threaten him with the filing of a complaint, hearings, fines, and orders.

Agricultural labor is seasonal, widely scattered, closely connected with the family of the farmer, and unskilled.

A comparison of the number of farmers employing labor with the number of laborers employed by such farmers, shows that equality of bargaining power already exists, as there are as many employers as employees. Forty percent of the population of these United States live and obtain their livelihood within rural areas. There are 33,000,000 persons actually living upon the 6,000,000 farms of the country. Ten and one-half million of this farm population consists of those engaged in productive operations of these farms. Out of this number, for each person whose only direct interest is that of a wage earner, there are three persons who contribute both capital and labor to these productive operations (Social Security Bulletin, vol. 1, No. 6, p. 19). The need for collective bargaining does not exist where one employer has to deal with only one or two employees. There is no mass hiring of labor in agriculture such as is found in industrial operations, and where mass hiring does not take place, there is not likely to be any discrimination in regard to hire or tenure of employment. Where a few persons are employed on a farm or in a packing shed handling farm products in rural communities there is very little likelihood of any labor dispute arising which needs collective bargaining as a means of settlement. In the cooperative packing houses where a number of farmers combine to have their work done together, there are usually about two employees for each farmer member, many of which employees are farmers or connected with the farmer's family.

9. REFERENCE TO THE NATURE OF U. C. A. P. A. W. A.

For a statement of evidence showing the communistic character of the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers of America Union, a C. I. O. affiliate, reference is made to volume 1, page 99, and volume 3, pages 1969, 1998, 2184, of the Investigation of Un-American Propaganda Activities in the United States, hereafter referred to as Un-American activities report for short. For evidence showing the communistic activities of Donald Henderson, president of the union, see volume 1, pages 99, 872, 886, 901, 922; volume 3, page 2177; and volume 1, page 457, U. A. R.; for evidence of the communistic activities of George Wolfe, its international vice president, see volume 1, pages 100 and 125, U. A. R.; for evidence showing the communistic activities of Lief Dahl, the organizer for New Jersey, see volume 1, page 100, U. A. R.; for evidence showing the communistic activities of Jose Hernandez, Marcella Ryan, Jack Beralla, and Pat Callahan, Pacific coast organizers, see volume 1, pages 131-132, U. A. R.

Of course, the efforts of such an organization as the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers of America, its officers and organizers, to control the food supplies through a control of agricultural labor is opposed by the farmers. The real issue is not the wage or working conditions of the laborers. The real issue is one of gaining control of the food supplies at their source, even though the farmers' crops are destroyed. With this type of organization fomenting trouble and producing the evidence, and with the National Labor Relations Board supporting the union in its contentions, agriculture faces a grave, immediate, nationwide crisis. The farmers are fighting to save their farms against this insidious, ruinous procedure.

The Communist Party is exceedingly frank in its aims regarding agriculture. They say:

"We have nothing to hide. We are merely carrying out the details of a program prescribed by the Communist International to unseat the existing system of government and substitute a control similar in principle and operation to that of Soviet Russia. The workers no longer believe in the advice handed out by William Green, the head of the A. F. L., that they should not strike at a crisis because public sentiment would be against them. * * * This illustrates the reason we follow the California crops." (Vol. 4, p. 1954, U. A. R.)

10. WILL INCREASE AGRICULTURAL COSTS

To bring agriculture under the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board will directly or indirectly increase labor cost to agriculture. The increased cost will arise either from inefficiency, direct wage increases, or loss of crops by strike, or through labor jurisdictional disputes. No valid labor strife now exists in the agricultural field, but experience has shown that such strife is likely to arise if certain labor organizers, supported by the agencies of the National Labor Relations Board, set out to gain control of agricultural labor and agricultural production.

Under the depressed price structure of agricultural commodities, any added labor costs cannot be passed on to the consumer, but must be borne by the farmer and will further reduce his purchasing power. It has long been recognized that buying power of the American farmer is far below the parity of income required for his survival. Agriculture is subject to the vagaries of nature and has no effective control over the price of its products.

Agriculture cannot effectively compete for its fair share of national income. It is subject to the control of supply and demand. Industry generally can regulate its supply to demand. Through the additional bargaining power given labor under the National Labor Relations Act, labor is now better able to protect its rights. Agriculture is thus required to compete with industry and with labor, both of which are better able to control the supply of that which they sell; consequently agriculture is placed in the position of not being able to maintain its proper place along with other major groups in our modern economic structure. To add to this, the burden of regulation under the National Labor Relations Act will still further increase maladjustments now suffered by agriculture. The national buying power is not increased by taking money from the farmer and giving it to the laborer. Such process merely penalizes the farmer for the benefit of labor.

PROCESSING TAX ON CERTAIN VEGETABLE OILS—AMENDMENT

Mr. CONNALLY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3790) relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

TRUST INDENTURES AND REGULATION OF SALE OF SECURITIES—AMENDMENT

Mr. HERRING (for himself and Mr. TOWNSEND) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (S. 477) to provide for the regulation of the sale of certain securities in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and the regulation of the trust indentures under which the same are issued, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT—COTTON

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer an amendment intended to be proposed to the agricultural adjustment bill which was introduced by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], being Senate bill 1303. I ask that the amendment may be printed, printed in the RECORD, and referred to the appropriate committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, ordered to be printed, and printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. McKELLAR to the bill (S. 1303) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, with respect to cotton: Insert at the proper place in the bill the following:

"That notwithstanding any other provision of law the Commodity Credit Corporation is hereby authorized to dispose of commodities held as security for loans made to producers by allowing the producers to redeem such commodities upon payment of the market value thereof as determined by the Corporation less such amounts as the Corporation may determine as proper compensation to producers for withdrawing the collateral commodities and assisting in the sale of same: Provided, No cotton shall be released prior to February 1 nor subsequent to July 1 of any calendar year."

SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR CONNALLY

[Mr. DAVIS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by Senator CONNALLY on the occasion of the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Knights of Pythias, which appears in the Appendix.]

WASHINGTON BIRTHDAY ADDRESS BY SENATOR BYRD AT ALEXANDRIA, VA.

[Mr. BAILEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address on George Washington delivered by Senator BYRD on February 22, 1939, before the Alexandria-Washington Masonic Lodge, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR JOHNSON OF COLORADO AT DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION, FLINT, MICH.

[Mr. BROWN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by Senator JOHNSON of Colorado at the Democratic convention held in Flint, Mich., last week, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY O. L. BROWNLEE AT SOUTH DAKOTA LEGISLATIVE DINNER

[Mr. GURNEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by Mr. O. L. Brownlee on the occasion of the South Dakota legislative dinner at Pierre, S. Dak., February 16, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

NEUTRALITY VERSUS INTERVENTION—ARTICLE BY REV. JOSEPH F. THORNING

[Mr. TYDINGS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Rev. Joseph F. Thorning entitled "Neutrality Versus Intervention," published in the January 15, 1939, issue of Spain, which appears in the Appendix.]

RESOLUTIONS OF NEW JERSEY FARM BUREAU

[Mr. BARBOUR asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD certain resolutions adopted by the Twentieth Annual Convention of the New Jersey Farm Bureau at Trenton, N. J., January 25, 1939, which appear in the Appendix.]

THE ANTHRACITE INDUSTRY

[Mr. DAVIS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer of February 19, 1939, entitled "Teamwork Needed to Save Anthracite," which appears in the Appendix.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is concluded.

AMBASSADOR JOSEPHUS DANIELS

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, the morning press carried the story that a Member of the other body of Congress severely criticized Hon. Josephus Daniels, our Ambassador to Mexico, and asked for an inquiry regarding his official conduct.

I cannot see anything unreasonable in Congress making inquiry from American representatives in foreign countries; but the American characteristic of fair play should impel us to wait until the facts are ascertained concerning the kind of service rendered by our representatives before subjecting them to harsh accusations. I feel confident that an account of Ambassador Daniels' work in Mexico and his dignified and humane efforts in protecting American interests in Mexico would satisfy any fair-minded body of inquirers.

Without going into the details of his work, I can in good faith say that from personal observation my opinion is that Ambassador Daniels has rendered valuable service to the United States. Of course, he is not of the arrogant or the garrulous type; but he represents the best that is American. He has made tremendous progress under the most trying circumstances. He is a kindly gentleman, who tries to understand the psychology of the people of the country to which he is accredited. Even in matters pertaining to religion he has taken a personal interest, and through his efforts the conditions of the churches, including the Catholic Church and its millions of worshipers, are better—not so good as we should and do desire, but, after all, there is only one Uncle Sam.

At another time I shall discuss our relations with Mexico. For the present suffice it to say that I wish we had more men of the God-fearing attributes, the heart, and the Americanism of Josephus Daniels.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The consideration of the calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION—EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4011, which, I may explain, is identical with Senate bill 1084, already reported by the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4011) to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) section 7 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (49 Stat. 4), as amended, is hereby further amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "June 30, 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1941"; (b) section 9 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (49 Stat. 4), as amended, is hereby further amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "June 30, 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1941"; (c) section 9 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (49 Stat. 4), as amended, is hereby further amended by inserting before the period at the end of the last sentence thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That the Export-Import Bank of Washington shall not have outstanding at any one time loans in excess of $100,000,000, the capital for which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, when requested by the Secretary of the Treasury with the approval of the President, may continue to supply from time to time through loans or by subscription to preferred stock"; and (d) section 4 of the act approved March 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 108), is hereby amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "$500,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$900,000,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation considerably in detail of the measure, the changes which it makes in existing law, the additional obligations which it imposes upon the Federal Government, and, generally, the changes proposed in the policies now pursued.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the changes are rather simple.

The bill before us deals with two subjects—the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank—and proposes to continue the lives of these two instrumentalities of Government until June 30, 1941.

In addition to extending the life of the Commodity Credit Corporation, the bill increases from $500,000,000 to $900,000,000 the authority of that Corporation to issue notes, debentures, or similar obligations. That amount is estimated by those who are informed upon the subject as the sum necessary to enable the Corporation to make loans under the authority and mandate of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

Under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as to cotton, corn, and wheat, the Commodity Credit Corporation has no discretion in making loans. It is directed by Congress to make loans when application is made, the price to be fixed by the Department of Agriculture, and to be between 52 and 75 percent of parity. I call the attention of those who have criticized the loans which have been made by the Commodity Credit Corporation upon cotton, wheat, and corn to the fact that this is a mandatory provision, and that their criticism must be directed against Congress and not against the Commodity Credit Corporation. Congress has said, "You must make these loans," and has prescribed the terms and conditions under which the loans are to be made.

If there is a question as to whether that mandatory provision should exist, an amendment on that subject should be directed to the Agricultural Adjustment Act and not to any act with reference to the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is that the sole function of the Commodity Credit Corporation?

Mr. WAGNER. No. It makes loans on all agricultural products. There are other products included, but the major portion of the loans—I think about 90 percent of the loans—are made on cotton, corn, and wheat. I will read to the Senator the list of the products upon which loans have been made:

Butter, corn, cotton, dates, figs, hops, peanuts, pecans, prunes, raisins, tobacco, turpentine, resin, wool, mohair, and wheat.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What I wanted to ask the Senator was whether the necessity for increased loaning capacity is due to the mandatory loans or to the discretionary loans.

Mr. WAGNER. Primarily to the mandatory loans, because, as I have said, I think 90 percent in amount of all the loans made have been made to the producers of cotton, corn, and wheat, which are the mandatory products enumerated in the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator state the total of those loans at the moment?

Mr. WAGNER. The total of all loans?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of both the mandatory loans and the discretionary loans.

Mr. WAGNER. If we take into consideration both actually disbursed loans and commitments the loans amount to $747,448,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And that amount is divided how as between discretionary and mandatory loans? What proportion of the $747,000,000 is in the mandatory-loan category?

Mr. WAGNER. In the case of cotton, there are outstanding loans and commitments to the extent of $560,000,000. I am giving approximations. Does the Senator want the exact figure?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; the round figures will be sufficient.

Mr. WAGNER. I think I had better give the exact figures: Cotton, $560,323,741; corn, $90,466,198; wheat, $40,135,797.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Those are all mandatory loans under the other statute? Is that correct?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does that mean that the Commodity Credit Corporation has already made loans in excess of its authority?

Mr. WAGNER. In excess of the amount of debentures it was authorized to issue. The Senator undoubtedly has reference to the $147,000,000 over its combined capital and borrowing power for which the Commodity Credit Corporation obligated itself, or made commitments. That came about at a time when Congress was not in session. The $500,000,000 authorization had been exhausted; but there was a mandatory provision of law by which Congress, if I may repeat, said to the Commodity Credit Corporation, "These loans must be made." We were then in a critical situation. The Senators representing the cotton States can explain that situation better than I can. They are better informed about it. We had a 19,000,000-bale cotton crop, and the situation was very serious. If the loans had not been authorized the cotton would have been thrown upon the market, and we should undoubtedly have had a serious crisis throughout the South, with major repercussions throughout the country.

So the Reconstruction Finance Corporation obligated itself to take up any commitments in excess of $600,000,000 which the Commodity Credit Corporation had made and upon which funds were demanded. That is how the $147,000,000 obligation was incurred. In the first place, it was an obligation which the Commodity Credit Corporation incurred in carrying out the direction of Congress, and second, it was a very wise thing to do under the serious circumstances presented.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I recall discussing this feature of the A. A. bill when it was before the Senate last year. I think the Senator and I engaged in a discussion of the matter on the floor of the Senate. I understand the figure was given as $560,000,000 as having been loaned to the cotton producers.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. What I am inquiring is, What was the average loan on cotton per pound?

Mr. WAGNER. It differed in different periods. In this connection I may say that the Senator could not have had the discussion with me, because this is the first time I have attempted to speak with any authority upon this subject. Probably the Senator had the discussion with one of those better informed about cotton.

Mr. McNARY. I remember going into the matter. The point I was making at that time, and am making now, is that in my estimation the per-pound loan on cotton quite exceeded its market value at the time the loan was made, and that is the question on which I wanted information.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator from Oregon whether it is not true that under the Farm Act, and the administration of the act, the Secretary fixed the loan basis, or the Commodity Credit Corporation fixed it?

Mr. McNARY. It is based on 52 percent of parity.

Mr. CONNALLY. It was fixed also on a basic acreage of cotton.

Mr. McNARY. But loans were made some time prior to the enactment of this law, all of which were made at about 12 cents per pound on an 8-cent per pound market. Wherever the authority may rest, and by whomsoever errors of judgment may have been made, the question I am asking is, What was the average loan per pound as compared with the average price per pound at the time the loan was made?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not aware that any loan was made at 12 cents when the market price was 8 cents.

Mr. McNARY. I remember discussing the matter at length here last year when it was before us.

Mr. WAGNER. I have just been informed that there was only one instance prior to 1938 when the loan price exceeded the market price of cotton—and that loan was liquidated at 100 percent with no loss to the Commodity Credit Corporation. I am quite willing to enter into this discussion—perhaps it is pertinent—but I believe we should defer these questions as to whether the loans should be made at all, and at what prices they should be made, to a discussion of amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act. That is the law which prescribes, first, what loans are to be made, and second, the prices at which they are to be made.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate all that, but this is a pertinent inquiry. It has no reference to the value of the pending measure. I can go to the Department and get the information, but I assumed the Senator had the information. If the Senator has not the information, then I shall be glad to go to the Department.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me say to the Senator from Oregon that the first and only 12-cent cotton loan was made in 1934. At the time that loan was made, fixed at 12 cents, the market was at 12 cents, or approximately 12 cents. The loan may have exceeded the market value of the cotton slightly. I think, perhaps, it might be fair to concede that it did exceed the actual market value of the cotton. But I may say to the Senator from Oregon that that loan has been liquidated 100 percent.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator does not need to defend the proposition. I entertain a very profound sympathy for the cotton growers; but I do recall graphically that last year, when we were discussing this matter, some loans had been made on a 9-cent cotton price level at a 12-cent loan level. That was a matter of administration. It may be charged to error of judgment, or it may be that we have acted unwisely in placing too high a percentage on the parity price. What I am seeking to find out—and I thought the able Senator from New York might have the information—is what has been the average loan per pound as contrasted with the average price per pound. If the Senator has not the information, well and good.

Mr. GEORGE. I was about to say to the Senator that the only loan which exceeded the market value was the 1934 loan, which loan has been liquidated 100 percent. The second loan was made on a basis of 9½ cents a pound, which was not above the market. The present loan was made on a basis of 8.3 cents per pound, which was not above the market at the time it was made. But, of course, that loan was made under the mandatory provision of the Farm Control Act, which the Congress passed in 1938.

Mr. McNARY. But the Senator will well recall that last year I expressed sentiments of criticism of the provisions carried in the bill which added a cent and a half on the loan privilege over and above the market price; and while that provision was written into the bill, I appreciate what was done. I am willing to take my proportion of the blame, although I opposed the action; but that is the law. What I am trying to obtain now, without any defense being made of the act, is some information which ought to be available, and I excuse the Senator from New York and the Senator from Georgia, and shall obtain the information from the Department.

Mr. GEORGE. I myself am not able, and I presume the Senator from New York would hardly be able, to give the figures as to the average loan made upon the cotton during the several years, or marketing seasons, because the loans varied from year to year, and the quantity of cotton actually loaned upon or advanced upon likewise varied from year to year. What I was trying to point out was that the only loan made on cotton above the market has been fully liquidated, and that the present loan was made under the mandatory provisions of the Farm Act which we passed.

Mr. WAGNER. I have the figures as to the average price paid, and since the Senator has inquired about it, I should like to read the figures into the RECORD. By the way, they include also the accruals of interest and the storage charges to date, which raise the sum somewhat.

In 1934 and 1935 it was 15 cents, plus.

Mr. KING. The loan was on a basis of 15 cents?

Mr. WAGNER. The loan price, and that includes accrued interest, plus storage charges to date, figured on the pound basis. In 1937 and 1938 it was 9 cents plus. In 1938 and 1939 it is 9 cents plus. Those are the average loan prices, about which the Senator asked, but they include storage charges and accrued interest.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator does not mean that was the average price for cotton. It was the average loan per pound.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; the average loan per pound.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, as incidental factors in all charges, storage and insurance must be taken into account, and sometimes depreciation.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I think that if the Senator follows that through he will find in each of those instances the price level was considerably under the loan level.

Mr. WAGNER. As I recall, Mr. Jones testified before the committee that there was only one case prior to 1938 in which the loan price exceeded the market price of the cotton.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In connection with this discussion, I do not recall that last year during the consideration of the agricultural bill there was any suggestion that a 12-cent per pound loan be made in 1938. There had been a previous loan of 12 cents, to which the Senator from Georgia has referred, which has been liquidated.

I recall that last year a number of Senators from the cotton States approached the Secretary of Agriculture and the President urging a 10-cent commitment on cotton, but that was not allowed. The Department would not go above 9 cents, which, as I understood, was to include the charges referred to by the Senator from New York. So that the average net loan on the cotton itself, I think, was thereby reduced to about 8.3 cents per pound, which was, as the Senator from Georgia has said, not above the price at the time the loan was made. It may be above the price cotton sold at later, but there was no loan above the price at the time the loan was made, as I understand it, with one exception, in which case the loan has been liquidated.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not true that in March a year ago it was found that the Commodity Credit Corporation had a deficit of $92,000,000 on the inventory of the stuff they then owned?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. And that since then the Treasury has had to pay them the sum of $92,000,000 in order to make good the impairment of their capital through their loans?

Mr. WAGNER. That was also done as a result of an act we passed last year.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not also true that today there is an additional deficit of $20,000,000 by reason of these loans?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. Which the Treasury will be obligated to make up under the law to which the Senator referred?

Mr. WAGNER. That is true.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator know whether that loss occurs from the loans on cotton particularly?

Mr. WAGNER. Almost exclusively, I am told.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator know how many bales of cotton the Government in effect owns by reason of the loans?

Mr. WAGNER. Eleven million bales, I understand.

Mr. TAFT. Eleven million bales?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. The Senator does not mean that the Government "owns" them.

Mr. TAFT. I said "in effect owns," because that is the situation.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator may use his own language. As a matter of fact, they are not owned by the Government.

The title is not in the Government and never will be unless there is a subsequent foreclosure on the loans.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator, it is obvious that a measure was passed, probably under the whip and spur of various organizations, which compelled the making of loans in excess of what was prudent and just, and which has resulted in a large deficit, and probably will increase the deficit. The Senator has said we ought to address ourselves perhaps to the modification of that law. Why should we not pretermit a discussion of this matter; why should we not postpone discussion until we amend the present law? So far as I am concerned, I shall not vote for this bill to increase the authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation when no limits whatever are placed upon the obligations which the Government assumes, and which will undoubtedly compel loans to be made which will result in further deficits than we have, all of which will have to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WAGNER. That question should come up when we consider legislation dealing with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. There are Senators who will probably defend the provisions of that measure. I wish to say that I did not participate in the discussion concerning that legislation last year. I did not feel well enough informed to participate in it. But the Senate and the House were persuaded, and decided by an overwhelming vote, that the loans in question ought to be made to protect the cotton and other agricultural producers.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I will yield when I have completed my statement. Congress last year undoubtedly decided that the loss, even if there should be a loss upon these loans, would be very much less if the loans were made than the economic loss to the country at large from throwing a huge crop surplus upon the market. I may say that my own State of New York has not been substantially benefited directly by the activities of the Commodity Credit Corporation. But in matters of this kind I never have, and never will, assume a provincial attitude. The economic welfare of large groups of the population is of national concern and justifies action by the National Government in the general interest. I think, therefore, the Commodity Credit Corporation acted wisely. If any other attitude had been taken, I think we would have been presented with a critical economic situation, challenging both the Senate and the House for solution.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator now yield for what will be partly an inquiry and partly a statement?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. As a humble member of the committee of which the Senator from New York is chairman, the Committee on Banking and Currency, I concurred somewhat reluctantly in the favorable reporting of this bill.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator is a very well-informed member of the committee, I will say.

Mr. ADAMS. I thank the Senator. I concurred reluctantly in the favorable reporting of this bill. I wish to point out that I cannot concur in the statement that the law makes necessary or mandatory the making of loans in excess of the funds provided by Congress. It is true the law does direct the making of loans, but necessarily, in my judgment, the limit upon the making of the loans is fixed by Congress. Congress provided that the Commodity Credit Corporation should have a borrowing capacity of $500,000,000 and gave them a capital stock of $100,000,000, so that they had $600,000,000 which they could loan. To me that meant that a limit was set. The loans are made mandatory, but within the financial capacity of the organization. I was willing to have the limit raised, because I do not believe that loans are mandatory beyond the financial capacity of the organization. So I do not want to allow the statement to stand without any protest that loans are mandatory regardless of the capital, regardless of the lending capacity of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. WAGNER. I know exactly the attitude of the Senator, because he expressed it with great clarity before the committee. Mr. Jones defended his position on the ground that this critical situation was confronting the Commodity Credit Corporation; that Congress was not in session, so that no authorization could then be sought to increase the $500,000,000 to the sum needed; and that since the mandatory provision directed the making of these loans, and he felt the R. F. C. had legal authority to make the commitment which it did make, he met the crisis in that way. He contends—and I think there can be no disputing his position—that the R. F. C. violated no law in making the commitment which it did make.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, my understanding of Mr. Jones' interpretation of the situation is that there was no excess loan made. Mr. Jones says that what the R. F. C. did was not to make loans but to buy the paper held by the Commodity Credit Corporation, and bought it from the Commodity Credit Corporation without any endorsement or guaranty from the Commodity Credit Corporation. In other words, if any criticism is to be made it should be based upon the R. F. C.'s purchase of what might be called commercial paper secured by cotton loans. But I think they recognized the limit placed upon the Commodity Credit Corporation of $500,000,000, plus its capital stock, and that they did not go beyond that in the making of actual loans. They evaded it by a legal process within the powers of the R. F. C.

Mr. WAGNER. As a matter of fact, there was no actual disbursement made by the R. F. C. in connection with its commitment. The R. F. C. simply obligated itself to purchase the notes if they were actually presented for payment, but as a matter of fact there was no actual disbursement made; the Commodity Credit Corporation itself has only disbursed $360,000,000 of the $600,000,000 available to it.

Mr. ADAMS. I think if criticism is made of the R. F. C., it should be based on an item which does not appear on the statement, that they did commit themselves, according to the testimony before the committee, to make certain loans or certain purchases which were not actually made. They have some $300,000,000 of commitments which do not appear on the statement, which they could not carry out unless they were able to market with the R. F. C. loans which they hold, or unless the loans were paid.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator from Minnesota was asking for recognition first.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me so that I may ask a question?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I confess that I am greatly shocked to learn that any organization of the Government would pay out money when no appropriation had been made. This organization apparently had a limitation placed upon its capital, and it seems to me that if it had expended money beyond that limit—

Mr. WAGNER. It did not pay any money that it was not authorized to pay.

Mr. KING. My understanding is that there is a deficit here, as indicated, of $92,000,000, and then another deficit of $20,000,000, which someone will have to pay.

Mr. WAGNER. The deficit occurred because there was a loss upon the loans made on cotton, and those loans were made by authority of law, and by the direction of Congress. They are unrealized losses, I may say, estimated on the basis of the market price of the cotton today. It may well be that at sometime in the future there may not be an actual loss at all, but there was no violation of the law in connection therewith. That was all done in accordance with law.

Mr. KING. I understood the Senator to say that if we had any quarrel it ought to be with the law because there was a law which made it mandatory to purchase cotton and other commodities.

Mr. WAGNER. Not to purchase, but to make loans with certain commodities as collateral.

Mr. KING. Well, to make loans. And if there is no provision made for the loans, obviously that authority was nugatory. The law carried no obligation to make the loans when there was no provision made for them.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator has misunderstood.

Mr. KING. I hope I have misunderstood.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator rarely ever does misunderstand anything. But this loan was not made in violation of any law. To the contrary, it was made by direction of law. The loss arises when you estimate the difference between the price of cotton on the market today and the loan price per pound. If the Commodity Credit Corporation were required to go upon the market and sell the cotton today it would suffer a loss. But they are not required to go upon the market and sell it today, and so the loss is only an estimated loss, an unrealized loss. If cotton goes up sufficiently it may not be an actual loss at all. But nobody contends, I am sure, that there was any violation of law at all in the making of that loan. On the contrary, it was made in accordance with law.

Mr. KING. I was addressing myself to the proposition made by the Senator a few moments ago as I understood it, namely, that a law was passed which required the purchase of certain commodities. If the Congress made no provision for the furnishing of money for those loans, obviously those who were authorized to make the loans had no business to make them when there was no money available. If they made loans and incurred obligations, then it seems to me they violated the law. I propose to offer an amendment to this bill providing that no loans shall be made in excess of the capital which is provided now or has been in the past for the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I see a provision in the bill that certain funds may be used to make loans or with which to purchase preferred stock. Would that be preferred stock in the Import-Export Bank?

Mr. WAGNER. What provision is the Senator referring to?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. On page 2, beginning in line 6, it says:

The Treasury, with the approval of the President, may continue to supply from time to time through loans or by subscription to preferred stock.

Mr. WAGNER. That has to do with the Export-Import Bank, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is preferred stock in the Export-Import Bank?

Mr. WAGNER. The R. F. C. now owns $45,000,000 of preferred stock of the Export-Import Bank. That is not the proposition we are discussing now.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What I want to know is, What stock will be purchased by the Commodity Credit Corporation by reason of the increased funds asked for?

Mr. WAGNER. The preferred stock of the Export-Import Bank will be purchased by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, not by the Commodity Credit Corporation. This matter has no relation at all to the Commodity Credit Corporation. The provision referred to by the Senator from Minnesota relates to the Export-Import Bank.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Could the increased funds be used to make more loans or to increase the amount of loans? What is the purpose?

Mr. WAGNER. Of what? Of the preferred stock?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No; of the increased capital, the increased amount of debentures they may issue.

Mr. WAGNER. The purpose is to enable the bank to make more loans. The other provision of the bill relates to the Export-Import Bank. We are now providing that their loans may not exceed $100,000,000 under the law; but they must have the capital with which to do business.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. The way they secure the capital is by selling their preferred stock to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. And the purpose is not to meet any losses?

Mr. WAGNER. No. As a matter of fact, the Export-Import Bank is so far a profitable enterprise.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. VANDENBERG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, returning to the point raised a moment ago by the Senator from Utah, what has happened is that the value of the securities upon which the loans were made has declined, so that if the securities were liquidated by sale there would be a loss; but at present it is only a paper loss. The fund operates as a sort of revolving fund. Of course, it is assumed that loans will be made, and collected. A bank may have $1,000,000 in deposits, and during the year it may make loans of five times that amount, because the fund operates as a revolving fund.

The bank lends and collects back, and makes more loans. That is what may happen under the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank. The increase in capital stock is for the purpose of attempting to furnish credit by which we may facilitate the exportation of the surplus products of American producers, and try to recapture some of the trade which, without credit, we may lose, some of which we have already lost.

So long as private lending agencies are not in a position to make loans, or for any reason do not make loans to facilitate and finance the exportation of American products, it is desirable that that credit be provided. If it had not been for the lack of credit from a financial standpoint in private institutions, there never would have been any reason for the creation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, or any of the other lending agencies which were created and have operated under the jurisdiction of the Government.

Mr. WAGNER. I may say to the Senator from Kentucky that the Senator from Utah had in mind only the operation of the Commodity Credit Corporation, not the Export-Import Bank.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The same principle applies.

Mr. WAGNER. The same principle applies, except that there have been no losses either realized or unrealized in connection with the Export-Import Bank.

Mr. BARKLEY. In addition to the mandatory provisions with respect to loans, in connection with the operations of the Export-Import Bank, I happen to know, in regard to tobacco, that the Export-Import Bank has been not only very helpful, but it has been a lifesaver in facilitating the exportation of surplus and unsalable quantities of tobacco, which could not have been financed without the operation of the Export-Import Bank. The producers have been able to sell large quantities of tobacco which had been held over the market for years, largely for the benefit of tobacco co-operative organizations in the production and sale of tobacco. I happen to know that without the Export-Import Bank it would have been practically impossible to finance the sale of large quantities of surplus tobacco which were wanted in foreign countries, but the sale of which nobody else could facilitate or finance.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator is correct in his interpretation that certain loans are mandatory, and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] is incorrect, what happens if the mandatory necessities—

Mr. WAGNER. May I interrupt? I do not think the Senator from Colorado took the position that the Agricultural Adjustment Act did not have in it a mandatory provision to make loans on certain commodities.

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; but that the loans were limited by the other act of Congress.

Mr. WAGNER. That the loans were limited by the authorization to issue notes and debentures of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What I want to know is, if the Senator from New York is correct, what will happen this year if the mandatory requirement passes $900,000,000? Where will the money be obtained?

Mr. WAGNER. Loans will be made by the Commodity Credit Corporation up to $900,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What will be done if there is an additional necessity?

Mr. WAGNER. I am not a clairvoyant. I cannot anticipate every kind of crisis which may confront the different agencies of the Government. Let me say to the Senator that there may be some conflict between the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which says, "You must make these loans," and the authority given to the Commodity Credit Corporation to issue debentures or other obligations with Government guaranty. I am not so sure that the loans are limited. Rather, only the Corporation's right to issue its own obligations is limited. The funds for the loans may come from the issue of its obligations, but there is no provision which says that the loans are limited to the amount which may be secured by issuing debentures or other obligations.

The Commodity Credit Corporation was confronted with a crisis. It was unable to issue any further debentures, and therefore had no money with which to carry out the mandate of Congress contained in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. Therefore, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which has the right to make such commitments, carried out that mandate.

If the situation was dealt with unwisely there is nothing we can do about it now. I think the action was wise. I should not have wanted to take the responsibility of compelling the producers of cotton, corn, and wheat to throw their products upon the market and bring ruin to large sections of the country. That was the situation which confronted these agencies of the Government.

It is easy enough for us to talk now; but under the circumstances I think they did the wise thing. As between inviting a terrific crisis and using an indirect but entirely legal method of making the loans, I say they did the wise thing.

That is the only explanation I can make to the Senator, and he may make the most of it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I have not asked the Senator for an explanation of what happened, and I have not asked him to enter the realm of clairvoyancy, unless all such appropriations are clairvoyant in that they do not mean what they say. What I am inquiring is, Does the $900,000,000 limitation mean what it says?

Mr. WAGNER. It does.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Or are we again confronting the possibility of something else?

Mr. WAGNER. It means exactly what it says. It means that beyond $900,000,000 the Commodity Credit Corporation may not issue its debentures or other obligations for the purpose of securing funds.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The last time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation came to the aid of the Commodity Credit Corporation—

Mr. WAGNER. Came to the aid of the producers.

Mr. TAFT. Came to the aid of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. WAGNER. Came to the aid of the producers. Do not misstate the facts. It came to the aid of the producers who needed the loan. That is what happened.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not true that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation entered into a contract with the Commodity Credit Corporation to buy from it $150,000,000 of its loans if it became necessary?

Mr. WAGNER. One hundred and forty-seven million dollars.

Mr. TAFT. Because of the excess over the $600,000,000.

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct; the amount is $147,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. If the Commodity Credit Corporation finds that it wishes to exceed the limit of $900,000,000 which we are now fixing, it may again go to the R. F. C., and, so far as I can see, there is no reason why the R. F. C. will not again make a loan to it. So, from my point of view, one reason for voting for the limitation is that it does not mean anything anyway, so long as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can lend all the money it chooses on this kind of loans. Therefore it makes no difference whether the limitation is $500,000,000, $900,000,000, or a couple of billion dollars, so far as I can see.

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator wishes to amend the act so that the Commodity Credit Corporation may no longer make loans to agricultural producers, he has the privilege of offering that amendment. If that is his view, he has a perfect right to incorporate or to attempt to incorporate that provision in the law by offering an amendment to this particular legislation.

Mr. TAFT. I was not even suggesting that. I was discussing the question whether or not the limitation of $900,000,000 means anything. So long as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has unlimited power to lend, such a limitation would not mean anything. That is the point I am trying to make, and I think the Senator admits it.

Mr. WAGNER. I will speak for myself.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. It does make a difference whether or not the borrowing authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation is increased from $500,000,000 to $900,000,000. It is true the Commodity Credit Corporation Act does not contain any limitation on the right of the Corporation to make loans, but it does contain a limitation on the amount of money it may borrow on the credit of the United States. On the R. F. C. there is at present no such limitation. Why take two bites at one cherry? If we are going to continue to make these loans, why not give the Commodity Credit Corporation the right to pledge the credit of the United States and borrow the money, instead of going through the back door and obtaining it from the R. F. C.? It is a money-saving proposition to increase the borrowing authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation, unless it is desired to make two operations of one.

Mr. TAFT. In the main, I am in favor of it, and voted for it in the committee. I am merely saying it does not mean anything, for the power is already there.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have not yielded to the Senator from Ohio. I yielded to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. TAFT. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, increasing the authority does mean a saving of money, because the borrowing is then made direct instead of through the R. F. C.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, frankly, I prefer to have the Commodity Credit Corporation limited, so far as practicable, to the amount which it is authorized to obtain by the sale of notes, debentures, or other obligations. But we cannot anticipate every kind of crisis that may occur; we have to consider human beings in certain situations and the possible distress of our citizens.

I think I have said about all I care to say regarding the provisions of the bill relating to the Commodity Credit Corporation and will now discuss the other feature of the measure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I confess that I am somewhat confused as to the meaning and implications of the measure before us. As I understand, loans have been obtained through the R. F. C. Would it not be a satisfactory arrangement to provide that no loans shall be sold to or purchased by any other governmental agency? I do not think that the R. F. C. should buy the paper and loans of this organization. Let this organization stand on its own foundation.

Mr. WAGNER. The R. F. C. is a very important instrumentality of our Government. I think all Senators on both sides of the Chamber concede that it has so admirably discharged its functions that nobody would want to interfere with its present borrowing or lending power. The suggestion made by the Senator from Utah, if adopted, might so limit the power of the R. F. C. that the very important and salutary functions which it is now exercising might be destroyed. I should not want to take that responsibility.

Mr. President, the other provision of the bill extends the life of the Export-Import Bank, the purpose of which is to help the businessmen of our country, in a very small degree, to sell their products abroad by aiding them in the financing of such transactions. It is important to businessmen, though not a major factor. Last year, as I recall, the value of all our exports was somewhat in excess of $3,000,000,000. This bank is permitted under this law to extend credit only up to $100,000,000, and I think only about $50,000,000 of that sum has already been lent or committed. It therefore becomes apparent that the bank is not a very large element in our foreign trade.

The bank was created in 1934 by an Executive order. It was created primarily to foster trade with Russia after Russia was recognized by the United States. It was anticipated that with the aid of the Export-Import Bank we would be able to secure a great deal of business in the Russian market. However, that was not forthcoming at that time.

In order to clear up any misunderstanding which may exist, let me say that there were at one time two export-import banks. The second one was organized primarily to assist in the transactions in which silver was minted for the Cuban Government. The only operation performed by the United States was the rendering of the service of minting the silver. All but one of those transactions have been concluded; the equivalent of the silver delivered to Cuba and paid for as delivered. The Second Export-Import Bank has been liquidated and is no longer in existence.

The other bank, the Export-Import Bank, has about $25,000,000 in loans outstanding, and has commitments to lend about $26,000,000 more, the two together making, approximately, $50,000,000. Of course, the commitments may not be taken up. In many instances after the Export-Import Bank had agreed to aid in the financing of a particular transaction the businessman or businessmen involved secured credit from other sources and the Export-Import Bank was not called upon to aid.

The simplest way to explain the operation of the Export-Import Bank is to cite a typical transaction in detail.

An American manufacturer approaches the bank, asking it to agree to furnish him the credit necessary to enable him to sell to a foreign purchaser. If the bank makes the commitment, and if the sale goes through—and only about one-half of the sales on which the bank makes commitments are consummated—the manufacturer delivers the commodities to the foreign purchaser and transmits the invoice to a bank in the foreign country, usually through a New York bank. The foreign bank guarantees the obligation of the foreign purchaser, and the American manufacturer takes the guaranteed note to the Export-Import Bank. If the amount involved is small, the bank will lend the amount, holding the American manufacturer responsible for the payment. In such a case the bank has the obligation of the foreign purchaser, the guaranty of the foreign bank, and the endorsement, with recourse, of the American manufacturer to protect it.

In some of the larger transactions the bank will take a "participation" in the transaction; that is, it will accept the endorsement of the American manufacturer for a portion of the amount of the invoice "without recourse," relieving the American manufacturer of any liability as to that portion. Ordinarily the bank's participation in such transactions is about 50 percent.

The bank has been singularly successful. Although it has lent $61,500,000 since its creation, it has suffered no loss on any of the loans to date, and only two are in arrears—a $700,000 loan on tobacco sold to the Spanish tobacco monopoly, of which all but $37,000 has been repaid, and payments on an $800,000 loan on railway equipment sold to Mexico, of which $417,000 has been repaid, and on which further payments are only 1 month in arrears. All other loans were paid on time or are currently up to date.

The bank has earned sufficient to make up dividends on its preferred stock which had accrued in the 18 months after its creation when it did not operate, as well as to meet current dividends and operating expenses.

I think it is very important to continue the operations of this instrumentality if the Government is to give even a small portion of aid to our exporters in winning foreign markets.

We are particularly concerned with the trade in Latin-American countries. Due to superior credit terms and subsidies given by other countries, we are now in a very serious situation in the South American market. The Foreign Minister of Brazil is now in Washington. He stated the other day that Brazil was very friendly to the United States and would prefer to buy American commodities, but that if Brazilian businessmen received better terms in the purchase of commodities from other countries, we were bound to lose that market. We are in competition particularly with Germany. That is shown by a statement of applications made to the Export-Import Bank for credits which were canceled because the orders went to other countries.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator a moment ago made mention of the fact that a representative of the Brazilian Government is in Washington at the present time.

Mr. WAGNER. I said that he made a statement in the press yesterday with reference to the credits given to the businessmen of his country by other countries, which embody better terms than those offered by American exporters; and that therefore there is danger of our losing our very desirable foreign trade in his and other South American countries.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In reference to that matter, I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the United States has loaned to the countries of South America more money than any other country has loaned?

Mr. WAGNER. I am not now speaking of loans to governments. I am speaking of transactions with individuals in another country by individuals in this country, similar to several cases which I am about to discuss.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that American investors or capitalists have rendered more financial aid to the republics to the south of us—that is to say, in Central America, South America, and the West Indies—than has been rendered by the investors or capitalists of any other country in the world, with the exception of the amount of money advanced by private capital in Great Britain to the nationals of the Argentine.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator is now speaking of the 1920's, not of today?

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; I am speaking of the past 10 years.

Mr. WAGNER. I am not able to answer that question accurately. In the 1920's we certainly did.

Mr. REYNOLDS. We did.

Mr. WAGNER. And I hope that experience never will be repeated.

There is not any such danger here. In the first place, we are dealing, not with the purchase of the securities of foreign governments, but with Mr. A. of the United States, selling some cotton, locomotives, or something else, to Mr. B. of Brazil. The Export-Import Bank merely aids our manufacturers in financing transactions of that kind.

Mr. REYNOLDS. But is it not true that in connection with loans to be made by American capitalists to the respective countries of South America, where we are strenuously endeavoring to cope with problems which have been made there by our competitors, Germany and Italy, we should take into consideration the financial condition of the particular countries, and ascertain whether or not any bonds of those countries remain unpaid in this country as to interest or principal?

Mr. WAGNER. I thought the Senator had misunderstood me. I am not talking about the securities of foreign governments at all. I am talking about mere business transactions.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. WAGNER. If we are interested in these foreign markets, we must do one thing or another. Either we are going to secure the foreign markets or we are not. If we want to win these markets in other countries, we shall have to compete with other nations, and our terms, so long as they are safe, must be such that they will meet those of other nations. The Export-Import Bank, so far, has made no loans which, in my judgment, have not been sound. All but two of them have been repaid or are currently up to date in payments.

If we are to invade these foreign markets and win them, as we all want to do, we shall have to compete with the other countries and try to meet their terms. That is what I am asking. I am not talking about the Government of Brazil or any other government floating bonds or other securities in this country, to be purchased by our citizens. That is an entirely different subject; and as to that the Senator and I are not in disagreement.

I desire to give some instances in which we have lost trade to other countries.

Here is an application by the American Locomotive Sales Corporation. The country is Brazil. The commodity is locomotives. The commitment was $103,000, and the business went to Germany.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator from New York state what proportion of the total commitments and loans outstanding today are to foreign governments, or to companies entirely owned, 100-percent owned, by foreign governments?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know. There has been some question as to whether the Chinese loan is in that category. Incidentally, the Senator from Ohio knows about that loan. He is thoroughly informed upon all of these subjects, and he knows the answers to most of the questions he asks. I want to pay him that compliment.

Mr. TAFT. If the Senator will yield, then I shall be glad to make the statement.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Ohio may do so in his own time. As a matter of fact, I was just coming to that subject. The Senator probably has in mind the transaction in China or the one in Mexico.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not true that of a total of $50,000,000 of loans and commitments outstanding today, one-half, or $25,000,000, is a commitment to the Government of China?

Mr. WAGNER. It is a commitment, not a loan.

Mr. TAFT. A commitment?

Mr. WAGNER. There is an American corporation which it is said is controlled by the Chinese Government—I am not in a position to say whether it is or not—which makes purchases in this country, as I understand. If I am inaccurate in what I say, the Senator from Ohio will correct me. Then the purchase price of the particular commodity is guaranteed by a Chinese bank, 50 percent of the stock of which, I understand, is owned by private citizens in China, and 50 percent by the Chinese Government. So I think, strictly speaking, the Senator cannot say that that is altogether a commitment to the Chinese Government.

So far as that loan is concerned, however, no product at all has been sold under the commitment; and as a request comes for the purchase of a particular commodity, the Export-Import Bank will then pass upon the question whether the credit ought to be extended in that particular instance.

Mr. TAFT. Of the balance, about $6,000,000 is loaned to the Government of Haiti; is it not?

Mr. WAGNER. Perhaps that is so. I am not clear as to whether that is the amount loaned to the Government of Haiti. I have not the record of that transaction.

Mr. TAFT. The loan was made for internal improvements.

Mr. WAGNER. But, as a matter of fact, what happened was that an American manufacturer sold commodities there, and the amount due is for those commodities. There is no doubt it will be paid. Haiti is not in default on any of its debts, if the purchase was made by the Government of Haiti.

Mr. TAFT. Was there not a time when we had to send marines to Haiti and take over the customs in order to make them pay their debts?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; there was such a time, but that time is gone.

Mr. TAFT. Has the Senator any assurance that we shall not have to do it again if we want to get back the $6,000,000?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. What is that assurance?

Mr. WAGNER. Because we have adopted the "good neighbor" policy, and we no longer police these countries. They are independent and run their own governments.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator means, does he not, that we do not collect our debts from them?

Mr. WAGNER. No; Haiti is not in default on any of its debts. I do not want to discuss that question, because the American people approve the "good neighbor" doctrine. They do not approve the practice of sending our marines to a foreign country to collect the debt of some individual.

Mr. TAFT. Neither do I.

Mr. WAGNER. I will say to the Senator that that took place under another administration, but that time has gone.

Mr. TAFT. Without marines, however, have we any assurance that we shall ever collect this $6,000,000 from Haiti?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course we have.

Mr. TAFT. What is that assurance?

Mr. WAGNER. Because Haiti is an honorable country, and it will meet its obligation, if the loan was to the Government. I am not sure the Senator is correct that it was the Government of Haiti which took the loan.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. I dislike to get into this controversy, but I disagree with my distinguished friend from Ohio. I am familiar with the situation in Haiti. It is true that we sent marines there during the World War. We ought not to have done so. My party, the Democratic Party, in my opinion was responsible for a very great error in sending marines there, but we did not send them there for the purpose of collecting debts. Haiti did not owe us anything. The view was entertained by some of our military commanders that Germany would use the northern ports of Haiti as submarine bases, and there was some controversy down there. A revolution occurred and the president was killed. We sent marines there for fear France or Germany might interfere in the governmental activities of Haiti, but Haiti did not owe us. She owed France at that time a considerable debt, upon which she had always paid the interest.

Haiti today, in my opinion, is solvent, and we need have no fear regarding repayment of a loan to her, although I am not in favor of our Government's loaning money to any other government, or to any person, for that matter, except under some domestic conditions here which might warrant it. But so far as Haiti is concerned, she will meet her obligations, and we did not send marines there to collect a debt.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Let me say to the Senator that I do not desire to get into a discussion of the responsibility of this government or that. I have inquired about the Haiti loan; it is paid right up to date. Some of our manufacturers sold some commodities in Haiti which went into the building of roads and other public improvements. As to whether marines will go there at some time in the future, I do not think that is pertinent to the pending matter, and I want to try to stick to my subject.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Are there any other loans to foreign governments, or to corporations wholly owned by foreign governments?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not recall one. The Senator may have one in mind.

Mr. TAFT. Is there not a loan to the Mexican Railway, a corporation owned entirely by the Government of Mexico?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; but I understood that the bank which guaranteed the loan was not owned entirely by the Mexican Government. But if the Senator is sure about it, I will take his word for it.

Mr. TAFT. Is there a loan to the Government Bank of Poland, owned by the Polish Government?

Mr. WAGNER. No. We sold to some spinners over there a considerable amount of cotton, payment for which has been guaranteed by the Bank of Poland. I understand that obligation is being paid right up to date.

Mr. TAFT. Are there any loans to governments to whom loans cannot be made under the Johnson Act?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no; there has been no violation of either the Neutrality Act or the Johnson Act.

Let me continue now with the information about some of the trade we lost because we could not meet the terms of our competitors in the South American market. I am glad the Senator from South Carolina, the expert on cotton, is now in the Chamber.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator at this time, because I have to leave the Chamber in a moment. Since the question of the Johnson Act has been brought up, does not the Senator think we have gotten ourselves into the condition we are in from an export standpoint largely by virtue of that very act?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator is an expert upon these questions, and I am not, so I should like to have the Senator make his own statement, because no one knows more about that subject than he does.

Mr. SMITH. The only statement that is necessary to be made is that under the Johnson Act our Government cannot lend any money to a government that is in debt to us, and all of them are in debt to us. That is the situation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Not in debt to us—in default on their debts to us.

Mr. SMITH. Oh—

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is a little different.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator may use such terminology as he sees fit to employ, but every farmer feeds his stock three times a day. Now we have the reverse of that proposition, we will not lend anyone any money with which to buy our goods and pay us for them. We have just sense enough to be the fools we are. [Laughter.]

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I wish to conclude, and I should like to read these other cases of commitments made by the Export-Import Bank where the American manufacturer failed to get the business.

The United States Pipe & Foundry Co., of Burlington, N. J. Country, Mexico. Commodity, pipe. Commitment, $125,000. Business placed outside of the United States.

Pullman-Standard Car Export Co., of New York. Country, Brazil. Commodity, freight cars. Commitment, $540,000. The business went to Belgium because we could not meet their terms.

Harley-Davidson Motor Co., of Milwaukee, Wis. Country, Turkey. Commodity, motorcycles. Commitment, $100,000. Business placed outside of the United States.

Caterpillar Tractor Co., Peoria, Ill. Country, Turkey. Commodity, tractors. Commitment, $452,000. Business placed in Czechoslovakia because we could not meet the terms.

These large business interests in this country very much favor the Export-Import Bank. Their only complaint is that there is too great a limitation upon it.

The J. G. Brill Co., Philadelphia, Pa. Country, Argentina. Commodity, railroad equipment. Commitment, $450,000. Business placed outside of the United States after the application was made and an effort made to get the business.

Pullman-Standard Car Export Co., of New York. Country, Brazil. Commodity, railway cars. Commitment, $1,761,000. Business went to Germany.

The Willamette-Hyster Co., Portland, Oreg. Country, Turkey. Commodity, standard winches. Commitment, $15,700. Business went to Germany.

Gillespie & Co., of New York. Country, Brazil. Commodity, industrial products. Commitment, $600,000. Business placed outside of the United States.

Caterpillar Tractor Co. Country, Turkey. Commodity, industrial products. Commitment, $1,000,000. The business went to Czechoslovakia.

I am just giving these as instances in which we were not able to compete with these other countries in the extension of credit. There was no question about the merit of our commodities at all.

We merely desire to continue the life of the bank. As a matter of precaution, just as the House of Representatives has done, we are limiting its operation to not more than $100,000,000.

I do not know of anything else I need to say upon the two bills.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. There were furnished us at the hearing of the Banking and Currency Committee three sheets containing the financial story of the Commodity Credit Corporation, one a balance sheet, one a statement of commitments and the amounts involved, and the third the actual disbursements. I suggest that they be put into the RECORD.

Mr. WAGNER. I ask that these statements be included in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOTE: Pursuant to the act of Mar. 8, 1938 (Public. No. 442, 75th Cong.), $94,285,404.73, the amount necessary to restore the capital impairment, based on a valuation of the assets as of March 31, 1938, was appropriated. Of this amount, $19,996,244.68 is treated in this balance sheet as a capital item to offset the operating deficit, which includes losses on loans liquidated. The balance of $74,289,160.05 is carried as a reserve for losses in liquidating the outstanding loans.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Commodity Credit Corporation, since its organization, pursuant to Executive Order No. 6340, dated October 16, 1933, has made loans on agricultural commodities in connection with programs of the Department of Agriculture. Such loans are functioned through the facilities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under an agreement providing for reimbursement of expenses incident to the loans. Prior to May 2, 1938, Commodity Credit Corporation borrowed funds required in addition to its capital from Reconstruction Finance Corporation and through issue of collateral trust notes, on the security of the commodity loans. Since that date necessary funds have been borrowed through issuance of notes guaranteed by the United States, such notes being issued pursuant to the act of March 8, 1938 (Public. No. 442, 75th Cong.). From the date of organization through February 1, 1939, loans disbursed by Commodity Credit Corporation and by lending agencies, under a purchase agreement, have aggregated $1,284,931,553.12. Repayments have aggregated $537,483,350.17, leaving outstanding loans as of February 1, 1939, of $747,448,202.95. A statement of disbursements, repayments, and outstanding loans for each commodity, together with the collateral remaining pledged, is given below:

Commodity	Disbursements ¹	Repayments ²	Outstanding ³	Collateral pledged ³

¹ Disbursements to producers and commitments to banks and other lending agencies.

² Includes a balance of $14,370,462.68 on cotton loans and $1,019,748.01 on corn loans charged off after liquidation of collateral.

³ Includes loans held by banks and other lending institutions which Commodity Credit Corporation has agreed to buy.

Based upon the valuation of assets made by the Secretary of the Treasury as of March 31, 1938, pursuant to the act of March 8, 1938 (Public. No. 442, 75th Cong.), losses on commodity loans aggregated $92,422,740.32. In addition to such losses, administrative expenses totaled $1,862,664.01, making a deficit as of March 31, 1938, of $94,285,404.73, which amount was restored by appropriation authorized by the act of March 8 referred to above.

With the exception of the amounts charged off as shown above, the amount appropriated to restore the capital is not considered in the above statement and is carried as a reserve against outstanding loans.

Does not include loans held by banks and other lending agencies under contract to purchase.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment, on page 2, line 4, after the word "loans," to add the words "or other obligations."

I think it is pretty generally agreed that the complete external opportunity which this Export-Import Bank should be permitted to confront in respect to the extension of credit is $100,000,000. Obviously, without a limitation the bank could be used as an instrumentality in connection with the foreign policy, virtually in the nature of American sanctions. I know how the very distinguished Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Mr. Jones, feels about this matter, and I know that he wants this limitation to be a reality. I think the limitation grows perhaps out of a conference which we had upon the subject. But if it is to be a limitation, it should be a real limitation and should be comprehensive. The word "loans" is not comprehensive. The Export-Import Bank could have other commitments than loans. It could have discounts, it could sell its paper to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and be rid of a loan so far as the loan as such was concerned.

We know from the story we have heard this morning respecting the Commodity Credit Corporation how these matters may be handled to circumvent the limitation.

Mr. WAGNER rose.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not say that invidiously.

Mr. WAGNER. So far as I am concerned, I see no objection to the amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I was sure the Senator would not object.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not think the Senator's apprehension is well founded; nevertheless, if he is concerned at all, I see no objection to including the words he suggests.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 4, after the word "loans," it is proposed to insert the words "or other obligations."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am not objecting to the amendment, but I wish to make an inquiry. The loans there referred to are loans which are supposed to be made by the Export-Import Bank itself, resulting in obligations to it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. It does not mean obligations which may be incurred to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any other body. Is it intended that this amendment shall work both ways, that there shall not be more than a hundred million dollars outstanding in loans to the Export-Import Bank and by the Export-Import Bank at the same time?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The thing is complementary; it works both ways, and it is supposed to work both ways.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, should not that read "loans or other obligations outstanding at any one time in excess of a hundred million dollars"?

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me ask if this situation might arise: A limitation is placed upon the amount of money this bank can have outstanding in loans by it at any one time?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Suppose it might, while that much money is outstanding in the form of loans, have other commitments which it could make in the way of loans provided it collects back part of this $100,000,000 that is outstanding in the way of loans.

In the meantime, in order to be able to carry out such a program, it might make application for the advancement of a certain amount of money by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the two would check each other off. Would they be denied the right to do that, under this amendment?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I would say it has no application to the loans the Export-Import Bank makes externally.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it ought to be made clear that that is what its effect could be.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It could not be anything else, in my judgment.

Mr. BARKLEY. The loans referred to in the bill undoubtedly are loans this bank makes.

Mr. WAGNER. Loans the Export-Import Bank makes; yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. WAGNER. What is the exact language proposed?

Mr. VANDENBERG. After the word "loans" to add the words "for other obligations."

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that after the word "obligations" the words "to it" be added.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well, "obligations to it."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 4, after the word "loans," it is proposed to insert the words "or other obligations to it."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to make a short statement as to why I am in favor of the bill, in spite of some criticism which I think can be made of it. I voted for the bill in the committee.

So far as the Commodity Credit Corporation is concerned, it seems to me to be a very unsound policy to continue the making of loans after loans have already been made on 11,000,000 bales of cotton. I agree with the Senator from New York that that is a question of policy. Congress has adopted the policy, and until Congress changes it, I am willing to go along and provide the capital to make the loans.

So far as the Export-Import Bank is concerned, I feel that the bank has been used more as a means of effectuating purposes of foreign policy than it has for its real purpose of financing American exports abroad, and, if it were not for the limitation of $100,000,000, I certainly would oppose the bill, or at least offer an amendment that no loans should be made to governments; but since the amount that can be loaned is small, and since I see no great danger in pursuing it, I am willing to continue the powers of the Export-Import Bank.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I merely wish to make a brief observation. A question arose earlier in the debate with respect to the loans made upon cotton, as well as perhaps upon other farm products. It will be found that the first cotton loan was 12 cents a pound, which was made on the basis of $\frac{3}{8}$ -inch Middling grade cotton. Subsequent loans were made at a lower figure.

When the Senate had under consideration the Farm Act of 1938 it will be recalled that we debated at some length the provisions which required loans to be made on the basic commodities covered by that act or dealt with by the Farm Control Act. It will be remembered that lending was made mandatory so far as cotton, wheat, and corn were concerned when the market price fell below a certain percentage of parity.

In the case of cotton the present loan rate was fixed at 8.3 cents on Middling $\frac{3}{8}$ -inch cotton. Of course, the loan actually runs as high as 9 cents or slightly above on certain staples, grades, and lengths of cotton; but the basis of the loan is 8.3 cents, which is almost 52 percent of the parity price of cotton. So, the loan was fixed practically as low—not quite, but practically as low—as it could have been fixed under the law.

The question has now arisen whether the Commodity Credit Corporation exceeded its power and authority. It seems to me that a careful reading of the provisions of the Commodity Credit Corporation Act which grant it the power to make loans must lead to the conclusion that it has the power to make them, whether or not it has the money with which to do so.

I merely wanted to make this statement with reference to the Commodity Credit Corporation's transactions in cotton, but the same thing might be said about corn. I think if some of our friends will examine the corn-loan figure they will find that it is slightly above the market price of corn. Perhaps the same thing is true of wheat.

Mr. President, in this connection I wish to call attention to the fact that the loans made upon farm products, cotton, wheat, or corn, must be fixed at a certain time. That is to say, the loan must be made effective on a certain date. In the very nature of things the loan could not follow the market down and up, and nobody ever contemplated such a thing. When once the loan is fixed upon wheat, if thereafter the market should go down, it would manifestly be unfair to the producers of wheat to reduce the loan to the wheat farmers who were not able to deliver their wheat on the market on the very day when the loan was fixed. So, even when in 1934 the cotton-loan figure was fixed at 12 cents a pound, it was very little above the market, but there were, of course, variations in the market price thereafter. But the Government could not make fish of one cotton producer and fowl of another by reducing that cotton loan as the market went up or down during the cotton-marketing season. The same thing may be said of wheat. The same thing can, of course, and should be said of corn.

Mr. President, I think the Commodity Credit Corporation is not subject to any just criticism in making loans which at the present time do exceed in amount the $500,000,000 plus the $100,000,000 capital, because the Congress, in the Farm Act of 1938, morally at least, authorized any loan which would be necessary to protect the wheat growers, the corn growers, and the cotton growers. There is the authorization. The Commodity Credit Corporation was simply faced by a technical limitation, or a substantial limitation, if it is desired to put it that way, upon its own power to issue its own obligations, its notes, its bonds, its debentures, in order to get the money with which to comply with the congressional mandate. Here is the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which was not created under the present administration. It had its origin under the preceding administration, but it has served the country well in a period of great crisis.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has the power to buy notes in the open market. It has the power to buy obligations, mortgages, if it wishes to do so. It has done so. The R. F. C. undoubtedly had the power, as I think, to buy the notes of the Commodity Credit Corporation. If it bought those notes without endorsement, if those notes were transferred to it, or it was agreed that they were to be transferred to it without endorsement, or without guaranty whatever, it seems to me that the Commodity Credit Corporation might well have said, "If this be true, we are still within the limitations on our powers to issue debentures from which to obtain the funds to comply with the mandate of the Congress."

Mr. President, I am not submitting what I am saying, however, as a technical justification for what was done. I desire rather to put it upon higher ground. I think the Senator from New York is quite right in choosing the higher ground. Congress created the obligation. That is, the Congress issued the mandate. The Congress provided for mandatory loans to preserve the great farm products—cotton, corn, and wheat—dealt with in the Farm Act of 1938. The Congress promised the farmers of these staples that if the price of their products fell below 52 percent of parity the loan would be made. The authorization for the loan is in the act. There is technical and moral authorization for the loan in the act. Then when the loan was fixed at 8.3 cents a pound on cotton—as low as it could be fixed practically—and thereafter there was a fluctuation in the price of cotton, and the Commodity Credit Corporation, of course, was called upon to make larger loans on cotton, for instance, than was contemplated probably at the time the loan was authorized, what was the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to do? To what other agency could the Government appeal? What other agency had the power to make good the moral obligation of the Congress, the moral obligation to over 2,000,000 cotton farmers who had restricted their acreage, who had complied with the requirements of the law on the faith of the mandatory loans at least in part provided for in the Farm Control Act of 1938?

So, Mr. President, it seems to me the Reconstruction Finance Corporation might say: "Technically we can buy in the open market, if we please, or from any Federal agency, if we please, its obligations or obligations payable to it. We can buy notes. We can buy loans. We can buy mortgages." And if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation stepped into that breach, the Congress not being in session, it seems to me that under all the circumstances there is not the slightest ground upon which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can be subjected to any just or fair criticism.

I wanted to make that statement because I think the operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation, for that matter, have been of untold benefit to the American farmers.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossing of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 1084 will be indefinitely postponed.

STATEMENT OF SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY ON TAXATION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this morning the Secretary of the Treasury, at his press conference, issued a statement concerning the matter of taxation. I have before me a memorandum of that statement. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed at this point in the Record.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON THE SECRETARY'S PRESS CONFERENCE, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1939

Frank Goodwin, of Central News, asked whether the Secretary could comment on the President's statement on taxes, made just as he was leaving for the Caribbean. The Secretary's reply was substantially as follows:

"We are studying taxes continuously. We have a large staff at work. I am very glad that the President made that statement. Speaking only for myself, the thing that bothers me is that businessmen I see have what I would call a 'what's the use' attitude about going ahead. I feel that that attitude is holding back normal business; that it is preventing businessmen from expanding their businesses and taking normal business risks. I sincerely hope that Congress will take a careful look at the tax law and see whether there are any deterrents that are holding back business and holding back businessmen from making future commitments. Businessmen ought to feel that the administration wants them to go ahead and take risks, and that the administration wants them to make money. Tax legislation should be of a nature that is not a deterrent to businessmen. We want them to make profits. After all, the President's message and his recent statement speak for themselves. I am merely saying how I feel personally. Of course, we must have additional revenue, but, in my opinion, the way to make it is for businessmen to make more money."

Asked whether he had any definite ideas for changes in the tax laws, the Secretary said he didn't want to be more explicit at this time. He added: "If Congress decides it will take a look we shall be glad to put our studies at their disposal. I hope they will."

Asked whether the Treasury had prepared any tax bill, the Secretary said that he personally had not seen any tax legislation for introduction at this session.

THE WORLD DAY OF PRAYER

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, recently the Senate adopted a resolution which provides that the Senate Chaplain shall offer prayer at the beginning of each day the Senate is in session. Under the old rule, prayer had been offered only at the beginning of each legislative day. Several months ago the distinguished senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] and I discussed this matter. As chairman of the Senate Rules Committee, he later submitted a resolution and asked for its adoption. It was agreed to unanimously.

In conference with the senior Senator from West Virginia, we agreed that although not all Members of the Senate might be present to hear the prayers, the regular institution of prayer should be faithfully observed, and that as a people we should continue our belief that God moves in the affairs of men, available for guidance and leadership.

Mr. President, tomorrow is the World Day of Prayer, and it seems appropriate that as we move from the inspiration which has come to us in the birthday celebration of George Washington, the Father of his Country, we should enter into the quiet spirit of the World Day of Prayer; for surely the truest patriotism is the doorway to the world fellowship we seek. Our good will for our fellow men should begin at home, but it need not stay at home. All over the world today, in every land and sounded in every tongue, is the voice of prayer bidding men to cease from bloodshed and strife and turn their thoughts to nobler ways. This is my sincere hope and prayer as I bring this brief message.

Every day brings to my desk a flood of letters bearing the petition for peace. It seems that there is no limit to the number of men, women, and children who cannot rest until they have written of their abhorrence of foreign wars, and their desire that our beloved country shall keep the peace. This is an age of public opinion, and we want more, rather than less of it. I only wish I might have more hours to my day and some extra clerks in my office to help me with the great mass of mail which has kept coming in since the beginning of the Seventy-sixth Congress. I never saw anything to equal it. Yet I am glad that the messages bear the desire for more of good will and peace in the world.

On this, the World Day of Prayer, we should join with all thoughtful, reverent men and women everywhere who cherish these noble aspirations and warm sentiments. Let us continue to protect the eternal values of our public life which had their beginning in the lives of men who believed that religion is the true basis of democracy, and the only hope of lasting peace for our Republic.

The two most important problems now confronting our people are the unemployment of 12,000,000 persons and the position America must take in the realm of foreign affairs. The more critical of the two, and the one basic to both prosperity and peace, is unemployment. In recent years we have continually enacted emergency legislation which has fallen short of permanent value. There must be a program of industrial expansion and increased production. After all, it is the production of goods and services which creates wealth. Compared with the difficulties of war-torn Spain and China, our own troubles should seem comparatively simple. Here we have at our disposal everything necessary to create wealth and achieve a natural abundance. If our Government can subsidize the destruction of our national wealth, surely the procedure can be reversed, and industry and agriculture can be assisted in the maintenance of the abundance necessary to good times and reemployment.

Our people in the past have overcome greater difficulties than those which now confront us. With a true inspiration and a genuine faith in an all-wise Providence, America can again lift up her head and lead the world in flourishing activity.

Mr. President, our first duty in foreign affairs is to follow the teachings of George Washington. Let us not give lip service to the Father of his Country and forget his wise counsels. I believe our first duty as American citizens should be to refrain from taking any attitude which might involve our country in war. Let us keep America strong and at peace with ourselves and with the rest of the world.

Our unsolved problems of unemployment and relief still have first claim on our attention. Although my heart goes out in sympathy to every oppressed and needy group throughout the entire world, my first obligation as an American citizen is to devote myself to the utmost to the task of insuring that peace, good will, and full work opportunities for the unemployed millions of my fellow countrymen shall be established in our own land. I know of no problem in the world today that is so vital to world peace and international security as our own unsolved unemployment problem.

Mr. President, during the past week the splendid American Red Cross sent a shipload of wheat to the starving thousands of war-weary Spain. It had been sold by our Government as a surplus commodity at the nominal price of 1 cent a bushel and was transported free by our merchant marine. This food went not to the Loyalists or to the Insurgents as such, but to the Spanish people, a wonderful people, now needy and hungry. I am proud that our Red Cross and our Government cooperated in this mercy gift. We could do more. We should do more. However, I remind all our citizens of the fact that we were able to send this gift to the needy of Spain because we had a surplus and not because we lacked it. While millions of wretched men and women in the far parts of the world, as well as in our own land, perish for lack of the fundamental necessities of life, it seems nothing less than a direct insult to the Almighty wantonly to destroy the gifts of food and clothing, the grain and the cotton, which have been made possible for us. I believe we shall some day be called to answer for these fundamental breaches of humanity and for these fatal errors.

Mr. President, it is not enough that we say we hate war. It is true that a great majority of the American people do hate war. We must continue to feel that way, and at the same time to do something constructive for the cause of peace.

As one who believes in good will and peace, I have introduced a Senate joint resolution, No. 47, seeking the authorization of the coinage of 1-cent pieces to symbolize peace. If this bill is enacted, it will mean that every cent piece in circulation in our land will be dedicated to peace. If every American penny is dedicated to peace, it ought to spell the difference between peace and war, so far as our country is concerned.

I hope that this joint resolution may become the law of the land. I hope that whenever a penny comes into the hands of our people they will think of it as a peace penny. Every cent in the United States Treasury will then be the agent of good will and peace. This is my sincere hope.

The peace penny will also mean that more pennies will be contributed to the institutions which seek actively to maintain peace in human relations. The school, the church, and the voluntary organizations in every field of American life will receive more because they are all devoted to the cause of peace.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—COMMUNICATION FROM DIRECTOR OF THE BUDGET

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I wish to say for the RECORD that a day or two ago, during the discussion of the independent offices appropriation bill, I stated that the Director of the Budget had failed to reply to a communication from the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee. I am informed that since that time the Director of the Budget has replied to the communication directed to him; and while I have not had an opportunity to read the letter, I understand that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee will offer it for the RECORD. I merely wish to advise the Senate that the Director has responded to the communication and in his letter has stated that his reason for not replying at an earlier date was due to his absence from the city.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT AND AUTHORIZATION FOR REPORT AND SIGNING OF BILLS, ETC.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today it stand in adjournment until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next, and that in the meantime all committees may be permitted to report bills, resolutions, and nominations; that the Vice President may be authorized to sign any bills that may become ready for his signature; and that the Secretary of the Senate may be authorized to receive messages from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, we have a very small executive calendar of diplomatic and postmaster nominations. I ask unanimous consent that, as in executive session, the nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service, and the nominations of postmasters, may now be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma, Mr. FITZPATRICK, Mr. HOUSTON, Mr. STARNES, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. DIRKSEN, and Mr. CASE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

THE UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM AND IMMIGRATION

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, on the evening of February 14, I listened to an outstanding address delivered by our colleague from the State of Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], pertaining to the unemployment situation in our country today and reflecting upon that condition which has existed for a number of years past. The subject of his address was Returning Men to Work. Frankly, I know of no more interesting subject at the present time, for the reason that, as we all know, today in the United States 12,000,000 men and women are out of employment and are seeking employment. After having listened to the address of the Senator from Connecticut on the evening of February 14, the following day I made inquiry of my distinguished colleague as to whether or not he was provided with additional copies in order that I might obtain one. He furnished me a copy. There are several statements in his address which I am desirous of reading to Members of the Senate, because I think those statements are entirely pertinent and important in this period of unemployment in the United States.

I have selected this subject—

That is to say, the subject of returning men to work—because it seems to me that almost all of the troubles of our country, and the world, arise from the fact that millions of men are unemployed.

For a number of years many millions of men in the United States, most of them heads of families, have been without steady employment. Among the masses of unemployed are young men and women, fortified with a splendid education, who have yet to get their first job.

No one can say that we have made progress toward a correction of the distress of unemployment. Take the Government relief program away from the country—abandon the policy which we have practiced—and we are right back where we were in 1932 insofar as unemployment is concerned.

I may add, Mr. President, in reference to this problem, that, from all indications, it does not seem to me that we are going to bring about employment for the unemployed outside of a war, but I wish to say in this connection that I would rather continue to have millions upon millions of unemployed men and women than to have our country become involved in another bloody war.

Distasteful as it sounds and is, existing conditions mean that approximately one-third of our population is without employment, or at least without employment in private industry.

One-third of the people of the United States of America today are without employment, despite the fact that since the spring of 1932 we have expended billions of dollars in an earnest effort to provide employment for the unfortunate men and women who today are walking the streets in search of honest work. Unemployment, therefore, is, indeed, a mammoth problem. As a matter of fact, it is difficult for any of us to make suggestions as to methods and means by which relief for the unemployment situation may be provided. More than one-third of the people of America are out of employment, despite the fact that 3,000,000 of our people are on the relief rolls, and, in addition to those 3,000,000, there are 4,000,000 people in the United States who are working either for the Government of the United States or for the respective State governments of the 48 Commonwealths of the Union or for the political subdivisions of those Commonwealths. That to me is an appalling situation, and it becomes increasingly distressing when we reflect upon the statement of fact that 80 percent of all the unemployed in all the world are to be found within the confines of the United States of America.

With 3,000,000 upon the pay rolls of the Government because of contributions it has made to provide work—3,000,000 unfortunate and God-fearing and deserving men and women on the W. P. A. pay rolls—it is indeed appalling to my mind to find American citizens who are asking that we let down our immigration bars and permit millions from foreign shores to come to the United States in face of the fact that today we have more than 12,000,000 men and women out of employment. For the life of me, Mr. President, I cannot understand how anyone being interested in the 12,000,000 unemployed American men and women can advocate opening wide the gates of immigration in order that people from foreign shores may be permitted to come here and compete with American citizens who are already holding jobs and to vie with the unemployed who are seeking jobs; and, unfortunately for American citizens, it appears, and I think can be proved, that the great majority of those who today are coming to the United States from foreign countries are provided with jobs the minute they arrive here, whereas many Americans who have been out of employment for years cannot get jobs. I wish to state again that I think we should close the immigration gates of this country, certainly for the next 10 years, or until such time as every man and every woman of the 12,000,000 now unemployed has been successful in obtaining a job.

Let us see about this. I am indebted to my colleague from Connecticut for the very fine address delivered by him on the evening of February 14. I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate a newspaper article which appeared in the New York World-Telegram of the issue of Thursday, February 9, 1939. The article to which I refer is on the front page of the aforementioned newspaper. The headlines read as follows:

FOUR THOUSAND WOMEN KEEP VIGIL FOR 12 JOBS—SLEEPLESS NIGHT OVER, THEY REGISTER; GIRL FAINTS IN CRUSH

Upward of 4,000 women answered dramatically today the question: "Would the unemployed and the relief recipients take a job if they could get one?"

From the thousands who filed through the Two Hundred and Forty-fourth Coast Artillery Armory, 12 will be rewarded with the prize all are seeking—a job at $18.47 a week, washing test tubes, cleaning cages of rats and guinea pigs, and scrubbing floors and sticky benches in the laboratories of the New York health department.

At the head of the weary line, which finally began to move at 9 a. m., were several hundred women of all ages whose red-rimmed eyes and rumpled clothing testified that they had spent a sleepless night.

Think of it, Mr. President. Four thousand hungry, undernourished, unfortunate American women in line, seeking jobs paying only $18.47 a week.

GIRL FAINTS

One girl fainted during the morning rush, but there was no disorder.

The municipal civil service commission, which knows better than anyone, perhaps, how eager the jobless are for work, had made fore-sighted arrangements for today's registration.

According to law, it is first come first served for such menial jobs as laboratory assistants. After the registrations, the first 12 women who can pass physical examinations and who can read, write, and speak English will get the jobs. But the list made up today will be kept for 4 years, and from it may be selected a few women to replace those who leave civil-service jobs as scrubwomen.

ARMORY ENGAGED

Having seen several hundred men scramble and riot a few weeks ago when registrations were taken at the municipal building for porters' lists, the commission engaged the armory.

The line outside the armory started forming at 8 a. m. yesterday. The first ones, sitting outside in chairs furnished by the Salvation Army, kept their places until late afternoon.

At 4 p. m. yesterday, when the doors of the armory were opened so that the applicants would not have to wait all night in the cold, there were approximately 100 women present.

THE LINE GROWS

Throughout the night the line grew. There were old women, dressed in little better than rags—

These were American women, Mr. President—and smart youngsters from college.

American college boys and girls, Mr. President.

By midnight 239 had checked in and been assigned places in line.

They were permitted to sit in the balcony of the armory, and there they passed the night, wrapping themselves in their coats, chatting aimlessly, trying vainly to sleep.

And, I add, or perhaps to keep warm.

At daybreak there were 600 women signed in at the armory and 30 more waiting in the line outside.

At 8:15 a. m. the armory was full. There were 1,500 women inside. The early birds got seats on the benches and chairs. The later arrivals stood in numbered lines stretching across the armory floor.

At exactly 9 a. m. the line began to move.

The first woman to sign up was she who had given her name to reporters yesterday as "Mrs. Lily Heffernan." She disclosed that she was in reality Mrs. Frances Culhane, and for reasons of her own she wanted to keep her address to herself.

WOMEN QUESTIONED

Reporters walked up and down the lines, questioning women at random. Some were uncommunicative, others wanted to tell their stories.

A pretty blond, who seemed to be in her early thirties, said she was the former Juanita Clark, once of the Ziegfeld Follies.

"You'll probably find clippings about me at your office," she said. "Now I'm Mrs. Gladys Sonnenberg, of 117 West Ninety-second Street.

"I need the money, and I've looked around everywhere for a job. I've had four jobs offered me recently, but the best one paid only $12 a week, and there was no future in it."

TWO APPLICANTS FROM SOUTH

Two girls, who had come from Atlanta 4 months ago, seeking their fortune in New York, said their savings had run out. They were Ida Rosen, 21 and red-haired, and Ruth Livingston, also 21, a blond.

Several of the younger women said they were college graduates, and there were half a dozen girls from Hunters College, hopeful of being selected for the jobs by the time they graduate.

LOOKING TO THE FUTURE

Think of a situation of that sort. Picture it in your mind, Mr. President. Here are young American girls, college students, some of whose parents no doubt are making sacrifices daily in order that they may provide opportunity in the form of education for their children; and these girls in college, recognizing the plight of America today, are leaving the classrooms, leaving their respective colleges, and going to New York, where they saw these jobs advertised, with the hope that finally, when they finish, they may not experience difficulty in finding employment.

Several of the older women spoke of their grandchildren. Those who were willing to talk at all invariably stressed the fact that they were in need of work because they were widows or women whose husbands were ill.

CHANCES FOR JOBS

Even those at the end of the line were hopeful, though Paul J. Kern, president of the municipal civil service commission, said he expected to fill all of the jobs now available from the first 150 applicants.

The applications were taken at the rate of 400 an hour by the 20 clerks, 2 notaries, and 3 fingerprint experts who composed the civil-service staff.

A notary fee of 25 cents was collected from each of the applicants. Those who did not have the money were permitted to sign up anyway, with the understanding that they would pay later. There also will be a fee of $1 for the physical and literacy examinations, which will start some time next week.

CRITICIZES LAW

Mr. Kern took occasion to criticize the law which requires that the applicants be chosen in the order of their qualification. He said that he would recommend an amendment to permit applicants to be chosen competitively or by lot.

Throughout last night police were stationed at the armory to preserve order.

COAST ARTILLERY PRACTICES

On the floor of the armory during the evening there were practice maneuvers of the Two Hundred and Forty-fourth Coast Artillery, a few tennis matches, and two basketball games.

The entertainment ended at midnight. From then on the vigil grew less interesting, but because of the anxiety of waiting few of the women got any sleep.

Mr. President, here on the second page of the New York World-Telegram are reproductions of some photographs that were snapped in the armory that night, and above those photographs I see the printed words:

Women sleep all night in armory as 4,000 seek 12 jobs.

In the face of our 12,000,000 unemployed, in the face of the fact that we have here a statement through the press to the effect that the unemployment situation is so distressing that 4,000 American women, among whom are numbered college girls, are seeking a mere thimbleful of jobs, 12 jobs, there are American citizens who are asking that we receive here those from foreign shores who seek an asylum in this land of ours.

By the way, Mr. President, I wish to mention the fact that there has been introduced in this Congress by my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from the Empire State of New York [Mr. WAGNER] a bill providing for the admission to the United States of America of 20,000 children, refugees from Germany.

Mr. President, I desire to state to you and to the fathers and mothers of America that I am going to fight with all my might the passage of that bill. If the press desires so to do, if the editorial writers of the country desire to attack me, describing me as being heartless and cruel, I do not care.

I wish to state that I do not care what the press says about me and my attitude on these matters so long as I may bring those subjects to the attention of the American people.

I now take the opportunity to state that I propose to fight the passage of that bill, and I will tell the Senate why. I propose to fight the bill because if we permit 20,000 refugee children, all of them under the age of 14, to come into the United States, under the terms of the bill, those 20,000 children 5 years from now, according to my information, will have attained to the age of 19, and those 20,000 children at the age of 19, boys and girls, will be seeking jobs in this country which belong to the sons and daughters of American fathers and mothers.

I have just read to the Members of the Senate an article from a New York newspaper describing how 4,000 poor, undernourished, underfed, hungry American women were seeking 12 little jobs paying $18 a week, and amongst the 4,000 were college girls 18 and 19 years old. My heart goes out in sympathy to the refugee children, but, I repeat, my heart beats in sympathy first for American sons and daughters in preference to the children of fathers and mothers of any other nation in the world. If we permit them to come into this country, we are simply providing competition for the sons and daughters of American mothers who at that time likewise will have attained to the age of 19.

Mr. President, that is not all. If we permit that wedge to enter into the immigration laws of this country—and it will be a wedge—we will find that within a few years the fathers and the mothers of those refugee children will be seeking admission to the United States, because they will want to reunite here on our shores. That today is one trouble with our immigration laws, and the great trouble.

A man is here and his wife is over in Europe, or a man is here and his family is back yonder, and it is said that we who are fighting to protect the American people and to close securely the immigration gates are cruel because we will not permit the wife and the children of a man here to reunite with him upon American shores. I say it is not cruel. If I may be pardoned a personal reflection, I say it evidences good sense. We say to those people, reassemble, reunite, on the shores from which you came. To permit 20,000 children to come into the United States will provide an entering wedge, and there will be another request to reunite here 20,000, 30,000, or 40,000 aliens.

Senators, we have arrived at the time when the people of the United States have to begin to think about their problems here at home. We have arrived at the time when the American people are demanding that we look after their interests, and not wander over the earth spending all our time and thought on those who reside outside of continental United States.

I see here today honoring me with his presence at this hour the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and I am reminded that recently the members of the General Assembly of the Lone Star State of Texas had something to say in regard to the enforcement of the immigration laws of this country. In his State the people are thoroughly exercised about the matter. They have been greatly troubled, attributable to the fact that Texas is bordered by the Rio Grande, beyond which are 16,000,000 or 17,000,000 Mexicans. I am reminded that one day not so very long ago, in 1935, I was in the city of San Antonio, which has a population of about 300,000, and of that number about 150,000 are Mexicans. I was traveling on a Sunday through a park and saw a man standing on a goods box delivering a speech in Spanish. I inquired what he was talking about, and was told that he was raising hell because the W. P. A. was not paying him enough. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggest to the Senator that the same thing is occurring in many other sections of the country, in many places other than San Antonio, Tex.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly; it is occurring all over the country.

Mr. CONNALLY. I may also say to the Senator that many of the people in San Antonio who are of Mexican blood are native-born citizens—

Mr. REYNOLDS. I understand that.

Mr. CONNALLY. San Antonio being a very old city, one of the earliest settlements in the Southwest.

Mr. REYNOLDS. San Antonio is, of course, one of the most interesting and historical cities anywhere in the United States, the seat of the Alamo, and a very beautiful city, incidentally. I always like to be provided the opportunity of refreshing myself, historically and otherwise, by paying a visit there, but principally I like to be refreshed by finding myself in the State so ably represented by the handsome and gracious Senator from one of the greatest Commonwealths in the United States. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I had intended to interrupt the Senator, but after that brilliant burst of language, gallant even if not accurate, I would not in any wise consume any of the time of the Senator from North Carolina. I rose to advert to the fact that, while the Senator delights to refresh himself when he comes to San Antonio, we are always very happy, our Commonwealth feels greatly honored, when we have the privilege of entertaining the distinguished and eloquent Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very grateful to the Senator. It is so very rarely that I hear anything nice about myself that the Senator's words are music to my ears. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, since I have mentioned Texas, I may say that I happen to have in my hand a clipping from the Weekly Dispatch of San Antonio—that delightfully interesting and historical city—of January 13, 1939. A convention of printers was held in that city. I like printers very much. I have found that in my State of North Carolina those who do the mechanical work of making up newspapers are always for me, while the editors are always against me; but I thank Heaven there are more printers than there are editors, so that I may add that I have fared very nicely.

I wish to read a resolution adopted by the printers at the State convention which took place in the Senator's State:

RESOLUTION

Whereas Senator REYNOLDS, of North Carolina, has drafted a bill to be presented before Congress intended to suspend all immigration to this country for a period of 10 years "or until every unemployed American is back at work," and also is preparing measures to deport every alien criminal in America and to require compulsory registration and fingerprinting of aliens; and

Whereas in June 1938 there were 443,196 war veterans registered with employment offices and seeking jobs; and

Whereas this local deems it essential that every effort possible be directed to relieve the unemployment situation in this country; and

Whereas the immigration of aliens to the United States causes not only the swelling of the unemployment ranks, the increase in crime, the lowering of the American standard of living, and the spread of isms foreign to this country: Therefore, be it

Resolved by San Antonio Typographical Union, No. 172, in session assembled this 8th day of January 1939, That this local heartily endorses Senator REYNOLDS in his efforts to introduce legislation to curtail immigration; and be it

Resolved, That telegrams be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress urging them to help and support the Reynolds bill; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Typographical Journal for its publication, to the Weekly Dispatch, the San Antonio Express, San Antonio Evening News, and the San Antonio Light, and that our delegates to the San Antonio Trades Council and the Allied Printing Trades Council be instructed to present this resolution before their respective bodies. That a copy be sent to the legislative committee of the American Federation of Labor, and the legislative representative of the Texas State Federation of Labor, and to Senator REYNOLDS, of North Carolina.

I thank the gentlemen of the Typographical Union affiliated with that local in San Antonio, Tex., for their very complimentary remarks embodied in the resolution which I have happily been privileged to bring to the attention of the Members of this body.

Mr. President, reflecting upon the portion of the resolution I have just read in reference to aliens on our shores, thinking again of the troubles we are experiencing in this country, and particularly since we read a great deal about the meeting held night before last in New York, I wish again to remind the Members of this body that the political battleground of the "isms" of the world today is right here in the United States of America. The political battleground of the "isms," the foreign "isms" of the world, is right here, and the battle is now raging. Let us see: Since July 1936, when the revolution in Spain began, ancient Spain, historic Spain, beautiful Spain, has been a physical battleground, and the battle has been waged on the one hand by the Communists of Russia and on the other hand by the Fascists and the Nazis of Germany and Italy. Everyone knows that to be a fact. Ask any newsman who has just returned from abroad and what will he tell you? Make inquiry of anyone who knows, and what will he tell you? He will tell you that the physical battleground of the "isms" of the earth since July 1936 has been on the soil of Spain. But when we step across the wide expanse of the blue waters of the Atlantic we find that the political battleground of the "isms" of the world is here in the United States of America.

Night before last there took place in the city of New York a meeting of those constituting the "bund," and if we are to believe the press reports there were sandwiched into Madison Square Garden more than 27,000 persons who had paid an admission fee of $1 each. Those persons are members of the Nazi "Bund"; they are members of the Fascist "Bund." We are told by the press that outside of that mammoth hall, Madison Square Garden, 20,000 or more Communists, enemies of those in the meeting, were rioting. That was a meeting which was held in the city of New York, and I dare say, and I am ashamed to say it, that it would be difficult to hold a meeting spontaneously in any city in the United States to discuss nothing but Americanism, and get 27,000 people to attend, even if no admission charge were made.

This morning I had a conference in my office in the Senate Office Building with gentlemen who represent the largest patriotic societies in America, and those who represent one organization of the heroes of the World War, our war veterans. We were discussing the matter which I have seen fit to discuss here today, and I made the statement to them that, in my opinion, the more than 150 patriotic societies of America had done a great deal for our country, but the difficulty was that we, you and I, who are affiliated with the fraternal organizations which stand for Americanism, pull down the windows and close the doors, and we puff, and blow, and sweat, and talk Americanism and patriotism, but we waste that energy upon those who are affiliated with us in those fraternal organizations. I suggested that what we need today is a public forum where the more than 150 patriotic societies of America may defend America and uphold American principles and traditions.

I wish to state to the Senate that within the past several weeks I have received many thousand letters from people all over the United States who favor the program in which I am interested and which I am discussing in the Senate of the United States. I have received so many such letters that I thought it would be a marvelous opportunity to assemble, to band together, the patriots of America who were desirous of saving America for Americans. So I reached into the air, so to speak, and I brought forth the word "vindicators," meaning those who defend, and I have employed the word "vindicators" in description of this mass national American movement, because I feel that today America of all times must be defended and that Americanism and American patriotism must be brought to the fore.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wonder if the Senator would include among the patriotic societies those societies, organized and based on foreign propaganda, that want to save the world, and if he would include among the patriotic societies those groups that are always extending their hands across the sea.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator has propounded to me a question which for the moment perhaps would prove a little embarrassing, for the reason that I have made it my policy throughout my life never to refer to anyone at all if I cannot speak good of him. Consequently, I should rather not have anything further to say about that matter. Those who believe in reaching hands across the sea are in opposition to those with whom I find myself in accord, who stand for America first, and who are desirous first of keeping the United States out of war by staying clear of any foreign entanglements or embroilments, by attending to our own business and keeping our noses out of the domestic affairs of other nations, by providing an adequate national defense for defense only, and providing neutrality laws which will be properly administered so that we will not get into war. That is No. 1.

No. 2. To register and fingerprint every alien in America, in order that we may know how many aliens are within the confines of the United States, where they are, and what they are doing here, so that if we were to become involved in war that information would be available, for every alien would be a potential spy or enemy in case we should become embroiled in war. The Senator knows that those potential spies and enemies, boring from within like termites, which cannot be seen or heard, would be more destructive and detrimental to the United States in war than would the cannons of the enemy, for cannons could be located by our aviators.

No. 3. Do not permit a single immigrant to come to this country within the next 10 years, or until such time as every American is employed.

No. 4. Banish all the foreign "isms" in this country, and let us hear a little something about Americanism.

Returning to the subject of the conversation I had this morning with representatives of the soldiers of the World War and the representatives of other patriotic organizations, I am ashamed to say that when we were discussing the proposal to hold a mammoth meeting in the city of Washington to demonstrate that the American people are interested in Americanism, and offset some of the tremendously large meetings held in other sections of the country, we were afraid we would not now find the people sufficiently interested in the question of immigration, in the matter of keeping America out of war, or in the spirit of Americanism, to bring about the attendance at such a meeting of half as many people as attended the meeting held Tuesday night in the city of New York.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator tell us why we do not deport from this country those aliens who do not take out citizenship papers, and who violate or who are supposed to have violated our laws? Is the law defective?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should say to the Senator that the machinery of operation is not properly oiled. I know the Senator from Texas was extremely interested last year and the year before in the question of deporting from this country alien criminals who were being held here. The Senator will recall that we had before us the names of more than 3,300 criminal aliens who had been arrested, who were under bond, who were being forcibly detained here, when in truth and in fact they ought to have been sent back where they came from.

They were detained here because the Department of Labor said, "These people should not be deported. By so doing families will be broken up."

Those cases were described as hardship cases. I went to the Department of Labor and personally asked the man in charge to pick out for me 25 or 50 of the so-called hardship cases. I did not want to pick them out myself, because if I had done so some Member of this body would say that they were the worst cases, and that I had gone there and selected them. I had them picked out and I discussed every one of those 50 cases on the floor of the Senate. I showed that in 9 out of 10 cases which were handed me by the representatives of the Department of Labor the Department was holding criminals in this country in violation of the laws which Congress had enacted. I found that 9 out of every 10 were cases of criminals with bad records. If any Senator disputes my statements, I shall be very happy within the hour to send to my office and obtain pamphlets containing the typewritten records which I compiled at that time.

Mr. President, I am happy to see some Members of this body interested in this subject. I know that the American people will be happy to learn that the Members of this body are interested in this subject, because it is fundamental to our present and future happiness.

In speaking of those who come to this country, I recall that last fall I visited 13 or 14 countries in Europe, and while traveling in England, France, Spain, Italy, Algeria, Greece, Bulgaria, Rumania, Yugoslavia, old Hungary, and Czechoslovakia, I made inquiry about the things in which I am interested, and in which I know Senators are interested, in connection with the question of immigration. I recall that while I was in Sofia, the capital of Bulgaria, I talked to one of our representatives there. I was making inquiry everywhere as to the type of persons who were trying to gain admission to this country, or to return to this country.

Do not misunderstand me. Let me make myself clear. I think any man who comes from foreign shores to this country, and who voluntarily makes application for and is granted American citizenship, may be just as good an American as you or I. He is an American by choice. We are Americans by birth.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I understand that Mr. Fritz Kuhn, the head of the German Bund, came to this country of his own choice and took out citizenship papers. Does the Senator consider him a good American citizen?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of course there are exceptions. I am speaking generally of the American people. We know that those who have come to the United States and have been naturalized have contributed greatly to the progress of America. I do not consider any man a 100-percent American citizen who preaches anything but the fundamental doctrines of Americanism.

Mr. MINTON. Of course we will all agree with the Senator's ideas about the foreigner. What does the Senator think about the Americanism of American citizens who join the bund? I hope the Senator will discuss that question.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will say to the Senator that I cannot picture in my mind any American citizen interested in the continued progress of this country affiliating with any organization which does not stand 100 percent for the principles of the United States of America. I am glad the Senator from Indiana brought that question to my attention. In cities all over the United States we find those who are bringing to the forefront the doctrines of the nations from which they come, whereas the mammoth meetings in the country should be held for the purpose of dealing with the problems with which we are today confronted, all of which are the problems of America, involving the spirit of American patriotism.

I wish to repeat what I stated a moment ago, that we have largely lost sight of Americanism. When we pick up a newspaper, what do we find? We find that many of the articles contributed to the editor in the public forum interest themselves in subjects having to do with the affairs of nations abroad.

A moment ago I spoke of being in Sofia, and making inquiry everywhere as to the type of persons who wish to come to America, or to return to America. One representative of the diplomatic corps in Sofia told me about a man who had come to him in an effort to return to the United States. The case was so ridiculous that I asked the official to prepare for me a memorandum of the case, which he did. Here it is. This is a memorandum of a conversation between the applicant and the consul:

The conversation which took place yesterday was about as follows:

APPLICANT. I want a visa to go back to the United States. When I was deported, the inspector told me I could apply for a visa after about a year.

CONSUL. Why were you deported?

APPLICANT. For entering the United States illegally.

CONSUL. When was that?

APPLICANT. In 1912. I was just a boy.

CONSUL. If your entry into the United States took place as long ago as 1912, there must have been some additional reason for your deportation now.

APPLICANT. I think it was because they heard of that $475.

CONSUL. Tell me about that.

APPLICANT. Well, one night we had a few drinks and went up to the sixth floor of the — Hotel, where we played a game, and one of the boys said I stole $475. I was indicted for it [exhibiting newspaper clipping], but they told me that the case would not come up for trial if I agreed to being deported.

CONSUL. But if the case did not come to trial, there must have been still some further ground for deportation.

APPLICANT. I think that in their investigation they found out about my trips to Canada and back.

CONSUL. What did you go to Canada for?

APPLICANT. I was doing a little smuggling in narcotics.

CONSUL. I think it will be better for you not to try to go back to the United States. It would be better to find a job here. What is your trade?

APPLICANT. Well, I never had any trade exactly. I can drive a car very well, but the local authorities refuse to give me a license because I have not the necessary education.

CONSUL. But you speak very good English and give the impression of being quite well educated.

APPLICANT. Yes; but that was all in the United States. For 3 years I had regular lessons and lots of time to study. That was while I was doing time in the — State Penitentiary.

CONSUL. What was that for?

APPLICANT. I got 3 years for grand larceny.

CONSUL. Then it is out of the question that you could be readmitted to the United States.

APPLICANT. But what about my little boy? I left him there.

CONSUL. Who is taking care of him now?

APPLICANT. His mother, but we are divorced, and the judge said that because the mother was not a woman of good character, he gave the custody of the child to me. My wife is a bad woman, and I want to take care of the boy myself. [Exhibited copy of divorce decree.]

CONSUL. I think that the authorities would not consider that as sufficient grounds to readmit you. Have you any other claims?

APPLICANT. Well, what about my other wife?

CONSUL. You mean that you married again after your divorce?

APPLICANT. No; it was before, but we never bothered to be divorced, and I do not think that the authorities found out about it.

That fellow wants to return to the United States!

A moment ago I made mention of young girls in college, who are still attending classes and who know that the unemployment situation is troublesome in this country, joining a throng of 4,000 women seeking 12 jobs. They went to college hoping that when they graduated they would not have such a hard time obtaining jobs. Today we have cases of mothers and fathers spending their last dollar to send their sons and daughters to college to become professional men and women. The outlook is very discouraging to them.

I wish to read a few letters which I have from time to time clipped from the newspapers. I have before me a letter which was published in the New York Herald Tribune of February 19, 1939, on the subject of the future of refugees. I think it is a very sensible communication. The correspondent says that in due time the refugees will compete in the struggle for jobs. I will read what the writer of this communication says. His name is George Acker, of Little Ferry, N. J., and his letter is dated February 14, 1939:

LITTLE FERRY, N. J., February 14, 1939.

TO THE NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE:

I have read with great interest your editorial anent the child refugees, and, though I am in full agreement that their lot is an unfortunate one, I, nevertheless, cannot help but comment on a few corollaries that would follow the admission of 20,000 foreign children into this country.

These children would not compete in American labor markets—not now. But in 5 years they will create quite a problem for the American-born child, who will then find himself competing for his heritage. The bill introduced by Senator WAGNER would simply allow these refugee children to be brought in by those already willing to receive and support them. Who are these people? Are they unaware of the fact that there are thousands of children in our own United States who are in need of succor, or aren't these philanthropic-minded persons interested in the needs of American children?

It seems to me that people grow hysterical about the unfortunates of other countries and at the same time are cold and aloof to the needy of their own land. Perhaps this is due to the fact that far greater publicity is given to the unlucky somewhere else. It puffs up the national ego to point out how badly those of other nations are faring, and we feel very magnanimous when we give assistance; our philanthropies have flowered from the flooded wastes of China to the battle-scarred fields of Spain, but we have been so busy taking care of these flowers that the few seeds sown in our own backyard have dried and withered.

There still are millions of unemployed in the United States, and thousands of children of the unemployed, children who have quite as much need of help as do the children who are not wanted in Germany. While we must sympathize with these poor youngsters, we must not lose sight of the fact that our first thought should be to our own, that charity begins at home.

There are many, many orphans in our own country, children who have not even the memory of their parents. And the ragged children in the slums of our large cities and in the shacks and hovels of our more rural sections.

Every liner arriving from Germany disembarks refugees on our shores. By various interpretations of the laws, by this means and that, thousands of these people in excess of the quota have been allowed to enter our country. Of course, every one of them has a job awaiting him and so does not become a burden to us; but the man whose job he has taken finds himself on relief! I cannot believe that the jobs were especially created for the incoming refugees; if that is true, why weren't the jobs created years ago for the unemployed American citizens?

You cannot get around it; either the jobs these refugees are getting means an unemployed American for every employed refugee or else it means that jobs can be created for refugees but not for our native sons.

GEORGE ACKER.

Mr. President, referring to the fact that there are hundreds upon hundreds of refugees, professional men and women, doctors, lawyers, dentists, and nurses coming into this country from foreign shores to supplant our own professional men and women, I ask that an article entitled "Refugees Unlimited," in the February issue of a monthly magazine published at Rutherford, Va., Medical Economics, and having a circulation of 130,000, be made a part and portion of my remarks. It deals with the subject of the influx of the thousands of professional men and women, nurses, lawyers, doctors, and dentists who are coming from other sections of the world to the United States to compete with our own professional men and women.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The article referred to is as follows:

REFUGEES UNLIMITED

(In the preparation of this article many private, professional, and governmental agencies were consulted. Consequently the opinions presented here are not those of any single organization or individual. Following is a partial list of the sources contacted: United States Department of State, Self Help for German Emigrés, Inc., United States Immigration Service, emergency committee in aid of displaced foreign physicians, 47 United States consulates abroad, Boston committee on medical emigrés, medical society officers or medical examiners in Alabama, Colorado, Georgia, Illinois, Minnesota, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, and Tennessee.)

Today, through American ports of entry, flows a steadily mounting stream of foreign doctors.

Fleeing the oppression of dictators or economic hardship they are coming in droves from Germany, Austria, Spain, Czechoslovakia—even Canada—to hang up their shingles in the land of the free and home of the private patient.

Waiting to welcome them are the newspaper "sob sisters," whose livelihood has long consisted of drumming up pity and custom for the downtrodden; sympathetic immigration officials, to give some of them preference in the quotas; amenable boards of regents, to grant them licenses without examination; crusading labor leaders and some two dozen or more refugee organizations devoted to finding a place for them in an already overcrowded profession.

Needless to say, no such advantages exist for the American practitioner. No newspapers publicize his economic oppression. There are few spokesmen for the Americans forced out of practice by tactics regarded on this side of the water as unethical. And as for medical societies with the temerity to inquire into the indiscriminate licensing of alien M. D.'s, they may be disposed of, as was at least one, with the rejoinder of State officials that it is "none of their business."

Nevertheless, facts gathered by Medical Economics indicate a growing belief that the problem of alien competition is very much the profession's business. Investigators for this magazine, who interviewed members of licensing bodies, leaders of organized medicine, individual doctors, immigration officials, many refugees themselves, as well as the bodies organized to aid them, found the consensus of opinion to be as follows:

American doctors sympathize with the plight of colleague victims of European discrimination. At the same time, they feel that the traditional generosity of American medicine should not be strained to the point where it would sacrifice our economic security for theirs. They would not, in a word, let sympathy interfere with good judgment.

In contrast with other nations, several physicians declared, the United States has already been overgenerous in accepting alien practitioners. Were the situation reversed, they ask—with American doctors becoming refugees from the United States—would they be permitted to set up practice in foreign countries on the basis of their American qualifications?

They would. But only in Morocco, Siam, Ethiopia, or Iraq! Strange as it may seem, none of the other 43 nations (all European countries included) surveyed by Medical Economics would even consider licensing citizens of the United States in this way.

Exactly how great a rise has taken place in medical immigration during the past few years is not known, as Government figures are not analyzed to a point of specifying doctors of medicine. However, the influx of professional men in general is reported by the United States Immigration Service, as follows:

1935.....	2,277
1936.....	2,588
1937.....	4,162
1938.....	5,463

The Immigration Service is also authority for the statement that during the past 4 years, 1,008 M. D.'s have entered the United States from Germany and Austria alone. From Europe generally, a leading refugee organization estimates, the immigration rate is now 1,000 physicians each year!

It must be remembered that medical refugees from what was formerly Austria have not yet affected immigration totals to any great extent. They account for only 10 percent of the combined infiltration from Germany and Austria during the past 4 years. Already, though, because of political conditions abroad, the number who are coming to the United States has begun to multiply rapidly.

The growth in immigration is reflected by the steady yearly rise in the number of foreign medical-school graduates being licensed (though an increasing percentage of Americans are among the 1930-36 groups). Of 167 who were examined in 1930, some 44.9 percent failed; in 1937, 919 were tested, with only 30.7 percent failing. This decline in percentage of failures was effected gradually in the years between, pointing to this significant fact: That while foreign-trained applicants have increased each year, the proportion of failures has declined.

There is little sign of relief on the horizon. Instead, the prospect seems to be growing darker. An A. M. A. official in close touch with the situation predicts gloomily that 1939 compilations will disclose another 30 to 40 percent advance over 1938's high-water mark in licenses issued to foreigners.

Little hope is held of any natural decline in the volume of refugees seeking admission to the United States. Quite the contrary. For present indications are that the main wave of foreign physicians has not yet been set in motion. German sources informed Medical Economics some weeks ago that their country's remaining Jewish doctors were to be deprived of the right to practice on December 1 last. Whether this crippling blow was struck could not be confirmed before publication. At any rate, in view of recent Nazi declarations, it does not seem to be far off. It is generally accepted, moreover, that the same fate awaits Austria's Jewish profession, which would bring the total of possible emigration from Europe to figures estimated at more than 10,000.

The anti-Semitic wave is spreading eastward with Hitler's ambitions. Danzig, theoretically a "free city," recently liquidated its entire Jewish profession at one fell swoop. Czechoslovakia, Rumania, and Hungary are all tightening the net of economic restrictions about their physicians in the same manner as did the Nazis in the early days of their regime. Topping this off is evidence that the number of Canadian graduates settling down to American practices is growing steadily.

In the next 5 years, therefore, as many as 15,000 foreign doctors may be seeking locations in lands other than their own. Where will they go?

Not to France. The French Government has served notice to an American medical refugee committee that while it will accept alien physicians as residents, they cannot practice.

Nor to England. As a result of protests by the British Medical Association, the Royal College of Surgeons, and the Medical Practitioners' Union, England has, temporarily, at least, clamped down the lid. The British Home Office, after admitting 50 refugee physicians in 1938, now feels that England has done her duty.

Certainly not to Italy, where Mussolini is just opening an anti-Semitic campaign. The Italian Government, speaking through the newspaper Tevere, has already warned Jewish physicians that, since they are "doubly strangers in Italy and * * * enemies of fascism," they will find no welcome there.

Although Russia's size, plenitude of patients, and communistic utterances about "sharing" would seem to make it the ideal haven, the U. S. S. R. has been conspicuously uncooperative in inviting physicians from outside to settle within its boundaries. It is natural, then, that the United States, with its much-publicized freedom and promise of a good living, should seem a godsend to foreign doctors. In Germany, at least (source of most present emigrés), the idea of migration to this country has been openly encouraged. The Hitler press has expressed its vexation loudly and often that they won't take more refugees. Furthermore, unwanted recent graduates of German schools have been denied their diplomas until they can leave the country.

These factors lead to the natural question: Could we absorb as many as, say, 15,000 practitioners in the next few years?

Obviously not. The absorption of so many alien doctors, if attempted, would be a step toward wholesale economic suicide. It would mean the loss of millions of our present patients.

As an example of what could happen, alarmed physicians are pointing to what has happened in New York. Because of its liberal licensure program, this State has been, in the words of Dr. Harold Rypins, secretary of its board of medical examiners, a "dumping ground" for foreign doctors. In the 5 years preceding January 1, 1937 (before the real influx began), the Empire State admitted 961 foreigners to practice, lifting the local medical population 4 percent. Of these, 482, or more than half, were allowed to practice by endorsement. And this, although examination was required of graduates of all medical schools in New York State.

As a result, the local board of examiners proposed, in 1936, to stem the tide. They ruled that examinations were to be mandatory for all.

The fear of being barred, however, actually stimulated immigration. Foreigners rushed to register before the dead line—by telegram, letter, and even cable. Meanwhile, those who had gained admittance had entrenched themselves by organizing and enlisting the support of many powerful American laymen. Defended by such brilliant legal talent as Samuel Untermyer, they were finally able to resist the board's ruling. In the State supreme court on October 15, they won an outstanding victory by securing an order (since appealed) which restrained the board of regents from requiring some 100 of them to take examinations. The board of regents, it was declared, could not void that part of the law allowing licenses to those who can prove completion of a course in a reputable medical school and a practice of 5 years.

This created an almost pitiable condition in certain sections of the State. At its last meeting, the house of delegates of the New York State Medical Society passed a resolution asking equal rights with foreigners. Before the same assembly, Dr. James F. Gallo, of Herkimer, N. Y., lambasted foreign competition in an account of an allegedly typical case:

"In New York City," he declared, "over 300 doctors are on relief or are given work by relief to keep them from starving. * * * A physician in one of the small villages along the Hudson River had been gaining a good livelihood for himself and family * * * living well and providing for the future. * * * This young man, native-born and educated in the United States, was compelled to leave because he could not compete with the unfair practices of a foreign physician."

Other aroused New York practitioners lay still greater complications to the newcomers. In small communities throughout New York State, they say, medical refugees have evidently "mistaken the torch in Miss Liberty's hand for a dollar sign." One American physician charges the most unscrupulous, or most desperate, of them with converting their offices into "mass production" clinics, featuring "snap diagnoses" and "that prescription," and cutting fees to as low as 50 cents a visit. Some, not averse to unethical advertising, are said to have distributed handbills in mail boxes of other doctors' patients. These, it is asserted, read as follows:

Office visits.....	50c
Fluoroscopic examinations.....	50c extra
Maternity cases (at home).....	$10

Since these men don't belong to medical societies, they are more or less outside organized medicine's sphere of influence. About the only method one Long Island medical association could propose for controlling abuses was to vote that foreign nonmembers be presented with copies of the Code of Ethics. Protests to State officials have proved unavailing, the latter passing responsibility for their policy to an agreement with the Department of Labor.

Many of the American physicians interviewed doubted whether refugee doctors, accustomed to the European regimen of compulsory health insurance, could adapt themselves to this country's standards of private practice. Some even see in the foreign influx an active group of backers for the Federal Government's socialized health plans. As one New York medical society president declared, the refugees would like nothing better than being assured of $2,000 or so a year—at the expense of Americans who have worked all their lives to build up practices.

Doctors, apparently, are not the only sufferers. Damage is allegedly being done to the foreigners' patients by hasty diagnoses and radical surgery carried on in "border line" sanitariums, a natural haven for unaccepted aliens.

"In these institutions, which are glad to fill their beds," one doctor said, "they can attempt all kinds of surgery, without ever having seen them done. Who is to stop them? Not the staff, because in such institutions there isn't any."

These abuses have occurred among the licensed practitioners. Other men, having failed to obtain licenses, are purportedly practicing without supervision of any kind. Because of their scanty personnel, State boards cannot keep a close check on such law-breakers. Particularly is this so in the larger cities.

In inland States, alien M. D.'s have as yet made no great inroads. Nevertheless, letters of protest pouring in daily to medical societies indicate that the pressure of foreign competition may soon become Nation-wide. Concerning the influence of refugee doctors in Chicago, St. Louis, and other midwestern cities, one practitioner says, "Hardly a physician I talk to does not know of a foreigner who has recently moved into his neighborhood to compete with him."

In Iowa, a wealthy physician has aroused the angry comment of colleagues by sheltering no less than nine medical refugees in his home and trying to make room for them in the community.

Of New Jersey's 79 most recent licentiates, 34 are refugees. In Massachusetts, the situation has become such that the State medical society is considering a proposal which demands full citizenship of all practicing physicians.

Repercussions are heard even in isolated States like Texas, where the board of examiners recently rejected 21 alien applicants because of uncertain qualifications. And in Missouri, where a prominent medical man has spread this appeal for legislation against foreign competition:

"Why should they enjoy the protection and advantages of Missouri and force our own people to move elsewhere? The irony of it is that these aliens are coming from countries that have made it absolutely impossible for our citizens to enter and practice. * * * It is 'heads I win, tails you lose.' Next year it (the influx, now mainly German) may be made up of Italians, Russians, Spaniards, Frenchmen, and Englishmen."

Unquestionably, the incoming foreigners are receiving a certain amount of patronage from Americans in high places. In New York City, some of their most enthusiastic sponsors have been Park Avenue specialists. This is explained by one leader of organized medicine as follows:

"These specialists live largely on consultations sent them from doctors in more modest communities. The more physicians, foreign or otherwise, they have on the string, the better. In return for backing, aliens will send the specialist their consultation work."

Most medical authorities questioned were largely of the opinion that the quota of foreign doctors should be restricted. The point of difference was how this should be done.

One group, anxious to be fair to distinguished colleagues from abroad, suggested that the less competent be weeded out on the basis of educational records. But this is a lot more difficult than it sounds. A European diploma may not be worth the paper it is printed on. Medical students are not permanently "flunked out" in Europe as in the United States. Instead, if the student fails, he simply studies more and keeps taking exams until he finally squeezes by. Thus, many of the lower 25 to 30 percent systematically eliminated in this country would succeed in becoming physicians in Europe. On the other hand, the superior European doctor, for political reasons, may be unable to obtain credentials to prove that he even attended medical school.

A proposal is that practice in the United States be limited to American citizens—a requirement already pertaining in several States. This is the official recommendation of the A. M. A. house of delegates. At the time it made the recommendation, the house contemplated full naturalization, which calls, among other things, for 5 years' residence in this country. But, so far, State boards are inclined to interpret "citizenship" merely on the basis of evidence that first papers have been taken out. This, of course, is a formality consuming only a few minutes' time. Another objection to the 5-year residence rule is that it would probably cause crowding in technical fields allied with medicine, in which the foreigner would seek to support himself until he became eligible for practice.

A third group maintains that the problem is one of distribution rather than exclusion. One adherent of this theory holds that—"The United States is big enough for us all. The trouble is that only a few States will admit the refugees to practice. This aggravates the problem by concentrating them in a few centers. If all the States were to adopt an 'open door' policy, the refugees would be spread evenly throughout the country. This would result in mutual benefits: Provide practice for the doctors and doctors for communities needing them."

Followers of this line of thinking would have the State boards of regents grant provisional licenses to foreigners. The boards would assign each man to a community requiring a doctor. If he refused to go, he would forfeit his license.

Although this plan shapes up well on paper, many doubt its practicality. For one thing, that the United States is "big enough for us all" is a moot point. Others believe that forcing a physician to accept a location smack of the dictatorship in lands from which many of the aliens have fled.

Some believe the problem could be simply solved if the Department of Labor would fix the number of physicians admissible under the quota. Even should the Immigration Service consent to this, which is almost unimaginable, the chances are that this limitation could not be strictly enforced.

No ready-made solution seems to fit the problem. Meanwhile, foreign competition streams down the gangplank.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am glad the Senator has brought up the subject of refugees. Sometime ago, if the Senator will permit a brief interruption, I made a statement in which I voiced opposition to the admission of refugees into this country, especially in view of the unemployment situation. There are, however, many people in the United States who desire to put refugees first and Americans last, who desire to take care of refugees and aliens, and, if there is anything left for native Americans, very well. I believe in the policy of America and Americans first, and then, if there is anything left for aliens and refugees, very well. I believe we should take care of our own people first, and I am glad to hear that policy voiced on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator from Minnesota very much for his contribution to my observations. In connection with what he has said, I may add that I have suggested that the American people now, of all times, as a whole, from coast to coast and from north to south, should adopt this slogan: "Our citizens and our country first." But, as the Senator from Minnesota has said, in a great many sections of the country it appears that some American citizens are providing jobs for refugees first. That is taking place every day in the city of New York. I have an article from one of the larger New York dailies in respect to some refugees who came here and who 2 days after they had landed were taking the jobs of American citizens.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him further?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am informed that not only will some employers give jobs to refugees first, but they will really displace Americans now having jobs, put them out of their positions, and replace them with refugees who cannot even speak the English language.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is true. Let me say in this connection that I have been informed that one of the largest department stores in the city of New York giving employment to hundreds of American men and women had made arrangements to discharge about 8 out of every 10 of those clerks in order to make room for some refugees who were coming to the United States. The poor men and women who were employed in that store raised so much hell about it that the store executives became afraid to take the action and backed down.

In reference to that, I will say to the Senator that I am going to make very diligent inquiry as to the truth or falsity of that statement, and whatever truths I learn about it I will expect to provide the Members of this body upon the floor of the Senate the knowledge I obtain, for I think any individual, organization, corporation, or association in this country that will even contemplate discharging Americans from employment in order to make room for aliens from across the sea ought to be exposed to the American people.

In reference to the matter of the doctors, which I mentioned a few moments ago, I have here a clipping from the New York Herald Tribune of January 29, 1939, the headline of which reads:

Four hundred and forty-one out of one thousand and sixty-three alien doctors—

Listen to this—fail in tests for State licenses.

Two hundred and ten of those rejected in New York in 1937-38 are from Germany and 35 from Austria; only 5.5 percent of those from schools in the State fail.

I ask that the newspaper article which provides this information in detail as to the number of foreigners from the respective countries of the world failing in the examinations be published in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of January 29, 1939]

FOUR HUNDRED AND FORTY-ONE OUT OF ONE THOUSAND AND SIXTY-THREE ALIEN DOCTORS FAIL IN TESTS FOR STATE LICENSES—210 OF THOSE REJECTED IN NEW YORK IN 1937-38 ARE FROM GERMANY AND 35 FROM AUSTRIA; ONLY 5.5 PERCENT OF THOSE FROM SCHOOLS IN THE STATE FAIL

ALBANY, January 28.—The State education department announced today that of the 1,063 foreign doctors who tried the 1937-38 medical examinations for licenses to practice in New York State, 441 failed to qualify. Among the unsuccessful candidates were 210 from Germany and 35 from Austria.

Candidates from abroad and the results of their tests were as follows:

Germany 422 candidates, 210 failures; Austria 112 candidates, 35 failures; Czechoslovakia 12, 9 failures; England 12, no failures; France 36, 14 failures; Hungary 12, 8 failures; Ireland 7, 5 failures; Russia 19, 9 failures; Scotland 88, 14 failures; Switzerland 181, 66 failures; Syria 2, no failures; Italy 103, 58 failures; Turkey 1, 1 failure; Cuba 2, no failures; Canada 62, 11 failures; Mexico 1, 1 failure.

The department disclosed that 1,836 prospective physicians took the 1937-38 tests. Besides the 1,063 from abroad, 468 were from New York medical schools and 285 from schools of other States. It added that 5.5 percent of the New York State educated doctors failed in the examinations and 24.9 percent of the candidates from other States were rejected.

Dr. Ernest E. Cole, counsel of the State board of regents, in test cases recently before the appellate division, third department, of two refugee German doctors who sought State medical licenses without examination, argued that endorsement of foreign physicians without examination would be discrimination against New York State's prospective doctors, who are obliged to pass the test in order to practice. The test cases referred to were those of Dr. Julius W. Levi and Dr. Paul Erlanger, both of whom failed in the 1938 examinations. The board of regents refused to endorse them.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Some time ago I arrived at the port of New York from the West Indies. On arrival I was informed by officials that the Europa was coming in that afternoon with 1,500 refugees. I am wondering if when he makes his investigation the Senator would be willing to investigate further and include the statement that 1,500 refugees were coming into this country in the midst of a period of great unemployment in the United States, of which we are all well aware. I said, "Well, what about these poor people; they will perish; they will not be able to get any work." Mention was made of certain officials in New York, and the reply was, "Oh, they have been promised employment within two weeks." I should like to be certain that native citizens of this country, those who have taken out their first papers, veterans of our wars who have marched under our flag in time of war, men who have been out on the industrial battlefields in America and suffered injury in industry, and their sons and daughters shall first be taken care of in the matter of securing jobs. It appears, however, that within 2 weeks after landing from the Europa as refugees 1,500 aliens were to be employed in the State of New York. I thought the Senator might be interested in that statement.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much.

In regard to the number of persons coming to the United States, I desire to state that I intend to make inquiry likewise in regard to the tourist visas that are issued. I am wondering how many persons have entered this country in the past 5 years under tourist visas and how many have actually gone out again. Senators understand that ours is the only country upon the face of the earth that does not keep close tab upon foreigners coming to it. Ours is the only one. We have the poorest immigration laws of any country in the world. There is one thing that I admire about Mexico. Mexico, just to the south of us, has some of the very finest immigration laws possessed by any country upon the face of the earth; and, by the way, I have suggested from time to time, in bills I have introduced here, that we should apply the quota system to the countries of Central and South America and the West Indies. The State Department, however, have said, "Oh, we ought not to do that." They have thrown up their hands in holy horror. They have said, "It will make them mad with us. We have the 'friendly neighbor' policy, the brotherly love policy."

I wonder if the State Department knows that every one of the countries to the south of us has finer, better, stronger immigration laws than we have here in the United States. How could they get mad with us for passing laws protecting us in the same way that they have already passed laws to protect themselves?

While I am on the subject of doctors and professional men, let me say, as the Senator knows, that the doctors all over the United States are having a hard time. I ask that there be published in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, an article from the Long Island Star-Journal of Wednesday, February 1, 1939, entitled "Speaker Warns Medical Group of Influx of Foreign Doctors."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The article is as follows:

SPEAKER WARNS MEDICAL GROUP OF INFLUX OF FOREIGN DOCTORS

Serious competition for medical practitioners in the United States unless the influx of European physicians to this country is not curbed or controlled was forecast last night by William Alan Richardson, managing editor of Medical Economics, before 250 physicians at the Medical Society Building, 112-25 Queens Boulevard, Forest Hills.

Richardson, whose topic was Refugees Unlimited, was a guest speaker at the monthly meeting of the Medical Society of the County of Queens, which was devoted to a discussion on medical economics.

Another speaker was Dr. George D. Wolf, author of The Physician's Business, who spoke on Current Economic Trends in Medical Practice. Dr. Joseph Wrana, newly inducted president of the society, spoke on the importance of harmony in the medical profession.

Richardson, speaking of the problem facing the medical profession in this country, revealed that approximately 1,000 European physicians arrive annually in the United States, with a potential influx of 15,000 physicians in the next 5 years.

SEES INCOME CUT

With the serious competition for established practitioners, Richardson said, it was questionable whether the number of incoming physicians from other countries could be absorbed without economic calamity as far as the American physician's income was concerned.

It was definitely unfair to the American-trained physician who is required to take rigid examinations in order to practice by allowing many European physicians to come here and practice without the necessary examinations, Richardson said.

The incoming physician problems was not so much the number of physicians, Richardson added, but the problem of proper distribution of European physicians. Mechanism for such distribution would have to be worked out.

Richardson suggested the possibility of limited medical practice to citizens only, which is already law in some States. The United States, he concluded, is a natural haven for European physicians because of the stringent rules already being applied in France, England, and Italy.

Tracing the development of the modern practice of medicine and its tendency toward the development of specialization in medicine or general practice, Dr. Wolf said there was an increasing interest of the Government in the practice of medicine and the outside agencies interested in public health.

OPPOSES CHANGE

The various medical systems which are practiced in European countries are not comparable to the achievements which we have in this country, Dr. Wolf added. "We believe that the people do not want any change in the medical system here," he said.

Dr. Wrana, in his first address last night since he was recently inducted head of the medical group, declared that "harmony in the medical profession is necessarily a most important attitude today."

"By harmony, I do not mean blind acquiescence to any proposal but an honest attempt to coordinate the activities of society for the common good, regardless of which individual or what faction institutes such a proposal," Dr. Wrana added.

Pressure group attacks, Dr. Wrana warned, "are threatening our very existence, and threatening the proper receipt of adequate medical care by the public." The most fearful of threats, the society head said, was that of compulsory health insurance, possibly patterned after the English system.

On the other hand, he said, hospital insurance has benefited not only the patient but the hospital as well.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I hope every American doctor in the United States will read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as soon as it reaches his State, in reference to the competition which is confronting men of his profession all over the United States. I likewise hope the doctors will know that the Members of the United States Senate are doing our level best to protect them against the invasion of foreigners which is occurring at the present time.

Mr. President, I have here three other clippings. One, entitled "Refugee Immigrants," is dated New York, February 1, 1939, and is signed by Mr. G. Gilder. Another, entitled "Arrivals of Refugees," is signed "Native Citizen," and is dated New York, January 27, 1939. Another is entitled "Every Immigrant 'An Error.'" It is signed by Victor E. Smith and is dated New York, January 30, 1939.

I ask that these articles be published in the RECORD as part of my remarks with reference to the influx of persons who unfortunately are now flooding our shores, or attempting to do so, at the time of all times when we need to bar persons from other parts of the world from coming here, so that they will not compete with our unfortunate laboring men who have not had any work for several years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the articles will be printed in the RECORD.

The articles are as follows:

REFUGEE IMMIGRANTS

To the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE:

The Herald Tribune is doing good and necessary service in printing letters such as the one from Mr. Joseph Larocque and one from Mr. Alfred Loomis the following day, both pointing out the danger of allowing our emotions to run away with our reason in the matter of the refugees now pouring into the country. The letter of "Native Citizen" is also significant, with its report of the number of refugees from Germany arrived on the Manhattan. Ten days ago I reached New York on a German steamer, nearly all of the passengers being German refugees, and wondered how many American citizens would have to be deprived of their jobs in order to furnish places for these aliens, for sooner or later that has to be done or they must become public charges. While in Germany I heard of Jews who were trying to get to Palestine in order to emigrate from there to the United States, and sorry as I was for their plight, the desire of all to come to America was not encouraging for Americans, considering the unemployed already here.

G. GILDER.

NEW YORK, February 1, 1939.

ARRIVALS OF REFUGEES

To the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE:

According to reports in the news columns the other day, the United States liner Manhattan arrived from Europe with 919 passengers, of whom 740 (more than 80 percent) were German refugees. Other ships of late have been bringing in large numbers of refugees. Under what conditions are these refugees being admitted? Do they enter this country within the limits of the German and Austrian immigration quotas or on visitors' permits? What guaranty or assurance is given that they will not supplant American citizens in jobs or become public charges? With so many native and naturalized citizens out of work and dependent upon the bounty of the Government and State for mere sustenance, is not this great influx of aliens an alarming menace? Are the immigration laws being enforced to the letter without regard for race or creed?

NATIVE CITIZEN.

NEW YORK, January 27, 1939.

EVERY IMMIGRANT "AN ERROR"

To the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE:

In your editorial Threat of Exile, you commended Miss Dorothy Thompson's phrase "sheer instinct for self-preservation." Aside from the vague, sentimental "preservation" argument, we should keep in mind that "self-preservation is the first law of nature." We cannot support the needy of the entire world. "Charity begins at home."

There are hundreds of thousands suffering unjustly in China and Spain, for example, far exceeding the numbers of Jewish refugees. Why should we single out the latter?

In fact, we should not be admitting a single immigrant under present conditions. When the present quotas were fixed we had no unemployed millions. With a standard of living and wage far above that of other countries, is it not criminal to be admitting tens of thousands who mean public charges—a tax and a toll direct or indirect? Every immigrant of today is illegally admitted, as well as an economic error.

VICTOR E. SMITH.

NEW YORK, January 30, 1939.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President—

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. If the Senator will permit me, there is another invasion of this country at this time of which I am sure the Senator is aware. It is an invasion of foreign propagandists and lecturers who are traveling up and down the land by the hundreds preaching their pro-ally doctrines, and

I presume pro-other combination doctrines as well, and endeavoring in every possible way to inveigle us by intrigue and innuendo into revamping and changing the old doctrines of the fathers of this country upon which America was founded and rewriting the foreign policy of the United States. They are trying to put us on a different basis. This invasion is proceeding along with the other invasion to which the Senator has referred, and I believe it puts America in peril.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I desire to say to the Senator in reference to that matter that a great many of the persons who are preaching "isms" here are telling us what to do and what not to do. I want to read a little pamphlet that was handed to me a few days ago. I desire to bring it to the attention of the Senate. Here the Communists are telling the Congress of the United States that we should not contribute by way of appropriation another dime to the Dies committee. The Communists are telling us how to run the country.

I shall take the time to read just a little of this pamphlet. It was issued by the New York State committee, Communist Party, 35 East Twelfth Street, New York City. By the way, before I forget it, I wish to remind Senators of the fact that the most astute propagandists in all the world are those who are employed by the Communists in this country. They have accomplished the most miraculous job ever accomplished by any propagandists since the creation of the world; and what is it? Why, the Communist propagandists have been so astute that they have succeeded in drawing the minds of the American public from Stalin and the Communist Party to Hitler and Mussolini. We never hear anything more about Stalin or the Communist Party. As I say, the Communists have succeeded in drawing the attention of the American people to Hitler and Mussolini.

Let us take just a minute to see what this pamphlet says. Here are members of the Communist Party issuing a pamphlet telling us how to run our country and saying that we should not put up a dime for the Dies committee. The pamphlet says:

Twenty-five thousand dollars of your money has already been spent! And $150,000 more is being asked. For what? For the work of the Dies Committee on Un-American Activities. There certainly are un-American forces at work in this country, and Congress should investigate them and expose them before the American people. In fact, when Congressman DIES originally urged this investigation, he pointed to these un-American forces as follows:

"I am not inclined to look under every bed for a Communist but I can say to this House that there is in my possession a mass of information showing the establishment and operation of some 32 Nazi camps in the United States, that all of these camps have been paid for, that they claim a total membership of 480,000 * * * that in these camps men are marching and saluting the swastika." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 9961.)

No sooner had the committee been organized than MARTIN DIES betrayed the confidence of those who had voted that he investigate the Nazi and Fascist organizations that are infesting our public life. He handled these Fascists with such generosity, in fact, that Fritz Kuhn of the Nazi Bund came out in support of DIES. Instead of exposing them, he turned his attention to sully the name of every progressive movement in America, including the New Deal, the trade-union movement, ex-Governor Murphy of Michigan, the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota, and all other popular movements.

"It is generally understood," Earl Browder recently wrote to all Congressmen, "that Mr. DIES, in the service of more sinister forces, is exploiting prejudice and ignorance in order to smear with the old 'red' brush all New Deal, labor, progressive, and liberal legislation, people and organizations."

I ask that the remainder of the pamphlet be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DIES attacks the Communists and calls everyone a Communist who stands for the expansion of W. P. A., for collective bargaining, for democracy, and for national security through cooperation with other lands. Collecting as witnesses a miscellaneous crew of labor spies, political cast-offs, and generally irresponsible people, DIES has accepted and gotten spread on the front pages a lot of gossip and falsehood without any attempt to get those who testify to prove their statements. So disgraceful was this performance that President Roosevelt had to speak out against the tactics of the Dies committee.

President Roosevelt said: "Most fair-minded Americans hope that the committee will abandon the practice of merely providing a forum to those who for political purposes, or otherwise, seek headlines which they could not otherwise obtain. Mere opinion evidence has been barred in court since the American system of legislative and judicial procedure was started."

As a fair-minded American you are entitled to know the truth about Fascist activity in America. But DIES is not entitled to squander your money in a political circus to serve reactionary ends. DIES devoted most of his time to misrepresentations about the Communist Party. As Earl Browder wrote in his letter to Congressmen, "DIES has not questioned a single authentic spokesman for the Communist Party who, far from being subversive and secretive, are openly carrying on democratic work in behalf of the majority of the American people, and can be reached daily by telephone, telegraph, or mail. He has not examined or put in the record a single reliable official document or publication of the Communist Party."

For the judgment of the fair-minded American we here want to submit to him two vital parts of the Constitution of the Communist Party.

1. "The Communist Party opposes with all its power any clique, group, circle, faction, or party which conspires or acts to subvert, undermine, weaken, or overthrow any or all institutions of American democracy whereby the majority of the American people have obtained power to determine their own destiny in any degree." (Art. IV, sec. 1.)

2. "The Communist Party of the United States of America is a working-class political party carrying forward today the traditions of Jefferson, Paine, Jackson, and Lincoln, and of the Declaration of Independence; it upholds the achievements of democracy, the right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness and defends the United States Constitution against its reactionary enemies who would destroy democracy and all popular liberties; it is devoted to the defense of the immediate interests of workers, farmers, and all toilers against capitalist exploitation, and to preparation of the working class for its historic mission to unite and lead the American people to extend these democratic principles to their necessary and logical conclusions."

This is documentary evidence, of a kind that DIES refused to admit to his records, of the true nature of the Communist Party and its relationship to Americanism and American democracy. DIES is proved to be a vicious and malicious misleader of public opinion.

Yet now DIES has the brazenness to ask Congress for $150,000 more to continue his side show. Every fair-minded American, from President Roosevelt to the humblest worker, is against wasting any more money on DIES. Rather than exposing the Fascists, DIES is working hand in hand with them to attack the New Deal and progressive forces. Do you want DIES to continue with this disgraceful exhibition? If you do not, then write at once to your Congressman telling him what you as a fair-minded American think about DIES and asking him to vote against any appropriation for DIES.

Do you want to learn more about the Communist Party? We shall be glad to send you, without any charge, a copy of the constitution and bylaws of the Communist Party, as well as a new booklet, just off the press, The Un-American Dies Committee, by Adam Lapin, Washington correspondent of the Daily Worker, and Earl Browder's latest work, Social and National Security. Have you written to your Congressman about DIES? Do it now! Issued by New York State Committee, Communist Party, 35 East Twelfth Street, New York City.

Mr. REYNOLDS. So the Communist Party issues a pamphlet advising the American people and the Congress of the United States not to make a single dollar of additional appropriation for the purposes of the Dies committee, which, in my opinion, has done a great deal of good.

In connection with the audacity and the gall of these foreign groups expounding their foreign "isms," I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate a copy of the Brooklyn Tablet, of Brooklyn, N. Y., dated Saturday, January 28, 1939, entitled "Sound Truck Asking Freedom Barred in City. Communist Groups Object to Appeal by Americans."

The Communists have the gall and the audacity to object to a patriotic appeal being made by American citizens! If the Communists in this country love so well and think so much of the communist form of government, why do they not go back to Russia? I shall be the first one to cast my vote for an appropriation providing a sufficient sum of money to place on board ship all the Communists in the United States and send them back to Russia. But they would not take advantage of such an opportunity. They do not want to go back to Russia; they would not go back to Russia if they had an opportunity to do so, and they know it. Yet now they are preaching their false doctrine, trying to subvert the fundamentals of the American Government and are not even willing to let Americans preach Americanism.

Let us see what this article says:

On Saturday, January 21, the American Christian Society to Combat Communism and Fascism put out a sound truck (sign and talk over sound system same as previous Saturday) at Forty-second Street and Fifth Avenue, Manhattan. The permit allowed those who had the truck to speak at the above corner and at Forty-second Street and Lexington Avenue from 12 noon until 7 p. m. on the above date and also every day this week, including this Saturday—at the same locations and at the same hours. On Saturday 5,000 persons congregated on the sidewalks, the majority of whom were well-organized Communists. These Communists spit on the American flag—

Listen to this:

These Communists spit on the American flag on display on both sides of the truck. They insulted men and women and the speaker on the truck, Timothy J. McCarthy, president of the organization, was not only insulted for hours but his life was threatened as well. Groups of two and three active Communist agitators circulated continually through the crowd, deliberately and intentionally arousing their cohorts until the results of their efforts occurred when one policeman guarding the left door of the truck was pushed aside and the door of the truck opened and Communists reached inside the car to drag out the speaker.

This was the president of a Christian society, a society of Christian American men and women, who thought they had the protection of the American flag, draped and pasted on both sides of the truck. But the Communists spit on the flag, and dragged this Christian American man out of the truck. The article states further:

Six policemen immediately rushed in and had to use physical force to keep the Communists away from the door of the car. One policeman had to be stationed at the rear of the truck to prevent the Communists from destroying the wiring of the sound system. Two Christian women and several Christian men were attacked physically by Communists (who well organized on this occasion greatly outnumbered Christian American citizens) and had to receive first-aid treatment. At 3 p. m., with only 20 policemen at the scene and at the height of the disturbance, Inspector Heitzman arrived on the scene and requested Mr. McCarthy to please desist from speaking over the sound system and to bring the sound truck to the station house on East Fifty-first Street to prevent a riot and to preserve human life.

Think of it, a truck draped with the American Flag attacked by 5,000 Communists, a truck occupied by Christian American men and women, in the heart of American civilization, Forty-second Street and Broadway, New York.

Mr. President, that answers the question. I say to those who are here this afternoon that, for the life of me, I cannot understand why the American people are not disturbed about this situation. I am doing my best to arouse them. I have the satisfaction in my own heart of knowing that I am doing all I possibly can to contribute my little bit toward saving America for Americans, and I say to each Senator that the time has arrived when, if we do not do something, the country will be taken over by those from foreign shores, just as we took it over from the Indians shortly after the arrival of Columbus on these shores in 1492.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in accordance with the order previously entered, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, under the order previously entered, to Monday, February 27, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful God, in the name of our Master we pray. In His earthly life, by precept and example, He rebuked every excess and defect and became the source of hope and encouragement to restless and frail human nature. Oh, let His voice proclaim insistently today: "In the wilderness clear ye the way of the Lord and in the desert a highway for our God"—a highway of human dignity, human and moral worth, and of ennobling faith. We humbly pray Thee to come and cleanse the arteries of our Republic of all un-Americanism, break down all barriers of race and creed, penetrate the shadows that may be deep and engulfing, and subdue the relics of paganism. Heavenly Father, be with each one of us. The assailable place in our character, the weak link in the chain of our virtues, do Thou make strong and forge into enduring fiber. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 88. An act referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for finding of fact and recommendations to the Congress;

S. 414. An act for the relief of the Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation in North Dakota; and

S. 1115. An act for the relief of Lt. Malcolm A. Hufty, United States Navy.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, and any previous order heretofore entered, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 104

Resolved, That WILLIAM A. PITTENGER, of Minnesota, be, and he is hereby, elected to the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered by me over station WFEA, at Manchester, N. H.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Montana, Mr. THORKELOSON, last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently, there is not a quorum present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 18]

Beam	Fernandez	McKeough	Sabath
Boykin	Ford, Leland M.	McReynolds	Schuetz
Byron	Goldsborough	Maclejewski	Schwert
Casey, Mass.	Gross	Maloney	Seger
Chandler	Harter, Ohio	Marshall	Shafer, Mich.
Creal	Hartley	Mason	Short
Culkin	Houston	Mitchell	Sullivan
Curley	Jarrett	Mouton	Sumner, Ill.
Daly	Jenks, N. H.	Murray	Summers, Tex.
Dies	Keller	O'Brien	Sweeney
Dingell	Kelly	O'Day	Thomas, N. J.
Disney	Kocalkowski	Osmer	Tinkham
Doughton	Lemke	Parsons	Wadsworth
Elliott	McArdle	Pierce, N. Y.	Winter
Evans	McDowell	Rabaut	Wolfenden, Pa.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 373 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

THE LATE E. HART FENN

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] for 1 minute.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, it is with a feeling of sadness and regret that I announce to this House the death this morning of the Honorable Edward Hart Fenn, a former Member of the United States Congress from my district for a period of 10 years. Harry Fenn was a fine, a cultured gentleman, an able statesman, and a stimulating companion. His service to the people of Connecticut in the Sixty-seventh, Sixty-eighth, Sixty-ninth, and Seventieth Congresses was one of loyalty and devotion which should ever serve as an example to those of us who follow him here. As a fellow townsman of Harry Fenn's I am in a position to appreciate what a vacancy his death creates in our town of Wethersfield and in the State of Connecticut where his entire life was one of personal denial for public good. I admire the record of his career, the worth of his character, and I revere his memory.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] that we Members on the Democratic side of the House who served with the gentleman from Connecticut, the Honorable E. Hart Fenn, are deeply grieved to learn of his untimely passing away. He was the chairman of the Census Committee, on which I served as the ranking Democrat for many years. I knew him most intimately and I can say without reservation that I never served with a more honorable, upright, conscientious gentleman in this House or elsewhere.

He was my friend and I believe he was the friend of every other Member of this body.

His memory will linger in our hearts. Peace to his ashes.

His life was gentle and the elements so mixed in him that nature might stand up and say to all the world: This was a man.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor of serving for years in this House and on the Committee on Banking and Currency with the distinguished gentleman whose passing we deplore. His character and ability were of the highest order. His patriotism was as broad as the Nation, the sympathies of his heart were as broad as humanity. He loved the truth, he loved his country, he loved justice, he was faithful and devoted to the loftiest conceptions of public service. He was a great American, fully worthy of the honors he enjoyed. He leaves a stainless record that will be cherished through the years. His death is a loss to his native State and to the Nation.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, it was my pleasure to serve on the same committee with the late Representative E. Hart Fenn, whose death we regret and mourn today. I found him a man of sterling character, a man of great energy, and a highly valuable man to the Republic and to his State.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 3743, the independent offices appropriation bill, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees:

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma, Mr. FITZPATRICK, Mr. HOUSTON, Mr. STARNES of Alabama, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. DIRKSEN, and Mr. CASE of South Dakota.

N. L. R. B.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the morning papers call attention to the fact that, although we have had industrial strikes in the motor industry in Michigan for more than 2 years, another strike—a strike brought on by a conflict between two factions of the U. A. W. A.—has thrown somewhere between 17,000 and 23,000 men out of work.

The vast majority of these men have no grievance whatever against the employer. Their one outstanding desire is to continue at their jobs, to remain at work. Nevertheless, because those who assume to lead them, to act as officials in the union, are quarreling over who shall collect and distribute the dues of the workers, a strike is called.

The employer, entirely innocent, is made to suffer and thousands of employees are deprived of their right to work. There is no justice in such procedure. There is no excuse for such action.

The National Labor Relations Board, the national administration, are to blame for this disgraceful condition of affairs. We have had industrial strife in Michigan ever since the 30th day of December 1936. It has been almost continuous and to this day the National Labor Relations Board has failed to take the action which it might so easily have taken to end this chaotic situation, which is harmful to everyone concerned.

When will this House proceed to consider and intelligently amend the Wagner law?

Let me digress now and speak for a few moments on the amendment to the bill now before the House, returning later to this strike situation.

In this bill, as so frequently before, the President forces us to "take it or leave it."

It has been the policy of the New Deal administration—and I make a sharp distinction between the New Dealers and the Democrats—to combine vicious legislation with either bills which it is necessary to pass in order that the functions of government may continue, or some bill introduced with a high-sounding title appropriating money for a worthy purpose, thus combining the good and the bad; and the minority, being unable to eliminate the bad, is required to swallow the whole nauseous, obnoxious dose.

The President very well knows that practically everyone in the country, as well as those in Congress, are fully prepared to vote any sums needed for adequate national defense. He knows better than anyone else that his policies have proven to be an utter failure; that his mistakes are becoming more glaringly apparent to the people as a whole, and, showman that he is, he now seeks to distract our attention from his latest freak sideshow by warning us that the cages in the menagerie, confining the ferocious animals, have become so weakened that we are in danger of being devoured or at least badly mangled, unless we prepare ourselves for defense.

Talking about aggressor nations, permitting Ickes and others to indulge in name-calling tirades, he has our whole Nation jittery.

Under the guise of defense he proposes measures and means, of which Army and Navy officers, best qualified to speak and who are charged with our national defense in time of war, do not approve.

In addition, to carry out his blustering braggadocio on the stage of world affairs, there is inserted in this bill what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] so well described yesterday as the initial outlay for the improvement of the national defense at Guam. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] said, Guam under no circumstances would be of material aid as an outpost for defense.

It will be but a source of irritation, a festering sore in our international relations. There is absolutely no excuse for beginning at this particular time to fortify it. The only apparent reason is to afford the opportunity to the President to use it for further bluffing purposes.

Apparently he is not only willing to "play politics with human misery," but he appears to be willing to engage in a name-calling, bluffing contest with Japan, with Mussolini, and Hitler, when every sensible thinking man knows that, if his bluff is called, the American people will either "eat crow" or send hundreds of thousands of their sons to die on foreign soil.

No Nero, no Napoleon ever had less regard for the welfare of his people than has this man at the present time.

Could a secret poll be taken of the House, it is quite likely that 75 percent of its Members would vote against the fortification of Guam. But party discipline, the sincere conviction on the part of a few that some incidental advantage might be gained from fortifying that island, may retain it in the bill.

If it is retained, the rest of us, although we honestly believe that its fortification tends to lead toward war, will be forced to vote for the bill as a whole, regardless of our convictions that millions of dollars will be wasted through it because, knowing the man in the White House as we do, knowing his vacillating policies, knowing that no one knows from day to day what he may do tomorrow, knowing that he has no regard for his promises, we dare not take a chance and leave our people unprepared for a war which he may aid in bringing to pass.

If millions of dollars be wasted because of the passage of this bill, it will be because of the President's instability, his inconsistencies, and his desire to "strut his stuff" on the stage of world affairs.

Time and again I have voted almost alone against the waste of the people's money; but for this bill I will be forced to vote, even though it retains the Guam item, for the reason that we have in the Executive Mansion at this time a man who so accurately fits the description of another President, uttered by Abraham Lincoln when he said:

His mind, taxed beyond its power, is running hither and thither, like some tortured creature on a burning surface, finding no position on which it can settle down and be at ease.

He knows not where he is. He is a bewildered, confounded, and miserably perplexed man.

The President is so perplexed, he has so completely lost sight of the fundamental rights which belong to American citizens here at home, that he permits thousands of honest workingmen to be deprived of the opportunity to earn the money not only to sustain them, to buy food, clothing, and shelter, the necessities of life, but to contribute toward the fortification of that outpost which lies 5,819 statute miles from San Francisco.

On July 5, 1935, the President approved the N. L. R. A., the purpose of which was loudly acclaimed to be to lessen the causes of industrial disputes which affected foreign and interstate commerce. He appointed a Labor Board. He patted the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, headed by his friend, LA FOLLETTE, on the back. He shook, in friendship, the hand of John L. Lewis, who turned loose his wrecking crews. He permitted his campaign managers to receive almost a half million dollars' contribution collected by levying tribute on the United Mine Workers, and in return he aided and abetted the communistic-controlled organizations in their assaults upon industry.

His Charlie McCarthy, Governor Murphy, acting in the interests of these communistic-controlled organizations, cost the taxpayers of Michigan millions of dollars and gave an exhibition of law defiance, disrespect for court orders, and approval of mob violence that has never before been witnessed in this country.

Murphy had the effrontery to go before the Senate committee, when he was appointed Attorney General, and claim that he had always been for law enforcement and against the sit-down strikes. This he did almost 2 years after, for 44 days, he had followed a course which indicated that he would not do anything to interfere with sit-down strikes, with the conduct of those Communists who were depriving citizens of their property and their liberty without due process of law.

He also presumptuously, apparently laboring under the impression that the people either do not read or cannot remember, made the absurd statement that the evacuation of the plants at Flint, the settlement of the sit-down strikes, were due to his efforts. As a matter of fact, after the citizens of Flint had endured and suffered under Murphy's methods for more than a month, they gathered themselves together and made it known to the Governor and his cohorts that law must prevail in Flint, and it was in view of their threatening action that the plants were evacuated.

Nor were the strikes settled. Not long ago Homer Martin made the public announcement that, although the unions had a contract with General Motors, there had been a thousand wildcat strikes. During the past 2 weeks Michigan police have time and again been called to quell violence caused by jurisdictional disputes among the members of the U. A. W. A.

For days the company has stood ready to bargain collectively with representatives chosen to represent automobile employees. The President of the United States, his Secretary of Labor, the National Labor Relations Board, are making no progress whatever toward the settlement of this great industrial strife which is taking place here at home.

Let me repeat what I said in the beginning, for the gravity of the situation will bear repetition.

The morning papers tell us that again at Detroit some 17,000 or more men are out of work because of the failure of the Wagner law and the National Labor Relations Board to operate intelligently and effectively.

Why is it that this Board has failed to call an election in the plants of the automobile manufacturers? Why is it that it has failed to hold an honest, fair election, so as to determine for that industry who shall be the representatives of the employees for collective bargaining? What is it waiting for?

Is it not fair to presume that the Board knows that if such an election were held the overwhelming majority would be against that faction of the C. I. O. dominated and controlled by the Communists, that faction which has contributed so liberally to the New Deal campaign fund?

Is it not true that the National Labor Relations Board, to use one of its own expressions, is a "company-dominated union"; is itself a "company union," a union under the control and domination of the New Deal chieftains?

How much longer will we, knowing that the Wagner law must be amended if industry is to continue to operate; if workingmen, about whose welfare we seem to be so solicitous, are to earn a livelihood, continue to remain inactive here in Congress?

What invisible force is it that is tying the hands of Congress; will neither bring from the Labor Committee a bill of its own nor report out the bill introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON]?

What has the Republican leadership to fear in this situation? There is no doubt whatever as to the sentiment of the country at large. It is all for the amendment of this law and for legislation which will not only protect the employer but which will give protection to the employee; which will administer the law fairly and in a judicial spirit.

This latest strike in Detroit proves once again the incompetency, the maladministration of Murphy, and the evident purpose of the N. L. R. B. to insist that, before men work they must pay tribute to Lewis, who, in turn, contributes to the New Deal.

NAVAL AVIATION FACILITIES

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4278) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDS. I rise to ask whether or not under the rules of the House there is any binding agreement as to a limitation of debate on the proposed Guam amendment to this bill, which is to come before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been furnished with a copy of the proceedings entered under this alleged agreement. It appears that there was at least a gentlemen's agreement among Members on the floor with reference to a limitation of debate on the Guam item, of 30 minutes, but the Chair is advised that no official order was made. The Chair will state, however, that he thinks, properly, that the proceeding heretofore has been to carry out tentative agreements made between the majority and minority leaders on a question of procedure.

Mr. RICHARDS. My only desire in raising the question is that I did not happen to be on the floor at the time, and I do not consider that I am bound by the agreement made, if the agreement was not made under the rules of the House, though if it were, of course, it would apply to the action taken whether I was present or not. It is my construction of the rules that that agreement could be made only in Committee and not in the House, by unanimous consent or otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The request with reference to the time of debate or the agreement, carried into an order, could be properly made either in the House or in the Committee of the Whole by unanimous consent.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I think the Speaker's interpretation is correct as to what occurred between the majority and minority leaders, as recorded in the RECORD. There was certainly a gentleman's understanding that this morning the debate would be confined to the amendment to eliminate the Guam proposal from the bill, and that there would be 30 minutes of debate, 15 minutes to be consumed by the majority and 15 minutes to be consumed by the minority. I think in fairness to the subject matter and in fairness to everyone those 15 minutes should be divided equally between those in favor of the amendment and those in favor of the item in the bill on both sides of the House. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the 15 minutes upon each side of the House be equally divided by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House between those for and those against the item.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDS. I reserve the right to object. I am opposed to the Guam provision in the bill and therefore would like to speak at least 5 minutes on the subject. The agreement as outlined by the gentleman from Georgia would give us only 7½ minutes on this side of the House on the part of those opposed to the item.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And 7½ minutes on this side of the House to be used by those in favor of the item.

Mr. RICHARDS. Will the gentleman agree to give me 5 minutes in opposition to this item?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. As far as this side is concerned, I am willing to give the gentleman the 7½ minutes, if he wants to take all of the time on this side of the House in opposition to the provision, the other 7½ minutes to be consumed by those of us who are in favor of it.

The SPEAKER. For the benefit of the RECORD, will the gentleman from Georgia kindly restate his request?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the 30 minutes be equally divided between those for the item in the bill and those against the item in the bill, relating to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SUTPHIN], and that the time be equally divided on the respective sides by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole between those for the amendment and those against the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, of course, I want to be a party to carrying out all gentlemen's agreements on any subject, but I was not here at the time that agreement was made. I want 5 minutes of this time in opposition to this bill. Will the gentleman give me 5 minutes?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. As far as I am concerned, the gentleman can have it. If I have the time, he is welcome to 5 minutes or 7½ minutes.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, as a matter of interpretation, I assume that the gentleman from Georgia means, when he says the time shall be equally divided by the chairman of the committee, he means the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Certainly; exactly.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, first, I would like to propound a question to the Chair, whether or not if the unanimous-consent request made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] were granted, would that mean that the House was then agreeing to a limitation of 30 minutes' time for discussion of this matter?

The SPEAKER. It would, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We have already agreed to that.

Mr. NICHOLS. In answer to the gentleman from Georgia, I think I understood the Chair to rule that there had been no official agreement by the House as to a limitation of 30 minutes' debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that there was no official order made upon that question. Therefore, it reverts back to the question of the tentative agreement made between the leaders.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, it seems to me that a limitation of 30 minutes in which to discuss this all-important problem is a very short length of time. I am frank to say to the Chair that I do not know what parliamentary procedure to pursue in order to give the House an opportunity to say officially whether or not it wants to be limited to 30 minutes in this debate. If I am not out of order at this time, I would like to move that the time for debate on this amendment be not limited at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma would not be in order.

Mr. NICHOLS. Then I shall object to the request of the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4278) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4278, with Mr. WHITTINGTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks the indulgence of the Committee to say that the bill has been considered with the exception of section 1, and that at the time of adjournment there was pending an amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SUTPHIN], who is now recognized.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTPHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. I presume the Chair has heard the parliamentary inquiry propounded in the House as to the limitation of time for the discussion of the Guam amendment. If I am not out of order, I move that the time for the discussion of the Guam amendment be fixed by the Committee of the Whole at 1 hour.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's motion is not in order, for the reason that no debate has occurred on the amendment and the gentleman from New Jersey has been recognized. The time cannot be fixed until some debate takes place.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WHITTINGTON). The point of order is sustained.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SUTPHIN. I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield, and the gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. President, in continental United States we have a coast line of approximately 6,000 miles.

On numerous occasions, when our Navy officials have appeared before the committee, I have questioned them regarding the defensive preparations which we have made along that coast line. They have all admitted that our defenses should be improved.

In this bill we are asking for an appropriation of $5,000,000 to improve Guam, more than 6,000 miles away from our coast line. That is approximately four times the distance from the eastern shores of North America to Europe. My friends, where do we get off, spending our money in the troubled Asiatic waters? When we invade the troubled Asiatic waters it may be considered to be meant as a provocative measure on our part. If you put your hand in a lion's mouth he may close on it sooner or later. I regret to disagree with my chairman on this measure, because I have always supported every defensive measure. I believe in making America impregnable to the attacks of any nation, but I can see no reason in the world why we should leave our coast lines and extend 6,000 miles to Asia.

I went to France in 1917. My good friend who spoke this morning, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER], was in my outfit at one time. I have seen men die for their country. I am never going to vote to send my boy or your sons to participate in wars on foreign soil. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, this is a serious matter we are considering here. What do you suppose we would think if Great Britain undertook to fortify Bermuda? Would we consider it an overt act, a hostile act? Think of these things, my friends. I believe we can avoid a great deal of trouble in the future if we adopt this amendment to strike out the provision for Guam. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SUTPHIN] be limited to 30 minutes, 15 minutes to be controlled by the chairman of the committee and 15 minutes to be controlled by the ranking minority member, the time to be equally divided on the respective sides by the chairman and the ranking minority member.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will not the chairman of the committee, my friend from Georgia, agree to an hour?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Let me say to my learned friend from Oklahoma that for 2 days the entire committee has devoted its time to debating this one item. It is the only controversial item in the bill. Every member of the committee and every Member of the House is thoroughly posted on every argument that can be made for or against it except probably they have not had the benefit of the technical knowledge of our learned friend from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. Now, let me say to my distinguished friend that I do not pose as a technician in this matter.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Neither do I.

Mr. NICHOLS. And I do not pose as having any secret knowledge of any fact that I am sure my friend the chairman of the committee does not have. Insofar as this question having been debated for 2 days, I have looked at the Record and have found much matter discussed during that time that did not pertain to Guam. The item is placed squarely before the House by this amendment, and I do not think the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs should object to an hour.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that no effort was made in the committee when the matter was under consideration in general debate to cut off anybody whatsoever. We have been free, frank, and candid and have let everyone give the country the benefit of his views.

Mr. Chairman, in the spirit of compromise, if it is satisfactory, I amend my request and ask for 40 minutes instead of 30 minutes.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will my distinguished and learned friend the chairman of the committee give me 5 minutes out of that time?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I shall be delighted to give 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the proposal as to time is agreeable so far as I am concerned, but I question whether it is wise to have the time controlled by committee members. It has always been the practice in the past to have the Chairman recognize Members when time has been limited.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am perfectly willing that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union may control the time.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, a number of us have desired to speak on this important matter but have not been allowed time; yet other Members have spoken twice. All who wish to be heard on this item cannot be accommodated in 40 minutes. Unless the time is further extended, I shall have to object.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I shall object. This is too important a matter upon which to limit debate—the question of war or peace.

Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this amendment be limited to 40 minutes, to be controlled by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Under the agreement the Chair will recognize Members on both sides of the aisle equally as between those for the amendment and those against the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will do its best in that regard.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I think it would not be amiss at this stage of the debate to get our geography a little straight on the question of Guam.

A great deal has been said by those opposed to this proposal. They have asked: What if Japan or some Asiatic power should fortify islands as close to continental United States as Guam is to Japan? Answering this inquiry let me say that since 1926 the Japanese Government have fortified and placed air bases the entire length of the Kuril Islands. These islands are north of the mainland of Japan. These islands are within 682 miles of the tip of the Aleutian chain in Alaska and are within 1,120 miles of Kodiak Island, the Unalaska base of this program.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

Mr. FISH. How far is it from any American city?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, yes, I do yield to the gentleman and will answer him that our most precious possession is Alaska, and there are American citizens living up there, too. [Applause.]

That is a fact which should be considered in view of the argument about the provocativeness of the Guam proposal.

Mr. Chairman, in listening for 2 days here to the gentleman from New York and to some of those on the opposition it might be believed that we were bringing into this House a founding child in the form of Guam. May I say to the gentleman from New York that the Navy maintained an air base in Guam from 1920 to 1931 and the bill providing for an air base in Guam was signed by Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover. We are not bringing in here a new policy. This is not new. The Navy has proposed Guam as an air base on many occasions. It is true that we are asking for more money, but we are asking for more money at a time when these improvements are consistent with aviation and its development.

In 1920 and in 1931 the Japanese Government was not doing anything in the Pacific. They were enlarging their military establishments at home. We have every reason to go ahead with the development of Guam that has gone on since 1920 under the administrations from Harding, on.

Mr. Chairman, this was merely an innocent proposal to begin with, although some may not agree with me in that statement. It has been heralded to the world, written up in Japanese papers, that the United States is going to fortify Guam. If we reject this proposal, Mr. Chairman, if you know the Japanese character like I know it, they will herald to the world that here is the greatest country in the world, when we protest against the dredging of a harbor in order to enlarge and enhance our air lines, backing down again, as it did in the case of the Panay incident. They will herald to the world that when the Imperial Japanese Government state they do not like this idea, despite the fact that they have armed the Kuril Islands during this period, and they will say to China and to all those yellow people who are now under their foot over there, that here again is a great nation that merely wants to dredge a harbor 1,600 miles from Japan but afraid to do so because it might provoke them.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is not the question of national defense a domestic policy? Would not the same argument apply against the building of any battleship? We are building up our national defense, having in mind potential enemies. This does not mean it is a threat to other countries. We are only concerned with our national defense, which is purely a domestic policy.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The gentleman is absolutely correct. May I say further that I do not think there is a man sitting in this House who wants to send his boy to war, but I think it is high time that we do give some consideration to America, American soil, and American defense. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, the bill before us proposes to authorize an appropriation of $53,800,000 for certain naval construction. The immediate question now under consideration is the adoption of the amendment to strike from the bill the $5,000,000 for the proposed improvement of the island of Guam. Because of the time allotted to me, I shall not have time to discuss this matter at length. I am opposed to fortifying Guam Island and the expenditure of the $5,000,000 for that purpose, and, therefore, I shall vote for the amendment striking this sum from the bill. I oppose this naval development on Guam Island for what I consider a number of good and sufficient reasons.

In the first place, the highest authorities of the Navy agree that the fortifying of Guam Island is not necessary in promoting our national defense.

We have established in Hawaii our greatest naval, military, and air base, and when the plans are completed in the Hawaiian Islands our naval, Army, and air base there will be by far the most powerful in the country, and perhaps equal to any in the world.

The Hawaiian Islands are located in the Pacific Ocean, approximately 2,400 miles from the California coast. Our foreign policy has been built up on the proposition that the Hawaiian Islands should be and are our outpost in national defense in the Pacific Ocean.

Now, the island of Guam is approximately 3,800 miles west of the Hawaiian Islands, and approximately 1,400 miles from the shores of Japan. Guam lies within and is surrounded by 98 islands under the control of Japan. These are not fortified. The proposal to fortify Guam has stirred up a lot of resentment in Japan and a great deal of unrest in our own country. Japan considers such action as a threat to Japan. It is most unfortunate that this proposal should be made when world peace is so much disturbed and there is so much talk of war. In our opinion, this $5,000,000 is only an initial expenditure at Guam Island. If it should be properly fortified, it would require the expenditure of about $150,000,000 more. It would be provocative of war between this country and Japan, and no one contends that this country could defend it against Japan in the event of war.

No navy or army could conduct successfully a major war with one of the great nations 6,200 miles from its shores. It simply cannot be done. In the case of any dispute between the United States and Japan they could take Guam Island, and then it would be up to us to spend, perhaps, billions of dollars and sacrifice many lives in an effort to retake it or submit supinely to the taking.

This Nation will have a deficit this year of approximately $3,000,000,000, and perhaps $4,000,000,000, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and the national debt then will be about $45,000,000,000. We must borrow the money to provide this $5,000,000 to improve Guam Island. I am opposed to borrowing the money for this purpose when, at the same time, we would be borrowing trouble.

There is no one on the floor of the House that contends that America could defend Guam fortifications 6,000 miles away from its shores.

Why create this discord between the United States and Japan, when in the event of war Japan could take Guam Island?

DANGER HERE—NOT OVER THERE

The President, in his recent message to Congress, devoted nearly all of it to foreign affairs, to dangers across the sea. He would have us believe that there is about to be another world war and we are bound to get into it.

The real danger to our country does not come from Japan or other countries in Asia, Africa, or Europe. The danger is not across the seas—it is here in the United States with our millions of unemployed, millions on relief, with continued increase in taxes, increased deficits, increased national debt, and the discouragement of agriculture, labor, and industry. This great army of unemployed and on relief and bad economic conditions and the threat to the credit of the Nation make up the real danger to your country and mine. [Applause.]

We should devote this money and other sums to the improvement of conditions in our own country and not spend unnecessary sums to provoke distrust among other nations.

FOLLOW WASHINGTON'S ADVICE

We heard read yesterday in the House of Representatives that wonderful document, Washington's Farewell Address to the American people, delivered in September 1796. He urged that we pursue a policy of friendship for all nations and entangling alliances with none—in other words, pursue a policy of neutrality. We have followed that policy through the years except we took sides in 1915 and 1916 and got into a world war in 1917.

President Roosevelt is pursuing the same policy that President Wilson pursued. He is taking sides in the controversies of the nations of Asia, Africa, and Europe. He now has aligned nearly half of the people of the world against the United States. This policy is bound to be hurtful and not helpful to the American people. He has caused, I believe, a substantial majority of the people to believe that we are drifting into another world war. A poll was recently taken of the Congress of Editors of the 48 States and District of Columbia. One thousand, one hundred and thirty-nine participated. One of the questions propounded was "Are we being eased into war?" Seven hundred and nineteen answered "yes" and 408 answered "no." Nearly two to one of the editors believe that we are being eased into another world war. The second question was, "Should the President promote military aircraft sales without War Department and congressional approval?" There were 225 "yeses" and 908 "noes."

We do not approve of the form of government in Japan, Italy, Germany, and many other countries, but we have no right to dictate their forms of government or pass upon their domestic matters. We certainly would permit no other nation to dictate to us our form of government or interfere in our internal affairs. Japan, Italy, and Germany have all assured us time and again that they have no designs whatever against the United States. Japan, more than 7,000 miles from our shores and with a navy only two-thirds as large as ours, could make no successful attack on the Hawaiian Islands or continental United States. We have a Navy larger than the combined Navies of Germany and Italy. They could not come 3,000 miles and attack us, and no airplane has yet been devised that could fly from Japan, Germany, or Italy and bomb the United States and return to its base.

Furthermore, Japan, Italy, and Germany are surrounded by powerful enemy nations. Is there anyone so foolish as to believe that they would leave their own lands and shores neglected to come to the United States and seek a quarrel with us? Is it possible the administration, in talking about foreign wars and foreign affairs, desires to take the minds of the American people off of their own condition?

We must devote more time to our own affairs. We must create pay rolls to take the place of relief rolls. We must encourage our idle capital and enlarge production in agriculture and industry.

If we fortify Guam and make it our outpost of defense, we must change our foreign policy and have an army and navy big enough to police the world and in that way involve ourselves in foreign wars and have our boys die on foreign seas and in distant lands.

No nation will attack the United States. We can keep out of war by being neutral. Let us pursue the even tenor of our own way—mind our own business—and then we can devote some of these billions to improve conditions in our own country.

Nations cannot make war without war materials. Last year there were exported about 12,000,000 tons of scrap iron. Seven million five hundred thousand tons of this went to Japan for armaments and shells. Those who know say but for this immense amount of scrap iron received from the United States, Japan could not have made a successful war on China. We also sent Japan great quantities of oil, gas, and other necessary war supplies. We sent millions of tons of scrap iron to Italy and Germany for armament purposes. If we are in so much danger from these countries, why do we continue to strip our own country of its scrap iron and other war materials and send it to these nations? Whatever advantage of trade we may receive for these war supplies will be many times overcome on account of the billions that we are spending for fortifications and increasing our Army and Navy.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, strongly believing in world peace and that this Nation should not enter another foreign war, I am unwilling to vote these millions of dollars to help provoke another war and at the same time borrow the money in order to borrow this trouble. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS].

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to disagree with my distinguished and able friend from Georgia, Mr. Vinson, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and, of course, I am not anxious to disagree with any member of that committee, and especially with those members on my own side of the aisle. However, this is a nonpartisan question. The Members on the Republican side are divided and the Members on the Democratic side are divided. The Republican members on this particular committee are divided and the Democratic members of the Naval Affairs Committee are not in accord on the question. I am not a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, but as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House I cannot help but have great doubts as to the wisdom of including the Guam provision in this bill. Its inclusion would inevitably bring about changes in our foreign policy fraught with danger to our beloved country. I am against it and I hope it will be stricken from the bill.

Mr. Chairman, it has been implied here by some that possibly President Roosevelt, the great leader of the Democratic Party, is in favor of this provision. If so, we have had no word to that effect. You will remember that on March 2, 1934, the President in delivering the only message he has sent to Congress on the subject of fortifications in the Far East stated that it is our aim and our purpose to withdraw from any fortifications and not to propose any new fortifications in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDS. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. It is said there is no intention to fortify this island, that the intention is merely to improve the harbor. I would ask the gentleman if he cannot see in this the danger that if we are merely going to improve the harbor we may be improving it for some nation over there to use against us later?

Mr. RICHARDS. I thank the gentleman from Mississippi. That is camouflage. Read the hearings and read the report. They reek with proof that this is the first step toward eventual fortification of Guam. The President of the United States has said there is no intention on the part of the United States Government to fortify the Philippines. Then, I would ask my friends on this side of the House, if that be true, how can the President or how can anyone consistently say that we should fortify Guam, because without fortifications in the Philippine Islands the defense of Guam would be absolutely impossible.

If you are in favor of fortifying a tiny island 5,000 miles from the United States in the name of national defense, vote to keep the Guam provision in the bill. If you believe, when you consult your common sense, that this island could be defended under any circumstances against a great eastern power, then vote to retain the Guam provision in the bill.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. RICHARDS. I am sorry, I cannot yield.

If you are in favor of repealing the Philippine independence law sponsored by the Democratic administration, then vote to keep the Guam provision in the bill, because if you are going to fortify Guam it is the forerunner of the repeal of the Philippine independence act. Guam could not stand a day without the Philippines on our side.

If you believe in an alliance with some foreign power, vote to keep the Guam provision in the bill. If you believe in imperialism, retain this provision. If you believe in giving evidence of aggressive designs on the part of the United States against eastern powers, leave the Guam provision in here.

But if you do not believe in that, ladies and gentlemen of the House—and I particularly appeal to my friends on the Democratic side of the House, because I am afraid someone will rise here directly and say this is a policy of the Democratic administration, although we have no evidence that this is in line with any foreign policy of this Democratic administration—if you believe in arming for defense but not in spending one dollar to go into foreign seas, 5,000 miles away from home, to fortify a position we cannot hold and which is not necessary for the defense of our country, then strike the Guam provision out of this bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MAY moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, a great American once said, "Speak softly and carry a big stick." I want to revise that statement and say that my idea is that the time has come when we should "speak plainly and carry a big stick." The trouble has been we have not had the stick. Last year France and England were in the same position.

I have heard comments on the floor of the House about this country and that country. I pray today that my country may always be at peace with all the world, but my country, at peace or at war, first, last, and all the time. The way to have peace is to have our word respected.

The question presented here is plain and simple. There are men on the floor of the House—and I do not question their good faith; there are many of them, of course—who feel that the fortification of Guam might be considered provocative by a certain other country. This bill does not propose or provide for its fortification. They talk about Japan being dissatisfied with what we do on Guam. Whose business is it, and when did it ever become the business of any other country in the world what America does with her own property and her own money?

Today we, as Members of the House of Representatives, ought to be standing shoulder to shoulder, man to man, without a dissenting voice on this question. Why should we listen to the protest of Japan or any other country about why or whether we should fortify Guam? Did not Japan disregard every sacred obligation of the treaty of 1922? Have they not closed the "open door" in China and told America to go straight to hell, in effect? Have they not fortified islands within 900 miles of the American shore? Have they not deliberately shot down into the sea an American vessel flying the American flag, the Stars and Stripes, and after doing that did they not assault our sailors? Have they not violated our rights in many places, and then sought to satisfy us with an apology? Oh, yes, Mr. Chairman, the time has come when we must be either Japanese or Americans. [Applause.] The time has come when American representatives of the bravest, the most patriotic, and the freest people on the face of the earth must take their stand for or against this country. The time has come when, I say to you, as far as I am concerned, and all I have in this world—my life and my liberty with it—the American frontier is wherever in this world the Stars and Stripes floats. [Applause.]

We face today this question: Which side will you serve? Which side do you choose? As far as I am concerned, we choose today to fortify our own islands whenever and wherever we please, and let the consequences follow, and to say to the world that it is a peace move; that we propose to have our flag respected in Guam and Manila, in Hawaii and in Panama, and in our every island possession, and that the might and the power of the American Government and its people are behind the proposal. [Applause.]

I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I have to be a Japanese in order to oppose, as a Member of the House of Representatives, a part of a bill which provides for the fortification of the island of Guam. My distinguished friend from Kentucky says that now is the time to be Americans or Japanese. Well, I yield to no man alive in my patriotism to these United States, under whose colors I marched for long months in 1917 and 1918. Mr. MAY or any other Member of this House is any truer American than am I.

Whose business is it, says my distinguished friend from Kentucky, what America does with her possessions? Probably the business of no foreign land, but it becomes important business of the United States what we do with her possessions [applause], and when the time comes that doing something with a pin point in the outlying Pacific Ocean—if by doing that thing we might jeopardize the peace of the people of this Nation, then it is the business of the United States to do that thing only after mature consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I am sorry I cannot yield.

The word "fortification" is used by gentlemen discussing this subject when they refer to Guam, but in sane moments they tell us this is not a fortification, this is only the dredging of a harbor.

No one in this House is more interested than I am in the development of aviation, both foreign and domestic. I am perfectly willing that landing fields on water and land at Guam should be provided for civil and military and naval craft. I am not afraid that dredging the harbor at Guam is going to be a threat to Japan; I am only afraid of what will happen after the harbor is dredged at Guam and when the time comes really to fortify Guam. I am not afraid of this first step; I am afraid of the steps that will follow after this step is taken.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield only for a question.

Mr. RICHARDS. Does not the evidence show that high naval officials expect to come back later and ask for more money to fortify Guam?

Mr. NICHOLS. I am not sure, but that is my understanding.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. BARRY. This is supposed to be a defense item. If a were were actually started, would not this be a $5,000,000 contribution to Japan, inasmuch as we could never defend Guam?

Mr. NICHOLS. In my judgment, the gentleman is right, and here is another reason I am against this proposition of dredging this harbor at Guam. Whatever money we spend there, if we ever have trouble with Japan, and God forbid that that should ever happen—but if we do have trouble with Japan, this is an outpost that we set up out there that we cannot possibly defend without the expenditure of millions and millions more of American dollars, and if we did defend it successfully we still have not accomplished anything; and if you put out there on that island a contingent of American soldiers and if the Japanese want to declare war on the United States the best way in the world for them to force us into war would be to sneak up on that island sitting out there by itself, not as big as the palm of your hand, and with Japanese troops and with the Japanese Navy kill some of our soldiers and we are immediately thrown into war, when there was never any sense of being there in the first place.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Does the gentleman believe that the fortification of this outpost is indispensable or absolutely necessary to our scheme of national defense under present conditions?

Mr. NICHOLS. Why, of course not, and no gentleman supporting this Guam fortification will get on this floor and say that it is absolutely necessary and indispensable to our scheme of national defense.

No one has pointed out material benefit that will flow to the United States by the dredging of the harbor at Guam and no one will argue that the mere dredging of the harbor could in anywise materially increase our ability to defend the United States; and since this is the situation, does it not impress you, ladies and gentlemen of the House, that since the admitted benefits that will flow to the United States are so few that the great possible hazard by reason of a psychological condition that might grow up in the minds of the Japanese by making this first move toward the fortification of Guam, agree that the hazards far outweigh the benefits that could flow from this venture?

For myself, I am anxious that I do nothing which would give, first, my constituency and, second, my children reason to be able to justly accuse me of having done something while a Member of this body that contributed to conflict between this country and any other country, and certainly not Japan. As long as I am a Member of this body I shall never knowingly do anything which will encourage our Government in going to war. I shall never vote as a Member of this body to any more send the blooming youth of this land on to a foreign soil to spill their blood in battle.

Therefore, in this connection, I warn that we should proceed cautiously in doing anything that could be considered by any foreign power as a direct thrust from this Government toward another government, lest in the future we be compelled to over a long period regret acts of ours here done in haste.

Let us not spend this $5,000,000 to dredge a harbor around a pen-point island 6,000 miles into the Pacific from the western coast of the United States. Rather than that let us take the $5,000,000, spend it for the relief of the hungry, the unemployed, and the underprivileged of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I was very glad to hear the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS] state so emphatically a few moments ago that this is not a partisan measure, and that statement has been made by others, including the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee and the ranking Republican member of that committee.

This is an administration bill, it is true, but as a Republican member of the Naval Affairs Committee who is supporting the bill and each of the several items in the bill, I am glad to be able to say that never at any time in the 3 weeks of continuous hearings on this bill before the committee has one word been uttered which could possibly be construed as partisan or political. [Applause.]

There is honest difference of opinion on both sides of the aisle as to whether the Guam item ought to be included in the bill, and those who believe it should be included, as well as those who believe it should not be included, are sustaining their contentions from what they conceive to be patriotic motives alone and not from any motive of partisanship.

I think there has been a good deal of confusion here, and, as I stated yesterday on the floor, it would have been of great advantage to all had the entire membership of the House been able to hear the statements of the gentleman from California [Mr. IZAC] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS], both of them naval experts, upon this item of Guam. Those two statements contained the whole argument in support of the proposal to develop the harbor at Guam. To me the case is entirely clear and the argument entirely convincing.

Many people are of the opinion that developing the island of Guam, as provided in this bill, will be extending our line of defense. There is no testimony in any part of the hearings which would support such opinion. The development of the harbor at Guam will not extend the Aleutian-Hawaii-Panama line at all. It will simply implement it, but most decidedly it will help us defend that line in event we should ever be called upon to defend it.

Guam is on the flank of Japan and, in the opinion of all the naval experts who have appeared before our committee, the reason the harbor of Guam should be made available for use, not only of commercial aviation and navigation but of our own naval seaplanes as well, is that from that point we will be able to scout an enemy fleet in event of an emergency. Unless this harbor is improved to the extent provided in the bill it can be used neither by the new type commercial clipper ships, which are now being built, nor by our own naval plans. The improvement, therefore, is valuable and desirable both for commercial and naval aviation.

The argument that the development of this harbor would be offensive to Japan may be effectively answered by two statements. The first is that if it is desirable, either from a commercial or military angle, or both, to make this improvement then it should be done whether Japan likes it or not. I should hate to think the American people had reached a state where they deemed it proper to ask the consent of a foreign nation for the development of one of our own possessions. The second answer is that there is nothing in this proposal which could possibly offend Japan. We have already authorized a naval base in Alaska much closer to Japan than Guam is, and Japan has made no protest. Japan has developed harbors for naval purposes in the Marshall Islands, which are much closer to Hawaii than Guam is to Japan, and we have made no protest. In my opinion, the argument that we should not develop Guam because Japan may not like it is ridiculous and groundless and indicates that those who make it have not thought the subject through.

Here is the principal advantage we will receive if we make the Guam harbor available for the use of our naval planes: We will be able from Guam to give information to our own fleet, wherever it may be placed in a time of emergency, that the enemy fleet is maneuvering. We can warn our fleet where the enemy is and what he is doing. That alone may assist us to a very great degree in the winning of a war, if war should come to us from the Pacific. It may even be a decisive factor in the successful prosecution of that war.

It has been said that Guam cannot be defended. That, of course, is true, but it is beside the point. No one expects Guam to be defended for any length of time, and no one has said Guam could be defended against an attack in force. It may, however, by making the facilities there available for our own naval planes, be the means of holding up an attack on the United States or our outlying possessions for a week or even several weeks, and there are circumstances which you can all imagine wherein if we could hold up an attack on Hawaii for even 1 day, the expenditure at Guam would be a thousand times justified.

Now, those are the reasons, and all the reasons that have ever been given for the improvement of the facilities at Guam. And these facilities are not fortifications. That ought to be clear to everyone, because it was thoroughly thrashed out in committee and has been fully explained here on the floor. The statement of The Assistant Secretary of the Navy is definite upon that point. He stated to our committee, in answer to a number of direct questions, that this is an independent project, that it does not contemplate fortification, that it is earnestly to be hoped the international situation will never be such that the Navy Department may deem it necessary to recommend to the Congress the fortification of that island, and he declared most emphatically that the Department had no such intention at the present time and that no fortification of Guam is contemplated. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it would be right for me to take up much of the time of this House today, after talking for 30 minutes yesterday. Hence I shall make my remarks brief.

I wish the speeches of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MORR] had been made earlier in these discussions. Then perhaps we could have more plainly understood the "bushwa" we have been listening to ever since this question first came up.

When the naval aviation facilities bill came before the Naval Affairs Committee for hearing, 14 bases were recommended. The last on the list of recommendations was for the base at Guam; it was hidden away down at the end. But, Lord bless us, from the very first day of the hearings it was a case of the last being first; Guam was the one controversial question. Every witness who spoke on behalf of the Guam project said that the improvements were not being proposed for military purposes.

But when the gentleman from Kentucky spoke a while ago there was fight in every word that he said. Likewise, there was fight in what the gentleman from Oregon had to say. I know that many Members of this House would favor a fight whenever necessary, but I do not believe the great majority in this body believe in unnecessarily bringing on a fight.

FORTIFICATION OF GUAM A WAR GESTURE

Should this country go forward with these plans for the fortification of Guam, such an indiscreet act would immediately be accepted by one of the great aggressor nations of the world as a war gesture. Japan would undoubtedly point her finger at us and say: "You are the aggressor. You came more than 6,000 miles to fortify an island right on our shores."

If this project at Guam is as necessary as its proponents indicate, we will have to find Presidents William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft, Woodrow Wilson, Warren Harding, Calvin Coolidge, Herbert Hoover, and even our present administration for the past 6 years, guilty of laches for failing to take notice of that grave necessity years ago. They did nothing and proposed nothing for Guam. Suddenly, out of the dark, somebody comes out at this late day and says: "You must improve Guam; you must fortify Guam; and you must do it without delay."

Why must we do without delay now that which was not found necessary before? I say it amounts to telling the American boys, "It is necessary that you go to foreign shores and fight."

The American people do not want to fight anyone on the face of this earth. This is not a peace measure. It is a threat, and a threat that will take us into war if we do not stop it now.

In conclusion I want to say this: Some Members profess they do not see any military implications in this proposal. If they do not, then I will tell them that there is not a 15-year-old schoolboy in the United States today who does not know that this is a step in the direction of war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, I realize that in the 3 minutes allotted to me there is not time enough to discuss an all-important subject such as this. I am inclined to vote for this $5,000,000 for Guam, because I am getting sick and tired of having the Japanese sink our boats, insult our soldiers and our Army and Navy officers and our citizens, and then say, "We are very sorry." I am getting rather tired of finding them in the Caribbean Sea at this time, when we are having maneuvers, and I understand that two Japanese officials are vacationing in Puerto Rico at this particular time. I remember that one of our great Presidents said that the way to maintain peace is to speak softly and carry a big stick. Up to the present time we have been employing soft words, but not carrying a big stick. We see England in a difficult predicament now because she has been practicing disarmament and peace while other nations were arming, so it is my inclination to say to Japan that Guam is our island and that we will do with it as we darn please, regardless of what they think, but, on the other hand, just for the simple reason of provoking thought I want to ask a question.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. No; my time is too short. I understand that Admiral Leahy has said that we would have to have a great increase in our Navy to protect Guam.

I understand that Admiral Hepburn has said it would take $150,000,000 to fortify Guam. It is my thought that we gave the Philippines its independence because we realized it was indefensible. Now, if that is true, why would we go over among 1,400 Japanese mandated islands and set up fortifications on Guam? I would like to ask that question, Mr. Chairman, simply to provoke thought.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The bill, in the first place, does not call for any fortification whatsoever.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes; but the Japanese and I disagree on that. You may say we did not give up the Philippines because we could not defend them, but I think we did. I also think we are fortifying Guam, and if we are not doing it now, what we are doing will lead to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] is recognized.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MAAS. If it is not taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. MAAS. I do not yield, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, we are making an awful, awful fuss about nothing. I really cannot understand why all this great excitement about whether we dredge a harbor in our own territory or not. Why all this talk that this is going to offend Japan? In the first place, what difference does it make if it does, if we have a right to do it and we should do it? We should not be concerned about the necessity of appeasing public opinion somewhere else when it could not possibly lead to war, whether it offended them or not. But it has not offended anybody in Japan. All the excitement about this thing and all the talk about the danger of leading to war is right here in this House. There is not any of it in Japan. There is no excitement in the Parliament of Japan about our dredging the harbor of Guam. The Navy Minister reported to the Japanese Parliament that not an additional nickel is going to be spent in Japanese military or naval preparations because of what we may do in Guam. So that has nothing to do with it.

The whole excitement seems to be because the Navy is going to dredge this harbor. Many Members in opposition to Guam have said that if the Navy did not dredge the harbor they would not object to it at all. Apparently then, this very project is perfectly all right if it is a river and harbor project. Well, the island is a naval island. It is run by the Navy. Every bit of public works done on the island of Guam has been done by the Navy. There is no civil administration in Guam. The Governor is a naval officer. The dredging, therefore, is properly done by the Navy, as everything else in Guam is done by the Navy. All this talk about foreign implications in a proposal to defend some of our own territory. We are not going to put fortifications in Guam, but we are in a sorry state in this country when we are willing to say to the world that we will not hold inviolate any American territory anywhere. We have come to a low state when we are willing to appease the dictators by surrendering American territory without even a fight. Oh, I wonder what our forefathers who created this Nation would say about us, when we have come to the point that we are willing to surrender sovereign American territory without even a fight, because when you deny yourself the right to use any of your territory, you are surrendering it. Are we going to join hands with France and England in a program of appeasement to the dictators? They had to do it because of the people in France and England who would not permit them to prepare to defend themselves, and so they lost a war without even a fight in their own defense. Oh, yes, we can save our American boys from a fight. We can prevent this country from ever going to war, but at the price of surrender without even a fight; at the price of degradation; at the price of the loss of the American standards of living; at the price of slavery, which will be worse than war. [Applause.]

That has never been the American policy, and I hope to God we are not going to create it so today. Even England and France in their degradation had not sunk so low that they were willing to appease the dictators by giving away their own territory. Oh, they gave away territory, but it was somebody else's territory. [Laughter and applause.] Are you willing to give away American territory? Oh, this is all nonsense and bunk, this talk about dredging a harbor in Guam being a cause for war. The island is being dredged for two purposes.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I cannot yield in this short time I have. The island of Guam, with a dredged harbor, fortified or not, is not essential to the defense of this Nation. We will win a war if we get into one, but I will tell you if you Members of Congress today vote to prevent the dredging of a harbor which will permit the training of our pilots in the Pacific, which will permit the utilization of that harbor for our scouting planes so that we may know of the possibility of any enemy movement toward us, you are going to take a terrible responsibility upon yourselves, perhaps that of the loss of millions of American lives that will be needlessly sacrificed thereby. This island has commercial value in time of peace. It is essential, absolutely essential that we dredge this harbor if we are going to continue to operate our commercial airplanes across the Pacific. It is, on the other hand, highly desirable that we have it for training purposes for our Navy airplane pilots so that they may become familiar with those waters, air and weather conditions, and have available a suitable place from which scouting may take place if international conditions become critical.

Such activities will offend no one, unless some nation has hostile designs upon us.

Most of this great flurry of excitement about Guam offending Japan and being provocative is a result of deliberate pacifist agitation in this country.

Why is there always this violent protest in America itself every time a proposal is made to improve our own defenses?

Why is there this constant opposition to an adequate defense program in this country?

Defenses are never a threat to the peace of the world. Defenses cannot be provocative. Defenses cannot be objectionable to foreign countries, unless such foreign countries plan hostile activities against us. Therefore, are we not very foolish to be influenced by such protests?

You do not invade foreign lands with defensive scouting planes. But such scouting planes may make possible preventing a hostile navy from invading our territory by warning us in advance that such a foreign navy is on its way toward us. If we do not have such information, our Navy may be caught in a most unfavorable situation for defense against an attacking fleet; and our Navy under such circumstances may suffer defeat, even annihilation, resulting in a long disastrous war for us, with perhaps ultimate defeat.

I do not believe the United States can now be successfully invaded. I believe that even without Guam we will ultimately win a war if one is waged against us, but it may be a very long and tragic war, with the loss of untold millions of American boys, the destruction of American cities by aerial bombardment, and ruthless bombing of American women and children.

If war be forced upon us, let that war be fought as far from our shores as possible.

Let us provide every defense against invaders that we can.

By the way, when did defending one's self become considered as aggressive? When before has anyone ever interpreted defense as provocative? Such suppositions are utterly ridiculous. They show an astounding lack of understanding of bare fundamentals.

Even if we were to fortify Guam—and we are not—how could this be considered a threat to Japan, unless Japan has sinister plans in our direction in the Pacific?

We could not invade Japan with a fortified island. Yet even an unfortified Guam, with a properly improved harbor, might prevent Japan from attempting to attack Hawaii or the Panama Canal. Because scouting planes operating in Guam would detect a movement of the Japanese Navy in our direction and would put our fleet commander in possession of such vital information instantly. This would permit the American Navy to meet an oncoming fleet under the most favorable conditions for the success of such a naval engagement.

The success of such an engagement by our Navy would end the war and make unnecessary even mobilizing our Army.

This is so well known in Japan that the mere presence of American naval scouting planes in Guam will tend to reduce to the minimum even the danger of hostile activities upon the part of Japan. Under such circumstances I do not believe that the Japanese will risk the danger of the destruction of their fleet by an open engagement with ours.

The whole success of any possible naval attack upon a vulnerable spot in our defense system would depend upon the element of surprise and secrecy.

Developing a harbor at Guam will do more to prevent such a surprise move than almost any other single thing we can do.

If $5,000,000 is spent on Guam, and it serves to reduce the likelihood of an attack and perhaps to prevent it, it will be the cheapest expenditure we have ever made in our history.

To sum it all up, the development of a harbor at Guam is essential to continued American trans-Pacific commercial aviation; it cannot, by the wildest stretch of the imagination, be construed as a threat to Japan or anyone else; it will provide a most valuable training stop for our naval aviators, who are the eyes of the Navy; and lastly, it will tend to stabilize conditions in the Orient, rather than to upset them, by making a naval attack upon the United States a very dangerous undertaking in the Pacific, by destroying the chance for a surprise naval attack. This in itself reduces to a further minimum the general danger of war in the American hemisphere, because no European powers would nor could successfully invade any part of the Americas without a joint simultaneous attack in the Pacific.

Therefore, improving the harbor at Guam is distinctly a defensive measure in the interest of preserving peace. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] for 5 minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to use all of the time allotted me. Of all the problems that will come before this Congress, none will outweigh in importance the question of our national defense. I voted for the Army defense bill the other day, and I hope to be able to vote for this bill today. With the light that I have, I cannot vote for the bill with the item concerning the island of Guam included.

None of the members of the Naval Affairs Committee contends that Guam is a national-defense project. We are assured that it is not, but that it is a commercial project, and that the dredging of the harbor, as provided in this bill, is for the betterment of commercial and air navigation. The chairman of the committee and, I think, all those familiar with the facts, who do not permit their emotions and their sentiments in behalf of the development of the branch of the military service in which they are interested to run away with them, have repeatedly impressed upon us that this is a "commercial" project and not a "national defense" proposal. I think the only exception to this position, so far as the debate shows, was the argument made by the gentleman from California [Mr. EATON], who pointed out that there was military value and advantage in spending this $5,000,000 in the development of this harbor at Guam. All, however, are agreed that there is no thought at the present time of fortifying the island and attempting to make it a real national-defense asset. I cannot escape the conclusion, therefore, that in these times, when the Government is spending more money than it takes in, and when we must borrow this $5,000,000 if we do dredge this harbor, my constituents do not want me to vote for the project. I say they do not want me to vote for the project; that is, unless it is essential to our national defense. And I repeat that there is no evidence, and I believe no contention, that this development is essential to our national defense at this time. Whether or not the development of this harbor should be considered by the Rivers and Harbors Committee or by the Naval Affairs Committee is beside the question for the moment. I repeat that if this is not essential to national defense, then we should eliminate it from the bill.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to inject this little thought: If the Japanese could so easily take it, as portrayed, why build it for them? This brings to mind some lines by Ogden Nash I read a while ago:

How courteous is the Japanese;
He always says, "Excuse it, please."
He climbs into his neighbor's garden
And smiles and bows and begs his pardon.
He bows and smiles a friendly grin,
And calls his hungry family in.
He smiles and bows a friendly bow:
"So sorry! This my garden now."

[Laughter.]

Mr. MICHENER. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for his contribution. However, injected into the bowels of my speech, I hope that your thoughts will not be diverted from the more serious aspect of this matter.

This is not a partisan question and should be decided entirely without prejudice, without feeling of emotion, without sympathy. The action we are about to take should be based on sound argument and logic, having in mind but one thing—that is, requisite, adequate defense.

The development of this harbor for commercial purposes may be most laudable. Yet there are many things that may be desirable which the country cannot afford at the present time. I doubt if anyone here would contend that the development of a harbor in the island of Guam for commercial purposes ranks in importance in any sense of the word with many of the economic problems now confronting us in the homeland. The taxpayers cannot pay for all things that are desirable. We must do first things first.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. How would the people of the United States feel toward any foreign power which would undertake to fortify Bermuda, Nassau, or Cuba?

Mr. MICHENER. Just exactly as every Member of this House would feel. They would regard it as an indication that that foreign nation intended to go farther in the Western Hemisphere than it had gone in the past—in short, as an act of aggression.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Should this bill pass carrying the Guam item, would the gentleman think it was a national-defense item, an item that eventually would get us into war because we are preparing for it?

Mr. MICHENER. It might be very difficult to convince anyone that a project in a national-defense act was not for national defense, regardless of what we called it. I am afraid of the consequences.

Mr. Chairman, no objection whatever from any source throughout this more than 2 days of debate has been raised to any part of this national defense bill other than the beginning of the fortification of this island of Guam. Now, mighty few folks back home know where the island of Guam is. However, if they will take their world maps and start with San Francisco and go 5,400 miles to within 1,500 miles of Yokohama, Japan, they will there locate this small island 30 miles long and 6 miles wide. It came into the possession of this country as a result of the Spanish-American War. It is not so far distant from numerous other islands owned, controlled, and, we understand, to some extent fortified by Japan. The island is inhabited by approximately 20,000 persons.

It is generally conceded that our national defense requires an off-shore line of protection, and this begins with the Aleutian Islands way up yonder opposite our Alaskan shore, and extends down through Hawaii, the Samoan Islands, and the Panama Canal. Hawaii is 2,063 miles from San Francisco, and Guam is 3,337 miles west of Hawaii. In other words, we are going west of our present fortifications in Hawaii, 3,337 miles into the front dooryard of Japan, and there we are dredging a harbor, ostensibly for commercial purposes, but which can be fortified by carrying the improvements further. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] asked a very pertinent question when he inquired as to what our country would think if any other nation should attempt to develop or fortify a naval base on any of the many islands not farther from the United States in the Western Hemisphere than Guam is from Japan in the Eastern Hemisphere. You and I know what they would think. This Congress would be up in arms at once. The whole country would be satisfied that Japan had started to prepare for a war on the United States, or at least to be better prepared to meet the eventuality of any such conflict. For this country to take the Guam step at this time just does not make sense if we are trying to avoid war, remain at home, attend to our own business, and provide for defense to repel the attack of any aggressor. That is what the American people want, and they want no more. We can all talk about hating war and not wanting war, yet such an indiscreet act as going into the Orient and asserting our military power may bring us to the threshold of war. Why take the chance if it is not essential to our naval defense?

Many of us are very much opposed to the attitude of aggressor nations. We disapprove most strongly of Germany's attitude in Czechoslovakia, of Italy's attitude in Ethiopia, and of Japan's attitude in China. We do not believe in these things, yet our people are not willing and would protest against our taking any action in the Congress that would bring us into war with any of these nations, even though we are in sympathy with one side or the other in these respective conflicts. I just wish that every person in the country would reread George Washington's Farewell Address, to which we listened on February 22. It fits present-day conditions exactly, and I am sure that I am not in error when I say that it speaks the sentiment of an overwhelming majority of the American people right now.

This proposed legislation—eliminating Guam—finds its genesis in the act of May 17, 1938, providing that the authorized strength of the Navy in naval vessels be increased by 20 percent, and in naval aircraft by 50 percent. Understand, this legislation we are considering today does not contemplate building additional battleships, cruisers, and airplanes. The purpose is to implement the additional naval vessels and the additional naval airplanes already provided.

I voted against the authorization of the additional battleships when the act of 1938 was up. I should do likewise today. However, I was one of the minority. The battleships and all the rest have been authorized and are going to be constructed. In these circumstances it would be not only unwise but decidedly silly to refuse to make this new, expensive equipment efficient. The purpose of this bill is to give maximum and necessary efficiency to our national defense, having in mind the act of 1938.

This bill embarks upon no new policy unless we decide to fortify Guam. All the experts tell us that the items in this bill, excepting Guam, are necessary for our national defense. I realize that Army and Navy officers and the Military and Naval Affairs Committees in this House are honest and sincere, but are apt to become enthusiasts and advocates rather than maintaining the judicial attitude that the House must assume in passing upon this great question. I have no quarrel with anyone who does not agree with me in these matters. We can all be patriotic, honest, and sincere, and yet not all agree on procedure, so far as our national defense is concerned. We are all agreed, however, that we want no more war; that we do not want to send our boys to any other country to fight other people's battles; and that we will spend whatever money is necessary, and provide whatever defense is necessary, to save our American democracy and protect our homes.

There have always been two groups in this body, when the expansion of our Navy is up for consideration, honestly differing in what essential national defense is. I have always insisted that we cannot definitely determine what adequate defense is until we know what our foreign policy is. I notice that Admiral Hepburn, in the hearings before the committee, stated that the naval authorities could not outline a permanent and static line of national defense so long as we have no permanent and static foreign policy. I do not see how we are going to have an absolutely definite foreign policy. Therefore, details of a national defense, so far as our far-flung interests are concerned, is a matter that cannot be at one time disposed of for all time.

Debate is about concluded and within the next few minutes we shall be called upon to cast a vote which in the minds of many of us may mean trouble, if not an excuse for war, in the Orient. The responsibility is ours. The consequences will inure either to the benefit or the detriment of our people. In this frame of mind, and in this solemn hour, let us not be swayed from what our best judgment and conscience tell us to do, regardless of whether this is an administration measure or an antiadministration measure. Our only rallying point when the roll is called should be around a desire for national defense and nothing else.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has thus far recognized all gentlemen requesting time except one. The Chair now recognizes for the remaining 5 minutes, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] that there is no reason whatsoever for unseemly excitement about section 1 of this bill. If I wanted to justify this statement I would merely read the minority report. Every argument I would have to meet for this bill is met by the language of the minority report. The minority report states:

We recognize the right of the United States to establish military facilities in Guam.

We are attempting, and the committee is attempting, no such thing as that in this bill.

The minority report further states:

We recognize and approve the necessity of harbor improvement provided by this measure for the purpose of aiding commercial trans-Pacific aviation. Were this work done by the Army engineers after the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had passed a bill authorizing it we would have no objection to it.

In other words, the minority says it would be a fine thing if we did this with our right hand, but it is a terribly dangerous thing to do it with our left hand. [Applause.]

For the life of me I cannot understand why gentlemen on both sides of the aisle get excited, because we want in some fashion, in the most peaceable way in the world, to use a possession of ours. If the Army engineers under a bill brought in by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors were dredging a harbor at Guam it would be a fine thing. The minority would endorse it 100 percent; but if we do the usual thing, bring it in as a part of a naval bill—and this work is to be done under the direction and supervision of the Navy Department—then it becomes a very dangerous thing and is likely to take us into war with Japan or somebody else.

Mr. Chairman, in this Hall one morning at 3 o'clock a. m. I listened to a call of the roll that sent us to war. I pray God that such a time may never come again. One of the things that forced me to vote as I did that morning was that the German people under their leadership at that time believed that England, France, Italy, and the others allied with them would never be strong enough to subdue Germany. If America in 1914 and 1915 had been prepared, as we intend to prepare this year and in the years that are to follow, I believe, as one of the great columnists of this country stated a few days ago, that Germany would never have provoked a war at that time.

Mr. Chairman, this involves the expenditure of only a few million dollars. If we had expended a billion dollars or $2,000,000,000, and if England and France had expended a few billion dollars before 1914, it would not have cost the United States $26,000,000,000 to get out of that war, because, had we spent that money at that time, we would not have been in it.

As to this appeasement matter, may I say that the United States of America covets not a foot of land that belongs to anybody else on the face of this earth. We want no war with anyone, because they have nothing we want; but when it comes to a proposition of American policy, foreign or domestic, I do not care what you may say about implications, being a citizen of the proudest Nation on the face of the earth, I do not intend by my vote today to imply that I am in favor of asking any other nation in the world about America's foreign or domestic policy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time on the pending amendment has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SUTPHIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VINSON of Georgia), there were—ayes 145, noes 129.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers. Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. VINSON of Georgia and Mr. SUTPHIN to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 193, noes 164.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on page 2, line 6, to strike out "$52,000,000" and insert "$47,000,000."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Page 2, line 6, strike out "$52,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$47,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, on page 2, line 12, strike out "$52,000,000" and insert "$47,000,000."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Page 2, line 12, strike out "$52,000,000" and insert "$47,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: On page 2, line 12, after the word "exceed," strike out the following language:

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as authorizing the expenditure of more than $5,000,000 at Guam.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Page 2, beginning in line 12, after the word "exceed," strike out the remainder of line 12, all of line 13, and the words in line 14 through and including "Guam."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WHITTINGTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4278) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 98, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments agreed to in the Committee on the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Sutphin amendment and on the amendments that I offered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUTPHIN: Page 2, line 5, after "$2,800,000," strike out "and Guam, $5,000,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 205, nays 168, answered "present" 3, not voting 57, as follows:

 Mr. Rabaut with Mr. Somers of New York.
 Mr. Dingell with Mr. Disney.
 Mr. Casey of Massachusetts with Mr. Houston.
 Mr. Creal with Mr. Flannery.
 Mr. Parsons with Mr. Goldsborough.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague, the gentleman from New York, Mr. PIERCE. If the gentleman were here, he would have voted "yea." I voted "nay." I therefore ask unanimous consent to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request in connection with my colleague, the gentleman from New York, Mr. CULKIN, who had to leave on account of a funeral. If the gentleman had been here, he would have voted "yea." I voted "nay." I therefore ask unanimous consent to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recorded as voting "yea."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening, and failed to hear his name?

Mr. GROSS. I had been called into the hall, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify if he was not in the Chamber.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I was in the Chamber, but not listening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify under that statement.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I cannot qualify, as I came in too late. May I answer "present"?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot vote "present" if he was not present when his name was called during the roll call.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I was present during the first roll call.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I believe my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania misunderstood the statement of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again interrogate the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Was the gentleman in the Hall of the House, listening, and failed to hear his name called?

Mr. GROSS. Yes, Mr. Speaker, on the first roll call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recorded as voting "yea."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies and votes "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. RANDOLPH. Had he been present, he would have voted "nay." I voted "yea." I therefore ask unanimous consent to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gross] to state on interrogation by the Speaker that he was in the Chamber on the first roll call but was not present on the second roll call. My understanding of the rule is that in order to qualify a Member must answer in the affirmative that he was present in the Chamber and did not hear his name called, and this applies to both roll calls. The roll is called a second time for the specific benefit of Members who failed to hear their names on the first roll call.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this comes too late. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has already voted.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am not making an objection to the gentleman's voting. I have no objection to that; but a question of the precedents is involved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is important to state the correct principle in view of the point raised by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Chair is of the opinion that the Chair improvidently stated the provisions of the rule. The rule requires that on a yea-and-nay vote a Member who was present but failed to answer on the first calling of the roll is not entitled to be recorded after the completion of the second call if he absented himself from the Chamber during the latter call.

The Chair thinks it probably is too late now to prevent the gentleman from Pennsylvania from voting, but for the purposes of the record the Chair thought it proper to make that correction.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. In view of the statement by the Chair and the fact that delay would probably prevent action—and I am not addressing myself to the rights of the House—could not the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gross], whose vote has not been recorded in accordance with the rules, ask unanimous consent to withdraw his vote?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, may we have the vote on the amendment announced?

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order before the announcement of the vote is to answer the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gross] could submit a unanimous-consent request to that effect, but the gentleman has not seen fit to do so.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my request for a separate vote on the three other amendments to section 1 and ask that they be considered en bloc.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, on the passage of the bill I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 368, noes 4.

So the bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELLER. When the bells ring and a Member gets here on the second roll call and does not hear his name called, is he then to be ruled out from voting?

The SPEAKER. The supposition is that all Members are present on the floor at all times, and the rule so provides.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. MICHENER, Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky, and Mr. PEARSON asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks in the Record.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record by including the speech of our colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] delivered at the Lincoln Protective Club in Louisville on February 11.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

REORGANIZATION OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill providing for a reorganization of the executive branches of the Government, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record at this point by printing a brief analysis of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the bill contains three titles—the first provides for reorganization of the executive branch of the Government, the second for budgetary control of independent commissions, and the third for the appointment of six administrative assistants to the President.

TITLE I—REORGANIZATION

The President is to investigate and determine what changes in the executive branch are necessary to reduce expenditures, increase efficiency, consolidate agencies according to major purposes, reduce the number of agencies by consolidation, abolish agencies and functions not necessary for the efficient conduct of the Government, and eliminate overlapping and duplication (sec. 1).

The President is to prepare a reorganization plan providing for the transfers, consolidations, and abolitions of agencies and functions which he finds necessary to accomplish any one or more of the purposes above specified. He is also in the plan to provide for such incidental matters as fixing titles, transferring property, records, personnel, and appropriations, and winding up abolished agencies. Appropriations transferred may be used only for the purposes for which originally appropriated. The plan is to be submitted to both Houses of Congress while in session. The bill also requests the President to state what reductions in expenditures are likely to result from his recommendations (sec. 4). There is no limit on the number of plans which may be submitted or the number of reorganizations which may be contained in a single plan.

The President's power to include reorganizations in a plan extends to every executive agency of the Government (sec. 2) except the following: Civil Service Commission, Coast Guard, Engineer Corps of the United States Army, Federal Communications Commission, Federal Power Commission, Federal Trade Commission, General Accounting Office, Interstate Commerce Commission, National Bituminous Coal Commission, National Labor Relations Board, Securities and Exchange Commission, United States Board of Tax Appeals, United States Employees' Compensation Commission, United States Maritime Commission, United States Tariff Commission, and Veterans' Administration. In these cases the plan can provide for transfer of agencies and functions to them, but the plan cannot provide for reorganization within them or the transfer of any agency or function away from them. The function of preparing estimates of appropriations by such agencies may, however, be transferred. Further limitations prohibit the abolition or establishing of any executive department or transferring all the functions of or changing the name of an executive department (sec. 3).

The reorganizations which the President specifies in his plan become effective at the end of 60 days after the plan is submitted to Congress. If, however, a concurrent resolution of the two Houses is passed within the 60-day period, which states that Congress does not favor the plan, the reorganizations do not take effect. Such a resolution must relate to a whole plan; it cannot disapprove a particular transfer or abolition or class of reorganizations. If Congress adjourns sine die prior to the expiration of 60 days, a new 60-day period begins to run with the next session.

Section 7 of the bill provides that existing orders, regulations, suits, laws, and so forth, in effect with respect to a transferred agency or function shall be effective with respect to the agency to which it is transferred.

Section 8 provides for impounding of appropriations unexpended by reason of the title.

Under section 9 a 1-year preference in reemployment is given to employees who are dropped as a result of a reorganization.

No reorganization is to take effect unless the plan in which it is specified is transmitted to Congress before January 21, 1941—section 11.

Part 2 of the reorganization title provides a set of rules for the consideration of concurrent resolutions of the two Houses which do not favor reorganizations specified in a plan. These rules make it possible for a majority in favor of such a resolution in either House to secure a vote on the merits without being prevented by filibusters or parliamentary technicalities. These rules may be changed by either House at any time.

Title II requires that Budget estimates of the various independent commissions and boards must be submitted through the Bureau of the Budget and the President as in the case of other agencies.

Title III authorizes the appointment of six administrative assistants to the President.

COMMITTEE ON LABOR

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor may continue its hearings on tomorrow while the House is in session.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentlewoman from New Jersey consulted the minority members of the Committee and are they agreeable to the request?

Mrs. NORTON. I have not consulted them, but I think they will be agreeable to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I think I must object unless the minority members of the committee have been consulted.

Mrs. NORTON. I think the minority members are just as anxious to continue the hearings as we are and I do not believe the gentleman will find there is any objection on their part.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentlewoman from New Jersey is so persuasive that I shall accept her word for it at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by including therein a speech made by me on July 4 last.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alaska?

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF VOTE

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, in order that there may be no further embarrassment or any question about the matter I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my vote on the recent roll call.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the vote recorded by him on the recent roll call on the bill just passed may be withdrawn. Is there objection?

Mr. McGRANERY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McGRANERY. I object, Mr. Speaker.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute. Is that agreeable to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRISWOLD], who has a special order at this time?

Mr. GRISWOLD. That is agreeable to me, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to give due notice that the Treasury is going to ask soon for an increase in the limit of the national debt from $45,000,000,000 to $50,000,000,000 or more. A dreadful situation our Government is finding itself in.

All we have been doing at this session of Congress has been appropriating money. I want to ask you where all this money is coming from. You are going to wreck this Nation if you do not stop appropriating money. You should pass legislation that will put the 12,000,000 unemployed men in this country back to work. The most serious question we have confronting the American people today is getting men back to work. Congress fiddles and Rome burns. All you are thinking about is appropriating money and spending it lavishly, if not squandering it. This is the only thing in the mind of this administration. They are not paying any attention to the legislation that we should adopt. Change the Wagner Act, change the Social Security Act, cut down regular running expenses of government 25 percent, eliminate half of our Government bureaus, and we will restore confidence in the American people, and they will soon find jobs for our workers and happiness will come to all. Try it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

(Mr. MAY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested by the officials of the National Press Club to announce that Saturday evening has been set aside as Congressional Night. A number of the Members of the House are to appear at the club and all Members of the House are requested by the Press Club to be present at that time.

A superquestion contest will be conducted with the Seventy-sixth Congress represented by Senator ELBERT D. THOMAS, of Utah; Senator WARREN R. AUSTIN, of Vermont; Representative SAM RAYBURN, of Texas, majority leader; and Representative ROBERT LUCE, of Massachusetts.

The fourth estate will enter a team of distinguished caliber.

This contest will be on a Nation-wide N. B. C. network from 9:30 to 10 p. m.

Also a glittering galaxy of freshmen Members of the House and Senate will be presented, under the 5-minute rule, for talks and other features, including Representative HARVE TIBBOTT, of Pennsylvania, a baritone discovery, songs; Representative LINDLEY BECKWORTH, of Texas, who is 25 and the youngest Member of the House; Representative ROBERT J. CORBETT, of Pennsylvania, who is 33, and the youngest House Republican; Representative JOSEPH W. BYRNES, Jr., of Tennessee, son of a famous father, and Representative STEPHEN BOLLES, of Wisconsin, veteran newspaperman and publisher.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to place in the RECORD the names of those who will appear on Congressional Night at the Press Club.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so simply to ask the majority leader a question. Will the gentleman from Texas tell us what the program is for tomorrow and Monday?

Mr. RAYBURN. Tomorrow will be general debate upon the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill. Monday is District day, which will take, I think, about 30 or 40 minutes, and it is the purpose then to go on back to the appropriation bill and complete it, and then bring up the conference report on the disagreement of the two Houses on the deficiency appropriation bill. On Wednesday we may call one committee on the calendar, and after that we will take up the War Department appropriation bill and try to complete it next week.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The conference report is liable to come up on Monday next?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Then either Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. RAYBURN. I told the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] that in all probability it would come up, but some matters have arisen since then, so that I think it will probably go over until a later time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on the completion of the special order today already granted, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of barter agreements.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including a radio address delivered by the Honorable John Napier Dyer, of Indiana.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a speech I made incident to the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Lake Erie.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a resolution introduced and passed by the House of Representatives of the State of Indiana.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Wyoming.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a few quotations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from California [Mr. ELLIOTT] was absent today during the vote on the Guam matter on account of illness. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be granted leave of absence on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under special order, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRISWOLD] is recognized for 20 minutes.

STIMULATION OF PRIVATE INDUSTRY

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago a very significant statement was issued by the council of the American Federation of Labor meeting at Miami, Fla. The statement said:

Private industry and business generally should be stimulated so that the facilities of production may be increased and millions more working men and women may be employed.

When such a statement is issued by labor it shows very clearly a changed attitude on the part of the public toward capital and industry. The bitterness the public held a few years ago against capital and industry has now receded. We are in a position, with proper legislation, to again put our unemployed back to work. This means that we can now pass legislation and further public opinion toward the encouragement and promotion of industry and the man who would establish a business and employ labor. The time is ripe for action. It is going to be demanded more and more by the public and expected from its legislators.

The introduction at this time of a bill in Congress designed to encourage and promote industry and the employment of labor in industry would be most opportune. It can be done by repealing or withholding many of the new laws which tax, regulate, and hamper the free exercise of initiative and business ability. The revival of our Nation's industry is now the crying need.

The overwhelming majority of the people of this country would like to see legislation enacted that would start the Nation on a road forward to fresh individual enterprise. This Congress can pass legislation that will give security in permanent private employment and a livelihood for people from honest labor rather than from dole work or the charity box.

We want industry to come back. We wish industry were back to furnish employment, but up to the present time we have not had the courage to introduce or pass legislation designed to bring it back.

Previous to 1929 and the beginning of the long depression we are still in, industry and employment had reached a position we now look back to as "peak prosperity."

In 1929 the attitude of all legislative bodies and the public in general was favorable to industry. Free factory sites were offered, and the cities and the general public took an active interest in every commercial establishment. The savings of a great majority of the public were invested in the stock of local and national concerns. In 1929 this country reached the stage where not only did the public wish to own stock but felt in the ownership of that stock it would eventually become wealthy. Industry grew and prospered and labor had employment. The investors had reached the point where they forgot whether the stock paid dividends or not. They thought only in terms of the stock market. "Paper profits" furnished a credit that allowed them to live beyond their means, and they ceased to labor. When the end came to the "land booms" and "oil booms" we had the "black October" of 1929.

It is not human nature for men to blame themselves for mistakes they may have made, and when the general public was faced with a tremendous loss because of the speculation in which they had indulged they turned against every form of industry in which they had previously overinvested and encouraged. The farmer, the laborer, and the home owner became innocent victims of the general depression. This has always been true in all depressions through which this country has passed, regardless of who may have been responsible.

Immediately there followed a period in which every employer of labor was condemned and industry itself was accused of every conceivable crime. We passed laws investigating, regulating, and crippling every industry. We had unemployment insurance, liability insurance, minimum wages, maximum hours, and other legislation, and we said, "Let industry pay the bill." Socialistic schemes by the National and many State Governments were advanced and became a constant threat of competition to business by the Government itself. This policy crippled every big business. Small business, without the necessary reserves, was killed. New industry could not be born. Is it any wonder that industry could not take care of our raw materials and our labor, for this is possible only when new industry is born and small industry does grow?

The general public under these conditions was indifferent and refused to own stock or aid in the establishment of new business. Millions of men were thrown out of work and Congress was faced with the demand for the appropriation of money to take care of their actual needs.

The fundamental causes of the depression have now run their course. The bitterness toward capital and industry has now receded. We still have millions of unemployed, but our animosity toward the employer of labor has decreased and the pendulum of public opinion has already swung back.

Every depression in the world's history has meant extreme ideas, unsound legislation, and impossible short cuts. Such ideas live and have their being only when sane, sound, and sensible legislation seems to falter. The fallacy that buying power could be created without labor has been allowed to run its course. The borrowing and spending by the Federal Government of huge sums of money to be dribbled through the hands of workmen on "made jobs" to increase buying power has been tried. Extreme pension legislation has been and is still being considered. Before the most powerful committee of this House appeared last week a man who firmly believes that forced spending would lead the people of this Nation into a new land of milk and honey.

The American people are right now in a position where they have tried all the experiments they wish. They want to see policies and practices which from the beginning of time have always been considered fundamental put into practice. I want to review some of these fundamentals, so that they are clearly before the minds of those who have the immediate welfare of this Nation in their hands.

We pride ourselves on being the wealthiest Nation in the world. We believe we have—and the figures prove we have—a higher standard of living and more comforts and conveniences than any other nation. Wealth is the multiple creation of goods mankind desires, and a nation's wealth is determined by the amount and number of useful articles produced. Labor produces all wealth, and only when labor is properly employed in the production of necessary goods can this Nation or any other nation achieve real prosperity. [Applause.]

Idle or unemployed men must be supported by the labor of those who work.

The demand for the products of the farm and factory go hand in hand with the ability of labor and management to produce. The ability to produce and the desire and means to purchase have always gone together. Production and consumption are one and the same thing. Employment means good times. Unemployment means hard times. Depressions occur when men have no work. [Applause.]

There is no accurate figure on the number of unemployed but it is probably around 10,000,000. Up to the present time no legislative effort has been made to put the men back to creating wealth in private employment.

Money is a means of measuring the amount of goods produced or labor employed. Gold has a value because of its commercial use and the amount of labor necessary to produce it. Money of itself cannot feed or clothe, and only as it expresses true value for labor or goods is it of use to us. It only takes the place of scales or the yardstick in commercial transactions. If the yardstick is to be changed or the scales tampered with, they immediately lose their value. The rapid or forced exchange of money does not increase wealth but only tends to destroy or depreciate the value of money and the confidence of people in it. When money ceases to be an accurate measure, it also loses its value.

From much that has been said we have been led to believe that production and consumption were two separate and distinct things. This is not true. The labor that produces has the buying power to buy what it produces. Only when labor is partly employed must the laborer share his returns with the unemployed; likewise, excessive taxation decreases the fruits of labor. The power to produce and the will and desire to consume go hand in hand. Production and consumption, I repeat, are one and the same thing. If we have a surplus of one kind of goods, we must also have a shortage of another kind of goods. Our so-called surpluses are not the result of too much labor but rather the result of the improper division of labor. [Applause.] If we allow industry to be crippled, then the raw products that supply industry accumulate, and we call them surpluses. If a bridge is destroyed on the line, labor is idle on each end until the damage is repaired.

All this country has now that was not here when the white man came represents the profit of this generation, or the generations that have gone before it. All our progress represents profit. If government, by taxation and borrowing, takes a sum equal to the profit of a community, that community must stand still or mark time until profits rise or the tax load is decreased. A city cannot grow except through profit of the people and industries in it.

Government was created by the people for their protection. Sometimes it goes wild and reaches out and strangles those who support it, and lean on it for protection. It may bind enterprise and industry with regulation, taxation, and restrictions on capital and freedom to operate until the hands of free enterprise are tied. When free enterprise struggles to rise, the government may add fresh fetters and ever-increasing demands for more revenues.

The taking of money by taxation or borrowing from one class and giving it to another class does not increase buying power. It may transfer buying power, but cannot increase it. Buying power can be made only by production. The more we produce, the more we can buy.

Legislation to benefit one class at the expense of the general public does not add to the total wealth, or if extended to many classes, does it benefit the class itself. National wealth means general employment of all classes.

At times during the depression our so-called labor-saving machinery has been the subject of much debate. Such machinery does not save labor, but rather multiplies it. From the garden hoe to the steam shovel each is made to multiply labor. The only reason we enjoy privileges, luxuries, and many of the things we now call necessities, is not because we work harder than our forefathers did, but because we have been able to use machines that multiply the labor we do.

Natural resources, like labor-multiplying machines, multiply labor. Our oil, coal, and waterfalls create power that is used only to multiply labor. The fertile soil multiplies the farmer's labor into larger crops. This Nation has wonderful natural resources, and the resources of the country, when combined with the labor-multiplying machinery that we have, and the labor of the people, will again, as it has in the past, make the American home and standard of living the highest in the world. [Applause.]

Industry combines our natural resources, our labor-multiplying machinery, and our labor. Industry may be large or small. In 1929 there were over 210,000 factories, of which over 7,000 were family operated. The farmer combines the natural resources of soil and labor-multiplying machinery with his own labor and must also be classed with industry. Industry is this Nation's greatest asset. It has made this Nation the great nation it is. It deserves and should have from our Government every consideration and care toward its fostering and promotion.

We have traveled 10 years in a depression and listened to and tried a lot of wild schemes that our sober common sense told us would not work. While on every hand, industry, one of the greatest gifts this Nation has, was allowed to stagnate and rot for the want of encouragement and fair treatment. There can and will be a return to prosperity only when we put industry and labor back to work.

What must we do?

First we must restore confidence in the Government itself and confidence in the Government's attitude toward the capital invested and to be invested in industry. An honest and sincere effort must be made to balance the Budget by refusing every appropriation not necessary to carry on the orderly functions of government. New works and new projects, publicly financed, must not be considered until the Budget is balanced. Eventually the Budget must be brought to balance, and we all realize it. Why not make a desperate effort and start doing it now?

The great majority of the people of this Nation are opposed to the excessive expenditures of this and preceding Congresses. Must we shut our eyes and blindly spend until the people rise up and send down a new Congress pledged to balance the Budget? I appeal to my colleagues in this House to vote to put the Nation's Budget in order.

Taxation must be lowered and the burden so lightened that the employer of labor is encouraged. A light tax over a greatly expanded industry will yield the same revenue as a high tax on a small and crippled industry.

Profit of all kinds, and particularly the profits of industry, must flow into new and enlarged plants. Give industry a chance, repeal the excess-profits tax.

Capital must constantly flow into industry. All the industry we now have was built by capital. Turn the flow of capital into industry by creating a friendly attitude toward it on the part of the Government.

We must exempt new industry and new employment in old industry from the Wages and Hours Act for 3 years. The unemployed get no benefit from the act now. Let us give them a job first.

We must withhold the National Labor Relations Act from new business for the same period. Labor cannot bargain collectively until it has employment. Let us provide that employment.

We must relieve industry of the burden of social-security taxation for a period of time. Let us take the load off the animal's back until we get it on its feet.

Mr. Speaker, I am offering the same program that was followed, perhaps unconsciously, in making this Nation the great Nation that it is. I am offering a program that will restore the farmers' market and prices, bring business to the small businessman, and provide employment for labor in industry. I am asking for its immediate and sincere consideration by the Members of this House. [Applause.]

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHEPPARD). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Speaker, I want the RECORD to show that I was here during the debate on the Guam proposition and voted with the tellers, but was paged by a constituent and went out into the hall at the time the vote was taken, and I missed the vote on the roll call on the Guam amendment. Had I been present, I would have voted "no."

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of the special orders and the legislative business of the day I may be permitted to address the House tomorrow for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order heretofore made the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOSER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Speaker, I crave the indulgence of the House on this first occasion of my arising under a special order. I believe it is well known to the membership of the House that I spent a long time in the classified civil service of the United States and that I attained my eligibility in an open competitive system of examination for the purpose of determining merit, and desire to preserve for the youth of our country the same opportunity that was mine under a statute written on the books and signed by President Cleveland, before I was born. I ask unanimous consent that I may include in my remarks that statute of the United States Code.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOSER. Grover Cleveland, staunch advocate of a merit system for determining eligibility for Federal employment, and whose administration enacted the civil-service law set forth in the United States Code, title 5, 633, provides as follows:

1. Competitive examinations. First. For open competitive examinations for testing the fitness of applicants for the public service classified on January 16, 1883, or thereafter, or to be classified hereunder. Such examinations shall be practical in their character, and so far as may be shall relate to those matters which will fairly test the relative fitness of the persons examined to discharge the duties of the service into which they seek to be appointed.

2. Selection of officers, etc., according to results of examinations. Second. All the offices, places, and employments so arranged or to be arranged in classes shall be filled by selections according to grade from among those graded highest as the results of such competitive examinations.

The situation that confronts us now, and to which I have heretofore voiced my opposition in the Committee of the Whole, relative to the determination of merit on the part of a system of examinations that have sprung up into existence under the Civil Service Commission, is one administered solely for the purpose of circumventing that law to determine merit, which is written on the statute books to which I have referred. My attention was directed to an article which appeared in the Washington Herald-Times on Monday last, entitled "Control of Public Service Again Shifts More Tightly Into Hold of Minority Politico-Professor Group," by George D. Riley. I ask unanimous consent to insert that article in the RECORD at this point as a part of my address.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONTROL OF PUBLIC SERVICE AGAIN SHIFTS MORE TIGHTLY INTO HOLD OF MINORITY POLITICO-PROFESSOR GROUP

Evidence that into the hands of a select group of Republicans is being delivered the world's biggest business—the United States civilian service—and all its ramifications into the city, county, and State branches has just been supplied more definitely than ever by the President.

Avoiding senatorial confirmation for his nominee, the President has chosen Frederick Morgan Davenport, who got out with the Hoover administration, now to be the kingpin in the new personnel set-up. Republican Congressman—Professor Davenport is blanketed into the classified service without examination and thus becomes member and chairman of the council of personnel administration. This group will control the official actions of all personnel directors.

Davenport likewise is president of the Rockefeller National Institute of Public Affairs, which group has been working into preferential jobs hand-selected "apprentices," which almost immediately step into important jobs in large measure merely on the say-so of what Professor Davenport and the Rockefeller fraternity have said about them. Louie Brownlow, who cooked the reorganization dish so decisively crashed by the Congress last session as holding the ingredients of further one-man control, also is a member of this Rockefeller outfit. Republican Secretary of State (under Hoover) Henry L. Stimson is another trustee, as well as Mr. Hoover's Commissioner of Education, George F. Zook, in addition to others.

In addition, Brownlow has returned the courtesy Davenport has shown him by naming Davenport as trustee in his public administration clearing house get-up. Appointment of Davenport bears the appearance of another Brownlow brown study.

In 1936, among other years, $80,000 of Rockefeller money was appropriated for Davenport's N. I. P. A. In the same year, and in other years, Brownlow's outfits likewise were getting Rockefeller money. Rockefeller money also is being used to investigate Department of Agriculture.

Professor Davenport once represented the Thirty-third District (New York). He was classed as an ardent dry (1930), and became a target for the antiprohibitionists, at which time Arthur M. Hyde, Hoover Secretary of Agriculture, made an address in Davenport's defense, at the same time defending the Hoover policies.

All Davenport has to do to become a full-fledged civil-service employee and dominating figure to control, as chairman, the powerful Council of Personnel Administration, is to indicate "his acceptance of the appointment herein authorized" and he's still got the job.

Some observers believe the Republicans are looking ahead to the time when the New Deal is washed up and when control of the public service is returned to them. However, this is not necessarily a tenable view, for it is the Republicans who now no longer hold office into whose hands such power is being reposed.

Only recently the President chose another Republican, Prof. Leonard D. White, to decide what professional standards we shall have. He also appointed William H. McReynolds, regarded as a close friend of former Republican Senator Reed Smoot. Upon these two shoulders will rest in the final analysis who is who and what is what. And, like Professor Davenport, Professor White also is a professor of political science. Professor Davenport is in his seventy-third year. We find nothing in his background to betray actual experience in operating so powerful a combination.

Before the battle over the reorganization bill, Brownlow et al. proposed that a board of seven be chosen to monitor the proposed one-man administrator. However, when the bill was prepared, such proposal was strangely missing. Now it would seem that we still will have a board of seven of another type, and in addition another board (the council) to tell Civil Service Commission what it shall do—or, rather, to do what it desires to do—and the Commission will learn of the council's policies and action whenever the public learns of them.

Thus, it seems to us, comes another step in the partitioning of the public service under the sway of important money and of the professorial domination.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SABATH, indefinitely, on account of death in his family.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1102. An act to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, February 24, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

H. R. 4489. A bill for the relief of Erma B. Bull; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee:

H. R. 4490. A bill for the relief of Arthur D. Sullivan; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WELCH:

H. R. 4491. A bill for the relief of Joseph John Mullin; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1311. By Mr. BURDICK: House Resolution J of the Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly, State of North Dakota, February 21, 1939; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1312. Also, Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 106 of the Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly, State of North Dakota, February 21, 1939; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1313. By Mr. CURLEY: Letter of the Conference of Mayors and Other Municipal Officials of the State of New York, disapproving Senate bill 1265, to establish a Department of Public Works; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1314. By Mr. HALLECK: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Logansport, Ind., favoring legislation for the control of the motion-picture industry and urging hearings thereon; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1315. By Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON: Petition of M. W. Davenport, Midlothian, Tex., favoring House bill 2316, extending classified civil service to clerks or assistants in certain post offices of the third class; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

1316. By Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY: Petition of the New York State Conference of Mayors and Other Municipal Officials, disapproving Senate bill 1265, to establish a Department of Public Works; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1317. Also, petition of 250 residents of Greater New York to the President and the Congress of the United States, urging (1) the rejection of any program of "investing in prosperity" through the Government continuing to spend enormous sums, which it has not and cannot raise by taxation and which since 1932 will by June 30, 1939, have added some $20,000,000,000 to the national debt, while some 20,000,000 of our people are living, in whole or in part, on Government pay or relief and many more millions are sharing indirectly in Federal subsidies of one kind or another—in the 9 fiscal years ending June 30, 1939, the national debt will have risen by about $25,000,000,000 from approximately $16,000,000,000 in 1930, the post-war low; (2) for the rejection of any program of armament beyond those additions to our military strength that may be necessary to protect our own vital interests and the political independence and territorial integrity of the nations of the Western Hemisphere—the Monroe Doctrine; and (3) for the rejection of any proposal to play the role of world policeman; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1318. By Mr. KEOGH: Petition of the Pulaski Citizens' Club, of Brooklyn, N. Y., concerning Senate bill 281; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

1319. Also, petition of the art department, public schools of Worcester, Mass., concerning the Larrabee bill (H. R. 3517); to the Committee on Education.

1320. Also, petition of the public library of Evansville, Ind., concerning the Larrabee bill (H. R. 3517); to the Committee on Education.

1321. By Mr. LEAVY: Petition of the Senate of the State of Washington, introduced by Senator Roberts and adopted February 16, 1939, directing the attention of Congress to the vulnerability of the State and the north Pacific coast to attack and, in fitting recognition of the observance of National Defense Week, urging the Federal Government to so increase defenses in this region as to render impossible the invasion and occupation of any portion of this strategic area by a foreign power; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1322. By Mr. MUNDT: Petition of the South Dakota Senate, known as Concurrent Resolution No. 10, petitioning Congress to enact legislation correcting certain objectionable features of the present method of surplus food commodity distribution and which will permit distribution of said commodities to persons found eligible and in need through the regular commercial channels of trade by the issuance of purchase orders upon merchants and business establishments now operating in South Dakota; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1323. Also, petition of the South Dakota Senate, known as Concurrent Resolution No. 9, petitioning the Postmaster General at Washington, D. C., to bring about the issuance of a stamp commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of statehood in South Dakota; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1324. By Mr. MURDOCK of Utah: Joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Utah on the proposed supplement to Cuban trade agreement; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1325. By Mr. PLUMLEY: Petition of eight citizens of Poulney, Vt., and vicinity, favoring enactment of the improved General Welfare Act (H. R. 11); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1326. By Mr. ROUTZOHN: Petition of 2,000 members of the Farmers Freedom League of America, seeking repeal of the Compulsory Crop Control Act of 1938 and the banning of importation of farm products to the United States; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1327. By Mr. SCHAEFER of Illinois: Petition of Local No. 74, National Federation of Post Office Clerks, East St. Louis, Ill., M. M. Bosworth, secretary, urging favorable action of Congress on House bills 3937, 4093, and 3812, which authorize improvement in working conditions for postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1328. By Mr. SCHIFFLER: Petition of Latimer L. Bradley, chairman, committee of the First Baptist Church, Grafton, W. Va., urging that ministers be excluded from the provisions of the proposed amendment to the Social Security Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1329. By Mr. SECCOMBE: Resolution submitted by Blanche Milligan, president, and Minnie Milligan, secretary, in behalf of Townsend Club, No. 1, Gnadenhuetten, Ohio, with a membership of 200, memorializing the Congress to adopt the Townsend national recovery plan bill (H. R. 2); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1330. By Mr. TENEROWICZ: Resolutions of the Detroit Division, No. 222, of the Order of Benefit Association of Railway Employees, endorsing the railway legislative program submitted by the President's committee; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We praise Thee, Almighty God, for the Son of Man, who revealed the Father's heart to the children of men. When we ponder His words, touch His raiment, and catch His whisper, the more complete and useful are our lives. We thank Thee that the fountain of life is very near all believers. He will fill us with vitality and cleanse us from all sin. Blessed Lord, persuade us to seek Him. Though the path at times may be rough and steep, checkered with toil and care, Thou wilt quicken the spirit with soft and silent refreshment; Thou wilt bless and inspire with conscious power. O Father, wonderfully fix the limits of human frailty. May we pass today in sound reasonableness, assured peace, and in the quietness of hope, which is our strength and bulwark. May the Great Teacher be present, who is the power of God and the wisdom of God. In His holy and eternal name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 4011. An act to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

TREASURY-POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. LUDLOW, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 4492) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 98), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4492) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate may run throughout the afternoon without limitation, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4492, the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill, 1940, with Mr. BOEHNE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 40 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in bringing before you today the bill making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year 1940, I wish first of all, as chairman of the subcommittee that prepared the measure, to acknowledge my sincere debt of gratitude and appreciation to the splendid gentlemen with whom I have the honor to be associated on that subcommittee.

To me our association has been delightful. We have had mountains of work to perform, but the congeniality and good fellowship that have characterized all of our relations have minimized the grinding effects of toil. Fate has brought us together accidentally in the grueling work of our committee circle, but if I had the choice of my companions with whom to serve now and henceforth forevermore, I would select EMMET O'NEAL, of Kentucky; BURRWOOD DALY, of Pennsylvania; GEORGE JOHNSON, of West Virginia; GEORGE MAHON, of Texas; JOHN TABER, of New York; J. W. DITTER, of Pennsylvania; and CLARENCE MCLEOD, of Michigan, and I would thank the Giver of all good things if He would just continue to allow us the services of our very efficient clerk, Jack McFall.

I say with much satisfaction that there is no influence in control of our subcommittee except the influence of counsel and reason, and there is but one yardstick by which our judgments are guided, and that is the yardstick of what we believe to be best in the public interest. And it is with consummate pride that I make another statement unusual in legislative annals, namely, that every one of the hundreds of decisions which we have been called upon to render has been a unanimous decision, concurred in by all of the members of our subcommittee.

WE PARK OUR POLITICS IN THE ANTEROOM

We bring to you no disagreements. We have had much discussion over many important items, always with mutual respect for each other's views and always with a final meeting of minds. Politics never enters into our deliberations. We park our politics with our hats in the anteroom.

The preparation of an appropriation bill of this size is a task of real magnitude. It involves elaborate hearings and innumerable detailed analyses and appraisals of the many and varied factors entering into the estimates. It has been 74 days since we started hearings on December 12. We have had before us the officials, high and low, of both departments for intensive examination, resulting in 1,854 pages of printed testimony in 2 volumes, which are now available to all Members who desire to call for them at the Appropriations Committee rooms. In printed bulk, these are the largest hearings ever conducted by our subcommittee.

In preparing this bill our subcommittee has had constantly before it a vision of the financial condition of our country and our obligation to do our bit toward bringing about a retrenchment in Government expenditures, which we believe is necessary to start business and industry on the road to normal and healthy conditions, and to make an approach, at least, to such a revival and resuscitation of private enterprise as may ultimately permit millions now on the relief rolls to be taken over into regular jobs in private industry.

The estimates for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1940, sent to us by the Budget Bureau, totaled $793,281,872, and the appropriations we provide in this bill for that Department total $790,844,684, a reduction in the estimates amounting to $2,437,188.

The total estimates for the Treasury Department were $935,115,620, and we carry in this bill $909,626,670 for that Department, a reduction of $25,488,950 below the estimates.

BUDGET ESTIMATES REDUCED $27,926,138

The Budget estimates for the two departments were $1,728,397,492 and the appropriations we provide are $1,700,471,354. This is a cut of $27,926,138 in the combined Budget estimates for the two departments.

Economy advocates will extract some comfort in the fact that we have found it possible to lower the operating costs of both departments on purely operating items. We have cut operating costs $3,405,667 in the Treasury Department and $2,488,053 in the Post Office Department below the operating items of the 1939 appropriations, or a total of $5,893,720 in the two departments.

We are not so fatuous as to assume that the saving of $27,926,138 which we have been able to make in reducing the Budget estimates for the two departments in that amount will have very much of a bearing upon the national financial picture, but we do believe that it will be a good tonic to business, and that it will help, to some degree, in creating a better feeling among those who are genuinely concerned over the vast expenditures and continued deficit financing of our Government in seeking to promote recovery.

While we have used sharp pencils in trimming the estimates, we have first sought in every instance to ascertain all of the facts as to whether or not a cut would be justified. We have tried to apply a discriminating judgment to every situation and to allow every dollar that is really necessary to carry on every essential governmental activity.

There have been a few times in the preparation of this bill when we have gone above the Budget and before I proceed to a more detailed explanation of the bill I shall touch upon the rare occasions when we raised the Budget figures. We have respect for the Budget Bureau and follow its recommendations many, many times, but we do not regard it as infallible. The hearings it conducts are extensive but not as exhaustive as our own in respect to the particular items under our jurisdiction, and granting to budgetary officials the human right to err occasionally, we feel that when we have gone into a subject thoroughly it is our duty to stand on our judgment.

HELP FOR THE LEAST-FAVORED GROUPS

We have put some money in this bill, not estimated for by the Budget, to provide one-step promotions of $60 each for very low-paid employees, mainly in the custodial service. A few of the employees who will benefit from these promotions are located in Washington, but most of them are in the field. The total amount carried for this purpose is approximately $95,000, and the total number that will benefit by the one-step advance is 1,616.

The salaries now paid to these employees range from $1,080 to $1,500 per annum. Under this distribution no employee with a salary of more than $1,500 will receive a promotion. Many of these Government workers are married and have families and they have found the going very hard on their meager income.

The committee's purpose has been to lend a helping hand to a least-favored group in the lowest strata, but we are conscious of the fact that in doing this we have not scratched the surface of the problem of pay readjustment. It is regrettably true that there has been no correlation of efforts along this line as between different departments and activities. The result is a hodge-podge of maladjustments, or no adjustments, with different pay provisions existing for comparable services, a faulty system that necessarily inflicts many injustices. In your subcommittee's opinion the time has come when some legislative committee, or some special committee to be set up by Congress, should address itself to the readjustment of the pay of Government workers and should study the problem in all of its aspects with a view to establishing uniformity in promotions in the Government service, and ironing out the injustices and inequalities which are so palpable at the present time. We are calling this matter to the attention of the Bureau of the Budget and are directing it to make a study of the problem.

We also raised the Budget estimate for rural mail delivery. The Rural Delivery Service was established in 1896, and in the years that have followed it has had a continuous growth, until now the Service is at its peak, bringing the mail to 7,003,486 rural families. It is impossible to overestimate the boon this Service has been, and will continue to be, to our rural citizens. The evidence before our subcommittee showed, I think, that as far as was humanly possible the Service has been distributed equitably and impartially.

INCREASE OF RURAL DELIVERY ESTIMATE

The Budget estimate of $91,500,000 that came to us for the maintenance of the Rural Delivery Service during the next fiscal year provided no money whatever for new routes and extensions. As far as the subcommittee is aware, this was the first time since Rural Delivery came into existence when it was proposed to stop extensions and new routes.

Mr. J. W. Cole, Deputy Second Assistant Postmaster General, who testified for the Department, said that during the operation of the Economy Act the Rural Delivery Service reached a low ebb as far as extensions and new routes were concerned, but that it never came to a standstill. When asked if he thought the Rural Delivery Service has reached its full logical development, Mr. Cole said:

I do not think the country is yet saturated with Rural Delivery Service. We have applications for approximately 10,000 extensions every year.

Speaking of the Budget estimate for 1940, Mr. Cole said:

I do not think we can make any other extensions or establish any new routes and live within the amount approved by the Bureau of the Budget.

Our subcommittee doubted whether the time has come in the development of rural delivery when we shall say that there shall be no more new routes and no extensions. There are pending at the present time 31 applications for new routes and 465 applications for extensions which have been investigated, found meritorious, and approved. The Post Office Department asked the Budget for $75,000 for new routes and $175,000 for extensions, a total of $250,000, which the Budget Bureau disallowed.

Your subcommittee has written into the bill a provision setting aside the sum of $200,000 for extensions and new routes during the fiscal year 1940. We increased the Budget estimate $100,000, and we are certain that by careful administration of its large appropriation and the savings that will inevitably come from consolidations the Department will easily be able to add another $100,000 under the direction we have written into the bill that $200,000 be made available for this purpose. We believe this will meet all of the reasonable requirements so far as extensions and new service are concerned.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. How many additional routes will be provided by the amount that has been allowed by the committee?

Mr. LUDLOW. It is impossible to give a categorical answer to that because it will depend on the size of those that are approved.

Mr. DOWELL. Can the gentleman give us an estimate? If the gentleman does not have that information at hand, can he tell us how far it will be the policy of the Post Office Department to extend the consolidation of these routes further than they have already gone?

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say to my friend from Iowa that that is an administrative matter over which we have no control except there is a limitation that there shall be consolidations only when there are vacancies. There can be no consolidation except through death or resignation from the Service. That puts a limitation on them.

Mr. DOWELL. One further question if the gentleman will permit; under the present system, as I understand it, routes are being taken from the small post offices which eventually mean the impairment of the usefulness of these offices. Can the gentleman tell us how far this policy will go? It can go to the extent of taking away rural service from all the small post offices. I am trying to get information as to how far it will be the policy of the Department to take up these routes, if the gentleman knows.

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say to the gentleman that that is purely an administrative matter. I cannot answer the gentleman specifically, but I do know that we have provided in this bill $200,000 for new routes and extensions to be administered by the Department.

If the gentleman thinks the administration is faulty, let me suggest that he present his views to the Department officials.

Mr. DOWELL. I am merely asking the question as to what the policy may be in the Department. I know just recently a number of vacancies have occurred and that the routes are being consolidated. These routes are being taken from the smaller post offices, of course, when there is a consolidation between two post offices, and, as a rule, transferred to or kept in the larger city or town. I am trying to find out how far the Department intends to go with reference to these consolidations, if the gentleman knows.

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say to the gentleman that was a matter that did not come up in our hearings at all and I am unable to give him the information he asks as to the Department's views. He will have to get that information from the Post Office Department. I am sorry.

Mr. DOWELL. I was just trying to get the information.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Could the gentleman state at this time whether or not the bill also carries an increase for village carrier service?

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say that it carries a very slight increase of $10,000 for readjustment in existing services by carriers. There is no appropriation for any additional village delivery service and there has been no appropriation for this purpose for 5 years. This refers to the extension of the village delivery service to new villages. This has been the policy for 5 years, and there have been no new services established.

Mr. PACE. The policy of the committee is not to have an extension of village service in qualified villages?

Mr. LUDLOW. The testimony from the experience of the Department is that service has probably reached its logical development, and for this reason there have been no additional villages added in this category of service for 5 years and it is not contemplated that any will be added by this bill.

Mr. PACE. Then it will be the policy of the committee and the Department to withhold this service unless a community can qualify for city service, which requires $10,000 in receipts?

Mr. LUDLOW. I would not say that has been definitely established as a policy. The Department has not submitted estimates for additional village delivery service for a long time. We have been marking time for some 5 years. It appeared that no one was very seriously penalized by it and that everybody was getting service, either by rural routes or by city service. We thought that at this time we should stay pretty close to shore in regard to expenditures, and that this service was one that could be allowed to continue in its present status without addition for a while. Whether that is to be of a permanent nature, I do not know. Of course, the question will come up again next year.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman spoke a moment ago of the necessity for making the pay of Government employees uniform. Does he realize the difficulty we have in explaining to the different communities the situation? Here is one with village service and here is another equally qualified that is unable to secure village service.

Mr. LUDLOW. I think the feeling is that village service has been pretty well developed. I have lived in villages a part of my life. The average citizen likes to go two or three squares to the post office to get his mail. It is not a service of primary importance and for a time at least, with a very extensive service of this kind already in existence, we thought it might be the part of prudence not to extend it any further. Therefore this bill carries no appropriation for additional service. I appreciate the zeal and the ability with which the distinguished gentleman from Georgia looks after the interests of his constituents and we are glad to have his thought about this matter.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman understands that under the present policy a city of 9,000 is not permitted to have village service, and some people are many blocks from the post office.

Mr. LUDLOW. I think a city of 9,000, if it has $10,000 in postal receipts, has a right to city delivery.

Mr. PACE. I meant to say a city with revenue of $9,000 is not permitted to have village service.

Mr. LUDLOW. That is right.

Mr. PACE. But there seems to be no uniformity.

Mr. LUDLOW. I may ask the gentleman if he knows of any situation where any great inconvenience, injustice, or harm is being done as a result of the nonestablishment of village delivery service? We did not hear of any.

Mr. PACE. All I can say in reply to the gentleman is that the people are demanding the service and they are unable to understand the fact that one community has it and another has not, when they are both equally qualified.

Mr. HARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HARE. I know the gentleman has given a good deal of study to this question. I would like to know his reaction to the situation of furnishing rural delivery service on holidays by substitute carriers. I understand it is the practice in towns, villages, and cities for the post office on holidays, except Sundays, to usually make one delivery. I am wondering what the gentleman's opinion would be about providing a rural delivery service for holidays, except Sundays, by substitute carriers.

Our rural facilities are rapidly increasing. We have rural electrification. We are obtaining better highways and we are obtaining better schools. People who live in the country districts are taking the daily papers more often and to a larger extent now than before. It seems to be a strange coincidence that nearly all these holidays come on either a Saturday or Monday, and in this event they have 3 days without any mail delivery. I am wondering whether or not the Government could not well afford to accommodate these 30,000,000 people by increasing the appropriation a million and a half or two million dollars for the purpose of having substitute carriers provide a mail service on holidays, except Sundays.

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say to the gentleman I am sure our subcommittee is sympathetic with anything that would improve the service to our rural people. We have certainly demonstrated that by going above the Budget to include here an item of $200,000 for new routes and extensions.

The matter which the gentleman brings up has never been considered. We have had no testimony on it. I should be very glad when we have our next annual hearings to go into that matter and see what we can develop and get the viewpoint of the Department on it. However, there is an incalculable number of new services that might be established, and many which have been brought to our attention really would be valuable, but we have felt a responsibility to hold down the appropriation to somewhere in the neighborhood of the Budget estimate. The matter to which the gentleman refers has never been before us, either in budgetary form or in the form of testimony by any Department official.

Mr. HARE. I am sure of that. I thought the gentleman would be in a position to know whether or not it might be worth while to offer an amendment to this bill to increase the appropriation sufficiently to justify this service. Between now and the time for offering amendments arrives the gentleman may be able to obtain some expression on this matter from the postal authorities.

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say to the gentleman I hope he will not offer such an amendment to this bill, because it is a matter we should not dispose of in a haphazard and offhand way. We have not given it the slightest consideration. We would want to know all the factors involved. We would want to know the practicability of it from an administrative standpoint. I do assure the gentleman, however, that at the next hearing I expect to continue to be the chairman of the subcommittee, and if the gentleman will bring the matter up at that time we will go into it exhaustively and try to develop the prospects along the line of the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. HARE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman please refer to page 51 of the bill, under the heading of construction of new post-office buildings?

Mr. LUDLOW. I wonder if the gentleman would allow me to proceed at this time. I go into the matter to which the gentleman refers later in my remarks. If the gentleman will ask his question then it will enable me to make a consecutive statement.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Surely.

Mr. LUDLOW. Now we come to a matter that I believe will be of much interest to the House.

THE ANTI-VENEREAL CAMPAIGN

We have added $2,000,000 to the Budget estimate of $3,000,000 for control of venereal diseases, to be expended during the fiscal year 1940, making the total appropriation $5,000,000, which is the full amount authorized by the La Follette-Bulwinkle Act. Viewed in all of its bearings and implications this was the most interesting and perhaps the most important subject with which we had to deal. The La Follette-Bulwinkle Act authorized an expenditure of $3,000,000 during the first year of its operation, $5,000,000 the second year, and $7,000,000 the third year, with future expenditures in the war against this dreaded scourge to be governed as Congress may see fit in the light of results obtained and information acquired during the 2-year period.

We found that, under the stimulus of the appropriation for the current year, health activities have sprung into action on a widespread scale and have taken up the fight against venereal diseases with a zeal and determination worthy of all encouragement. We found that most of the States, incorrectly construing an authorization as an appropriation, have assumed that they will receive their respective shares of the full amount of $5,000,000 next year and have already initiated programs or expanded existing programs to cover the entire amount. While Congress, of course, cannot be held responsible for anybody's premature and incorrect conclusions, there was a definite prospect that unless the full authorization is appropriated for next year many States will become lukewarm and the antiveneal campaign will sag at a time when, judging from all indications, it ought to be getting under the most effective headway.

I think I am not overstating the case when I say that we were appalled by the evidence showing the extent of the scourge and its ramifications throughout our social life, but while that is true, we also were favorably impressed with the possibilities of bringing it under a large measure of control and thus reducing to a minimum one of the greatest evils of our times, as has been successfully done in some of the Scandinavian countries. Millions of people once lived in dread of yellow fever, yet science has subjugated yellow fever and it may not be too optimistic a view to predict that science, if given proper support, will go a long way toward stamping out venereal diseases. Certainly a good start already has been made in that direction.

HALF A MILLION NEW SYPHILIS CASES A YEAR

Every year there are 500,000 new cases of syphilis in the United States and, at the very minimum, twice that many new cases of gonorrhea. Some statistical estimates place the number of gonorrhea cases at four times the number of syphilis cases. Syphilis, the more serious of the diseases, is wrecking homes, spreading misery, filling insane asylums, and bringing down the general health level to a point that demands the sympathetic attention and very best thought of every person who loves his fellow man. The problem is so big that private humanitarianism cannot cope with it and we find it on the doorsteps of Congress.

We devoted an entire forenoon to a hearing on this subject when the room was filled with eminent medical authorities and social workers from all over the country. The viewpoint of women was expressed with clarity and fine vision by Mrs. Saidie Orr Dunbar, of Oregon, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, who represented 14,453 clubs, with a combined membership of 2,000,000 women. One of the most impressive aspects of the whole situation, as it was made clear in the testimony of the numerous speakers, was the disappearance of prudery in dealing with these social diseases and a recognition that they must be grappled with in a realistic way.

It was brought to our attention that there is a change in the attitude of many victims, who are now willing to cast aside reserve and submit themselves to treatment, which affords one of the most encouraging signs that the intensive campaign that is being planned will be successful. On that point the testimony of Dr. William F. Snow, an eminent specialist of New York City, is of special interest, as follows:

Mr. LUDLOW. If these venereal clinics were distributed widespread and treatment were made available, do you think that those infected by venereal disease would embrace the opportunity of treatment and cooperate with the medical officers?

Dr. SNOW. Yes. We have the results of many investigations along that line. A person may come in with an infection he has had for a year, and we try to learn why he did not come in before. Often the explanation is that he has had a job and had to work during the daytime when the clinic was open. Not until he lost his job or became seriously ill did he apply. If there had been an evening clinic or some arrangements whereby he could have been helped to go to a private physician he would have gone promptly.

Encouraging signs in the war on this plague are the increase in the number of clinics established for the treatment of venereal diseases and the increase in the number of patients who voluntarily submit themselves for treatment. The number of such clinics increased from 1,240 in 1937 to 1,768 in 1938. The monthly average number of patients under treatment increased from 204,495 in 1937 to 343,255 in 1938.

STATES ARE INTERESTED AND COOPERATIVE

Are the States doing their part in combating venereal diseases? This is a proper and pertinent question, for a State that is not conscious of the problem within its gates and willing and anxious to do its part should not expect too large a share of the Federal Government's beneficence. The testimony shows that the States are alive to their responsibilities. On page 1307 of the printed hearings is a table showing what the States are doing in the fiscal year 1939 and what they promise to do during the fiscal year 1940. As against a total of $2,937,878 of Federal funds expected to be expended in the fiscal year 1939 under the La Follette-Bulwinkle Act, the States and local governmental units are providing $4,342,329, and this does not include expenditures of nonofficial agencies. As against a Federal appropriation of $5,000,000 for the fiscal year 1940, the States and local units are committed to raise $5,000,000, matching the Federal money dollar for dollar.

The plans that have been set up by the States for a campaign on all fronts against venereal diseases furnished one of the impelling reasons that prompted our subcommittee in allowing the full amount of the authorization. When Dr. Felix J. Underwood, State health officer of Mississippi and president of the Conference of State and Territorial Health Officers, was testifying he was asked:

How many more could be brought under treatment if the full $5,000,000 (instead of $3,000,000) were appropriated?

He replied:

A number of States say that they could take care of about three times as many, because they have the overhead that would take care of that many more. They have trained personnel and have set up programs agreeable to the act which was passed, covering an expenditure of $5,000,000.

It would seem that if three times as many patients could be taken care of under the existing overhead with an appropriation of $5,000,000 as compared with the Budget figure of $3,000,000, the extra $2,000,000 above the Budget estimate would be a good investment.

SIXTEENTH PART OF THE COST OF A BATTLESHIP TO RESTORE HUMAN VALUES

One other phase of this problem remains to be discussed. It perhaps is not its most important phase, and yet it is really important. It is the national-defense angle of the problem. There has been much talk of late about where our first line of defense is located. I believe, after all that has been said on the subject, the answer is that our first line of defense is in the fine, healthy, vigorous manhood of America. [Applause.] How can we expect to win wars with men whose morale is broken and whose bodies are weakened by disease? The great justification of this campaign against syphilis is its humanitarianism, but it would also be justified from the standpoint of national defense.

I do not argue the question from that standpoint, but I do say that when we are spending untold millions for implementations of destruction we ought to be willing to spend a small fraction to save and to cure human beings who are suffering from the ravages of a terrible disease. We propose in this bill to spend $5,000,000 to fight syphilis during the next year. That is only one-sixteenth of the cost of the largest type battleship. It is less than one-third of the cost of a cruiser. It is a million dollars less than the cost of a destroyer or a long-range cruising submarine. It is half the cost of a destroyer tender and less than half the cost of a submarine tender. It is only a little more than four times the amount proposed to be spent for autogiros and it is approximately the cost of eight bomber airplanes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Did I correctly understand the gentleman to say that the committee has included $5,000,000 for that purpose?

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I wish to congratulate the committee on doing that. I believe it is one of the best ways we can spend money. As I understand, this is the full amount that was authorized in the La Follette-Bulwinkle bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. It is the full amount of the authorization. We are glad to know that our action has the approval of the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LUDLOW. Surely we can afford to spend the sixteenth part of the cost of a battleship, or the cost of eight bomber airplanes in a campaign to restore the health of untold thousands of venereal victims, and to rehabilitate human values.

GENERAL PERSHING'S STATEMENT

On pages 1276 and 1277 of the printed hearings will be found a most interesting and illuminating statement by General Pershing, commander of the American Expeditionary Forces in the World War, in which he says:

I regard syphilis as the most terrible scourge that afflicts mankind. It is causing more misery of body and mind than any other preventable disease. As Dr. Parran has said, "It must be the next great plague to go." * * * It is appalling to think that nearly 7,000,000 of our people have syphilis, many of them innocent victims. * * * This insidious disease causes or hastens the death of 100,000 victims annually. In this war on syphilis all must work at it intelligently according to their opportunity and their ability to take part in it, and they must do so with the old wartime spirit that defeated the enemy in 1918. My Army experience has proved to me that the job can be done.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 additional minutes.

Our subcommittee, always scrupulously careful in spending the people's money, believes that the States are far enough advanced in their preparations to be able to use $5,000,000 of Federal funds advantageously in a cooperative onslaught on this plague. With the States' own contribution of $5,000,000, a war chest of $10,000,000 will thus be made available to attack this insidious enemy, and very definite progress should be made in this important work during the next fiscal year.

With your indulgence I shall now take up the bill in its orderly sequence and discuss some of its main provisions, beginning with the Post Office Department. Obviously you would not have the time—and may I say the patience—to listen to me in too minute and detailed a presentation of its multifarious items.

POSTAL SERVICE ALMOST SELF-SUSTAINING

Eliminating the nonpostal items, which cannot in fairness be charged to postal expenditures, the Postal Service is very nearly on a self-sustaining basis.

In fact, tongue and buckle more than met in the fiscal year 1938, when the postal expenditures, exclusive of nonpostal items, were $724,221,229.51, and the postal revenues were $728,634,051.36, leaving a surplus of $4,412,821.85. This was the fourth postal surplus in 5 years. The prognosis for 1939 and 1940 is not quite so favorable for, although increases in postal revenues are forecast, deficits are anticipated amounting to $7,893,878 in 1939 and $1,844,684 in 1940. The Post Office Department is primarily a service institution, yet it is the only department of the Government that practically pays its way. The postal-revenue estimate of $740,000,000 for the fiscal year 1940 is based on a continuance of 3-cent letter postage.

The Department officials, anxious to make as good a financial showing as possible, are unalterably opposed to a restoration of the old 2-cent rate, although they recognize a widespread demand for 2-cent postage, especially among business interests. It is claimed by officials that such a cut in the letter postage would mean the loss of $100,000,000 in income the first year and $75,000,000 a year thereafter, and that the Department could not stand such a falling off of revenue. This argument is challenged by proponents of the reduction, who contend that an increased volume of mail would result, and that the postage from the increased mailings would largely offset the loss from the decreased rate. From any standpoint, postal finances appear to be in a healthy condition with the volume of mail on a steady upward curve. The largest nonpostal item is the penalty mail of the Government departments. The rapid expansion of the Government and the establishment of many new activities are factors causing an increase of that item from $8,537,730 in 1928 to $35,690,807 in 1938. In the same period the cost of sending out congressional mail under the franking privilege has decreased from $909,864 in 1928 to $779,369 in 1938.

FIVE ADDITIONAL INSPECTORS ALLOWED

Post-office inspectors have been described as "the eyes and ears of the Postmaster General" and the inspection force undoubtedly performs a very important function in the governmental scheme. The Postmaster General and his assistants are entrusted with the disbursement of appropriations totaling $793,000,000 for 1939 and with the rendition of varied services affecting the daily life of every citizen.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman mentioned the franking privilege. Will the gentleman state how much the franking privilege cost the Government last year for newspapers and magazines, including parcel post and the second-, third-, and fourth-class mail?

Mr. LUDLOW. The excess of expenditures over revenues of all second-class matter was about $89,000,000.

Mr. PATMAN. That is second class, just newspapers and magazines, but what about third class and fourth class?

Mr. LUDLOW. For the third class, I understand, the deficit is $29,000,000.

Mr. PATMAN. I understand the figure for all the classes is $129,000,000.

Mr. LUDLOW. I believe that is correct.

Mr. PATMAN. The total amount that was franked by Members of Congress, 531 Members, aggregated not to exceed $800,000 for the same period.

Mr. LUDLOW. Seven hundred and seventy-nine thousand three hundred and sixty-nine dollars.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not a fact that there are certain publications in the country like the Saturday Evening Post, the Chicago Tribune, the New York Times, and Collier's, the franking privilege for any one of which costs the Government more than the franking privilege for the entire Congress?

Mr. LUDLOW. I believe undoubtedly the gentleman is correct.

Mr. PATMAN. It is true, is it not, that a newspaper or magazine can be mailed in the county in which it is published without any postage whatever being paid on it, and it will be delivered?

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman is stating facts all the way through, but I may say to the gentleman this is a matter over which our subcommittee has no control. It is a statutory matter, and the gentleman's recourse, if he wants to remedy that condition, is to take the matter up through the proper legislative committee.

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; but the point is that the newspapers and magazines last year cost the Government $89,000,000 more than what they paid in postage.

Mr. LUDLOW. That is my understanding.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. TABER. It is a fact, however, that the item of free postage for newspapers within the counties in which they are published is a very small item, amounting to something like six or seven hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. LUDLOW. I have the exact figure on that particular item, $637,150.

Mr. PATMAN. I know, but the gentleman is referring to country weekly papers. I know that is true of such papers. The country weekly paper does not amount to a great deal, but for all newspapers and magazines the loss amounts to $89,000,000 a year.

Mr. TABER. Oh, yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. And I may say to the gentleman that that is a legislative matter and not a matter of appropriation.

Mr. PATMAN. I am simply anxious for the information to be brought out. I do not know what the remedy should be, and I am not saying the practice is wrong. If the people get the benefit of this franking privilege in lower subscription rates or if it is justified by reason of the dissemination of knowledge and information, I am not objecting to it but just pointing it out. Since the people are paying so much to provide for distribution of newspapers, I am sure many of the publishers consider that they owe a duty to the public, and for that reason are very anxious to fairly give to their readers both sides of every public question.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman please explain to the Committee what formula was used in arriving at the expense to the Federal Government by reason of the fact that Congressmen utilize the privilege they have of franking. Was that figured from the very beginning of delivery until it is finally delivered, including every person who handles it?

Mr. LUDLOW. They have a cost-ascertainment system and make test cases at different periods, as I understand, and in this way arrive at these figures.

Mr. GARRETT. Is that followed from the very inception of the matter until it is finally delivered?

Mr. LUDLOW. It is supposed to cover all elements of cost.

Mr. GARRETT. Including, in the gentleman's opinion, the handling by postal clerks and also rural delivery?

Mr. LUDLOW. Everything is considered by the cost-ascertainment committee.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. Certainly.

Mr. LEAVY. There has been a great deal of criticism and, I think, misinformation given to the public in reference to the cost of the franking privilege by Members of Congress. If I understood the gentleman correctly, as a matter of fact, the cost of the franking privilege in 1937 was about 12 percent less than it was back in 1928.

Mr. LUDLOW. I will repeat the figures for the gentleman's information and for the information of the House.

Mr. LEAVY. I wish the gentleman would.

Mr. LUDLOW. In 1928 the cost of the congressional franking privilege was $909,864, and in 1938 it was $779,369.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman if, including in this figuring showing the expense to the Government of use by Members of Congress of the frank, there is included the expense to the Government caused by the use of the frank by "lame ducks" who have been repudiated by their people but who have the continued use of this franking privilege for a year after their defeat?

Mr. LUDLOW. I am saying to the gentleman that I am sure it does include that. Every element of cost is considered by the cost ascertainment committee in reaching these figures and that would include the element to which the gentleman refers.

The proper administration of such an enterprise as the Postal Service requires the services of a mobile force of highly trained experts responsible directly to the Postmaster General, upon whom he and the Assistant Postmasters General may rely for dependable information and sound technical advice. These experts are the inspectors.

For years the Department has claimed that its inspection force was insufficient and this year an estimate was presented to us for 30 additional inspectors with a corresponding increase in travel allowance. These are high-salaried employees and the 30 inspectors asked would fix an annual charge of $130,000 on the Treasury, exclusive of travel.

Our subcommittee is always reluctant to build up the permanent salaried personnel of the Government except under circumstances of positive urgency. We feel that we have been fairly liberal in increasing this force, having allowed 15 additional inspectors in 1936, 35 in 1937, 10 in 1938, and 10 in the fiscal year 1939, making 610 authorized inspectors at the present time. We have allowed 5 additional inspectors for the fiscal year 1940 and we believe the Department will be able to get along with that number. We are strengthened somewhat in that view by the fact that the Department has not yet appointed the 10 inspectors we authorized last year, the money that otherwise would have been paid to the new inspectors having been taken up in reallocations of salaries. The net effect of the committee's action, therefore, is to grant 15 additional inspectors for the next fiscal year.

We have allowed the full Budget estimates for clerks, carriers, and the other great groups of employees who comprise the bone and sinew of the Postal Service. These, of course, are the vital services of the Department. The mails must be handled and if experience proves that the Budget estimates are insufficient to provide the necessary personnel to keep the mails moving the doors will always be open for deficiency appropriations.

EXTENSIONS OF DOMESTIC AIR SERVICE

The Budget Bureau sent to us an estimate of $18,930,000 for domestic air-mail service, which, if allowed, would have been the largest appropriation for domestic air mail since 1933 and an increase of $2,280,000 over the appropriation for the fiscal year 1939. This estimate included $350,980 for new routes and extensions, $1,456,052 for increased frequencies, $247,568 for feeder routes, and $200,000 for experimental routes. Your committee, without entertaining any doubt of the value of domestic air mail or the desirability of extending it, decided that the estimate was a little too high. We allowed $17,930,000, which will maintain the air service on its present basis and allow $1,280,000 for increase and development in the various categories of service. This will permit a liberal program of new routes and extensions and increased frequencies, also allowing for continued experiments of pick-up and delivery of mail in flight and the inauguration of feeder service, which is a line of experimentation in which the Department is greatly interested. It is proposed to establish several short feeder routes to test this type of service, which would carry not only mail but also passengers and express. Such routes will be established only after very careful surveys.

Time was when domestic air mail was a heavily subsidized service, but in recent years it has been approaching the self-sustaining point. The estimated air-mail postage revenue for the present fiscal year 1939 is $16,000,000, or only $650,000 less than the domestic air-mail appropriation for the current year. To further enhance the popularity of the Air Mail Service, consideration is now being given to the advisability of inaugurating a new form of communication by air, a sort of lettergram on one sheet of paper, folded up, and having a weight limit of half an ounce. If this is adopted, the rate on this type of message probably will be 3 or 4 cents as against the present straight air rate of 6 cents.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman please explain to the Committee whether or not the policy now being followed by the Post Office Department, which permits post offices to close on Saturday afternoons at 1 o'clock, has effected any material saving to the Department?

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that we have no testimony on that subject at all that I can recall and I cannot inform the gentleman as to the amount of saving.

Mr. GARRETT. Then would the gentleman tell us why that policy has been promulgated within the last year or so, depriving many people of securing their mail at the post office after 1 o'clock on Saturday afternoons?

Mr. LUDLOW. I would assume offhand that is a part of the administration of the statutory hours-of-service law. They close such offices on Saturday afternoon, I take it, because of the necessity of establishing service weeks of certain length.

Mr. GARRETT. And not as a matter of economy?

Mr. LUDLOW. I do not believe economy is the prime motive.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes.

Mr. KITCHENS. I understand that is done not necessarily on Saturday afternoons. They can take any day they desire, or rather, they can take any half day they desire.

Mr. LUDLOW. Compensatory time.

Mr. KITCHENS. That is right.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. LUDLOW. I will be pleased to do so, but I do not like to take so much of the time of the Committee.

Mr. PACE. I do not like to take the gentleman away from his train of thought, but I must leave the Chamber in a minute. I receive a considerable amount of correspondence on the question of twine used by the postal authorities. The gentleman knows the greatest surplus in the history of the world today is cotton. The Government now holds loans on approximately 12,000,000 bales, with an investment of $600,000,000. It is my impression that at this time the Department uses principally twine manufactured from jute, which, as the gentleman knows, is a foreign commodity.

Mr. LUDLOW. That is true.

Mr. PACE. I was wondering if there has developed before the gentleman's committee the reason they insist on jute, or why it would not be helpful to use an American commodity in line with the thought that the American farmer should be entitled to the American market. Could the gentleman help me a little on that?

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOEHNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4492) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION—EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 4011, to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment: Page 2, line 4, after "loans", insert "or other obligations to it."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was agreed to was laid on the table.

TREASURY-POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4492) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill, with Mr. BOEHNE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE], with his characteristic devotion to his own State and his own section of the country, has raised a question that has also given the members of our subcommittee considerable concern. It is true that nearly all of the twine used in the Government service is made of jute and, of course, that is a foreign product. We have been encouraging the Post Office Department to conduct experiments in the use of cotton, and some such experiments have been conducted. No final conclusions, however, have been reached. We will be glad to pursue the matter further, because we think, as the gentleman does, that we should be using home products as far as possible.

Mr. PACE. Of course, we know that there is now used in private industry cotton twine, and we also know, so far as the tensile strength of the cotton twine is concerned, that practically 90 percent of the automobile tires in this Nation use cotton twine under special manufacture. I cannot conceive of any experimentation that would be required other than that to determine the respective costs because certainly the cotton twine is just as strong and it is as durable as the other.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I refer the gentleman to some testimony which occurs on pages 317 and 318 of the hearings on the Post Office Department bill, where, with the same thought in mind that the gentleman has, we went into this subject rather exhaustively. I shall read some of the colloquy that took place:

Mr. LUDLOW. Does cotton make a serviceable twine?

Mr. PURDUM. I think it does. Cotton twine is used very extensively in business houses.

Mr. LUDLOW. Cotton being an important American produce, why do you not use it more extensively for twine?

Mr. PURDUM. By whom?

Mr. LUDLOW. Most of the twine you use is made of jute, I believe you have told us.

Mr. PURDUM. That is true.

Mr. LUDLOW. Cotton being an important American product, I was wondering why you do not use more of it for twine.

Mr. PURDUM. That is due to the disparity in prices. As I said before, in arriving at a decision as to award of contract, the purchasing agent of the Department takes into consideration the law and the regulations governing a differential.

That seems to be all of the testimony at that particular point, but the matter came up in numerous connections, and the cost differential was the main objection to the use of cotton twine, according to the Department officials.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I call the gentleman's attention to another fiber produced in this country. I have reference to a very strong fiber that is made from the leaf of the yucca plant, the Spanish bayonet, and of beargrass, found throughout the Southwest. It is an inexpensive fiber, and I believe it would be well for us to make further experiments in the use of it. We are using imported material, which is a cheaper fiber than cotton, but I agree with my colleague from Georgia [Mr. PACE] that there ought to be more use of cotton fiber by the Post Office Department.

Mr. LUDLOW. I think so; and I think the gentleman has made an important suggestion, and it might be well for him to bring that directly to the attention of Mr. Purdum.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to the gentleman from Indiana for the sympathy he expresses. I call his attention further to the fact that if he had proceeded a few lines further in the hearings he would have observed that on the item of cost the testimony by Mr. Purdum is that in the last purchase of twine they paid 11.25 cents per pound for the twine.

Of course the gentleman knows that the Department can today, if it wants to, take over 11,000,000 bales of cotton on which the Government has loaned money for around 9 or 10 cents, including the storage and interest charges, and in the open market they could buy all of the cotton they want for about approximately 8 cents a pound. In fact, there is so much cotton on hand that there has been no market at all in the local warehouses for 60 days. I would not want to do anything that the chairman of the committee thought unwise, but I am wondering if the committee would seriously object to a proviso requiring the Department to at least make it a 50-50 proposition, to begin with, that one-half should be used in cotton and one-half in something else, in order that we might have a practical demonstration of its use.

Mr. LUDLOW. I would say to the gentleman that we are just an appropriating committee. We have no technical or other information on this subject. I think it is a matter that the gentleman ought to take up in a different channel, perhaps through a legislative committee, and bring in a bill to enact some law on the subject, if that is his point of view.

Mr. PACE. Does the gentleman think it ought to take a long number of years for a department to experiment in the use of twine and jute, when the gentleman knows that he and I could experiment in a day's time?

Mr. LUDLOW. You will notice from Mr. Purdum's testimony that he considers that experimentation has gone so far as to establish a price differential that makes it inadvisable to use cotton. That is his contention. I do not know anything about it personally.

Mr. PACE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. What I have in mind is on page 51 of the bill. As I read the bill, there is $30,000,000 allowed for the construction of post offices now in the course of construction.

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes. That is right; $30,000,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in my own district in Montana there are 18 eligible cities where post-office buildings are now needed, where the places now being used are really not fit to be occupied by either public or private business, simply because there is no other available place. Does not the gentleman think that is a rather small sum to be allowed under such conditions as that? I understand there are similar conditions in California and other States throughout the country.

Mr. LUDLOW. Let me answer the gentleman by stating that we allowed every cent which the Bureau of the Budget estimated. The Budget estimated what the Procurement Division thought it would be able to use. This is not a mushroom proposition, and the building facilities of the Procurement Division cannot expand to any prodigious extent to take care of an enlarged program. They have a certain limited organization, and they can only use a certain amount of money. They estimate that in the continuation of this program $30,000,000 was all they could use. They estimated that, and the Budget allowed the full amount. I do not think it would be prudent to allow an amount of money they could not use.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May I call the gentleman's attention to this fact, that under the present set-up it would take 54 years for the Post Office Department to meet the demands for post offices in my district in Montana.

Mr. LUDLOW. I know how carefully the gentleman looks after his State, and, of course, I accept the statement he has made; but when the Procurement Division tells us that their facilities will permit the use of only $30,000,000 a year, we would not feel justified in putting into the bill a lot of money over and above their ability to perform.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. O'NEAL. How much money would it take to complete the needs in the gentleman's district, if it would take 54 years to do it?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It would take $75,000 each for 18 eligible cities.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. You can multiply $75,000 by 18, and that would be the amount required.

Mr. O'NEAL. How much money would it take to meet the requirements in all districts of the United States if they had the same demands?

Mr. O'CONNOR. They do not have the same demands. Many of the States are well provided for. Montana seems to have been neglected in the past.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. Certainly; I yield to my friend.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I feel that my colleague from Montana is correct. There are western communities that are in need of buildings. In my own State I could name 12 cities that are eligible for new post-office buildings. This is probably not the right place to take it up, but I want that fact to be known.

Mr. LUDLOW. Knowing both of the gentlemen who have spoken, I do not have any doubt they will get all that is coming to their States.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We will try.

Mr. LUDLOW. Now, Mr. Chairman, I feel I have occupied altogether too much time of the Committee, but there are one or two other matters that I must refer to.

TRANS-ATLANTIC AIR MAIL

Two years ago we included in the 1938 appropriation bill the initial appropriation to start trans-Atlantic air-mail service, coordinated with a British service which was to start simultaneously. The service was not begun. We renewed the appropriation for the present fiscal year and still the service has not been started. In preparing this bill making appropriations for the fiscal year 1940 we had before us an estimate of $995,680 to carry on 7 months' operation of twice-weekly trans-Atlantic air service, and we allowed the estimate on assurance that the service really will be established beginning probably about May 1 next.

It was explained to us that the delay has been caused by inability to secure delivery of planes. The new type of clipper has been tested by the Boeing Co. and plans are now well advanced. The British are behind in their program for ships and America may start the service alone, to be followed by reciprocal service with the British and perhaps with the French and other countries. Air service between Seattle and Juneau, for which Congress last year appropriated $100,000, has not yet been established. We have allowed $213,363 for the operation of this service next year on a full-year basis and we also approved an additional trip between New York and Montreal, daily except Sunday, at a cost of $125,240.

RAIL TRANSPORTATION AND STAR ROUTES

The evolution of rail transportation has brought large decreases in the appropriations for railroad transportation of mails and for personal services incident to the handling of railway mail. For paying railroads for carrying the mails the estimate of one hundred and two million submitted to us for 1940 is $5,750,000 below the appropriation for 1939. For personal services of employees in the Railway Mail Service the estimate of $56,000,000 for 1940 is $1,500,000 below the 1939 appropriation. We allowed the Budget estimate in the latter item and substantially the Budget estimate for railroad transportation.

The wholesale discontinuance of trains by the railroads, which is one of the phenomena of modern times, has thrown much of the mail that formerly was handled by the railroads over into the star routes, and while the railway-mail items are going down the star-route expenditure is going up.

Testimony of Department officials was that this condition not only will continue but, in the language of Mr. Cole, Deputy Second Assistant Postmaster General, it will "grow worse." The Department not only has transferred $150,000 this year from its railroad transportation appropriation to its appropriation for star routes, but it is expecting an unexpended balance of $3,700,000 in its railroad transportation appropriation at the end of the present fiscal year. We had a good deal of testimony from officials that they are not forcing the withdrawal of mails from the trains but rather are following the natural course of transportation development which imposes upon them the responsibility of seeing that the mails are transported and delivered by the most feasible means available when trains are withdrawn. Recognizing the increased burden thrown upon the star routes, we have increased the star-route appropriation for 1940 $550,000 over the appropriation for 1939.

POLICY IN REGARD TO EMERGENCY EMPLOYEES

Early in our consideration of the financial needs of the Treasury Department we were confronted by a problem that stared at us through many of the estimates, and that was a desire on the part of key officials to cover into their regular forces employees who have been living off of the emergency rolls. It seemed that these key officials regarded the future of emergency activities as precarious, and it was their hope to bring tried and tested emergency employees into the safe and secure haven of regular appointments before the abolishment of emergency services should leave them out in the cold. We could hardly blame them for that, as a very fair proportion of the emergency employees that have been brought into the picture have proved faithful and efficient, giving promise of long and valuable service if covered into regular appointments. In many instances the testifying key officials told us that these so-called emergency employees already are doing regular work exclusively and that it is administratively important that they be fused into regular positions.

It seemed to us that this proposal suggested the wisdom of establishing a general policy that would apply not only to the activities under our bill but to all of the Government departments and bureaus wherever the problem presents itself. So we have deferred action without prejudice on these specific requests and have referred the matter to the Deficiencies Subcommittee for consideration in its broader aspects looking toward the formulation of a general policy.

OLD-AGE RESERVE ACCOUNT

Our bill appropriates $580,000,000 to the old-age reserve account set up under the Social Security Act, which is $20,000,000 less than the Budget estimate of $600,000,000. There is a great latitude of guesswork connected with estimates for the old-age reserve account, and we believe that our estimate is likely to be nearer the mark than the estimate that came to us from the Budget. In any event, no harm can be done and no inconvenience can be caused beyond the necessity of a slight readjustment in the future appropriation.

Under the law, this account is to be kept as nearly even as possible with the social-security taxes collected. When the $580,000,000 we have provided is added to this account the total amount in the fund will be $1,705,000,000. This fund is invested in Government securities, specially created by the Secretary of the Treasury to meet the requirements of the fund, and bearing 3-percent interest.

UNCLE SAM OWNS ONE-FIFTH OF LAND SURFACE

The fiscal year 1940 will be the seventh year in which Federal land-bank borrowers have been given a reduced interest rate on their mortgage loans through Federal appropriation.

It is estimated that on June 30 next, the average contract interest rate on the volume of 626,000 outstanding mortgages will be 4.9952 percent. The difference between the average contract rate of 4.9952 percent and the statutory reduced rate of 3.5 percent is 1.4952 percent. The Farm Credit Administration at first estimated that $30,000,000 would be required to cover this differential in 1940, including a safety margin of $342,000, but when Governor Hill came before us he testified that the full margin of $342,000 would not be required and suggested a cut of $250,000 in the estimate. We have allowed $29,700,000 which still provides a safety margin of $42,000 and we believe this appropriation is ample. To cover the interest differential on Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation loans, which are affected by a similar statutory interest cut, we allowed $7,425,000, a reduction of $75,000 below the Budget, but apparently entirely ample. In 1938 the 12 Federal land banks had 24,055 farms on hand, acquired through foreclosure, and the losses on account of real estate in 1938 amounted to $9,497,000. These Government-owned farms are located in every State in the Union.

Through all of its real-estate holdings of all descriptions the Government now owns one-fifth of the land surface of the United States. The statutory reduction of interest rate will expire on July 1, 1940, and unless it is extended, interest on that date will revert to the contract rate, whatever it may be, on each loan.

ALLEY DWELLING AUTHORITY

We come now to the Alley Dwelling Authority, concerning which we heard considerable testimony. It is an authority that operates in the city of Washington and nowhere else in the riddance of slums. Its benefits are confined entirely to the Capital City, and there is no other Federal activity like it anywhere in the United States.

It envisions a large ultimate program against improper living conditions and attendant vice and evil caused by crowded and insanitary living quarters. It assumes that there are 200 or 250 squares in the city of Washington that need to be dealt with, and, while the final estimated outlay was indefinite, something was said about $20,000,000 being necessary to cover the cost of the whole project. The Authority has operated to date on an appropriation and an allotment from emergency funds totaling $865,000 and receipts from operations amounting to $148,438. It also has secured a loan of $6,600,000 from the United States Housing Administration and is negotiating for $8,400,000 more as an additional loan from that Administration. It came before us requesting a loan of $1,000,000 to be immediately available and to remain available until expended. Authorization for such a loan is contained in the Alley Dwelling Act approved June 25, 1938.

Every member of our subcommittee is sympathetic with efforts to improve improper living conditions, wherever they may exist, but we felt that some questions may properly be raised in respect to this activity. In the first place Washington is traditionally known and advertised as one of the cleanest and best governed cities in the world, a city where living conditions probably are as ideal as in any center of population on the globe. To use the assistance of the Federal Treasury here and deny it to many cities of the United States where slum conditions are worse than here appeared questionable and the further inquiry was made as to whether this problem, which is distinctly a local one, should not be financed, in part at least, by local taxation, since Washington is known as a city of large per capita wealth.

It seemed to some of the members of our subcommittee that if the Federal Government is to go into this sort of enterprise in Washington it would be logical to expect it to do so in every city in the country where slum conditions are as bad or worse, which is a reductio ad absurdum conclusion, as there would hardly be money enough in the world to take on such activities. Our subcommittee nevertheless was impressed with the earnestness of Mr. Ihlder, who came before us to defend the estimate, and since the enterprise has been started and some results of a beneficial character have been obtained, we thought it was fair to provide a moderate appropriation to continue the work. We have allowed the Alley Dwelling Authority $500,000, which, with the amount it has on hand and the loan it has from the Federal Housing Administration, should provide sufficient resources to enable it to proceed and demonstrate what it can accomplish.

A MILLION FAMILIES HOLD BABY BONDS

We allowed 18 additional employees to the Public Debt Service, whose work will be mainly in the redemption of baby bonds. The so-called baby bonds are our most novel and interesting governmental securities. The total cash purchase price of outstanding baby bonds on November 30 last was about $1,500,000,000, with a maturity value of about $2,000,000,000. Baby bonds are now held by more than a million families and tens of thousands of persons put their whole faith in them. Many people save through baby bonds who never saved before. It is claimed that these bonds have a great value in stimulating patriotism and good citizenship by making so many persons stockholders of the Government. These bonds mature in 10 years and the maturity values of the various denominations are $25, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000. Several large corporations make allotments from the salaries of employees to buy these bonds. In America no other single security is held by as many owners. These are the only United States Government securities that are sold by a promotion campaign. This year the sales-promotion cost is estimated at $682,000. If the bonds are held until maturity, the interest rate is 2.9 percent per annum, compounded semiannually. However, many of the holders, being of very limited means, have to turn their bonds in for redemption, often before 6 months have expired, in which event no interest is paid.

NEGOTIABILITY OF GOVERNMENT CHECKS

In our examination of the estimates of the Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits we encountered a perplexing situation growing out of the permanent Appropriations Repeal Act of 1934, in which the Treasury Department and the General Accounting Office have locked horns. Section 21 of that act reduced the period of negotiability of Government checks from 3 years to 1 year, or rather to 1 full year after the expiration of the fiscal year in which the check is issued. It is surprising how many persons who receive Government checks hold them indefinitely. Many keep them for a "rainy day," reasoning that a check from Uncle Sam is always good and that they can go down to the bank and get their money at any time. They are disillusioned when they find that the period of negotiability has expired, and they have to go through a long process of redemption before they can get their money. Mr. Bartelt, the Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits, testified that there are 262,863 checks which have not been covered into the Treasury because of that provision. He advocates the repeal of section 21 and restoration of the 3-year period of negotiability.

The Comptroller General as strenuously opposes repeal and advocates further reduction of the period of negotiability to a strict 1-year limit, instead of one full year from the expiration of the fiscal year in which the check is issued. The position of the General Accounting Office is fully set forth in a letter addressed to the chairman of the subcommittee and printed in the hearings. The Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits asks for 12 additional employees on account of the reduced period of negotiability, 4 to take care of the backlog and 8 to keep the work current, at an annual cost of $19,080. As emergency employees are now engaged in this work, the decision, under our policy, will rest later with the Deficiencies Subcommittee.

COMPTROLLERS OF CUSTOMS ABOLISHED

The Customs Service for many years was heavily laden with useless offices which were in the nature of luscious political plums but in nowise essential to the efficient administration of the Service. A few years ago our subcommittee in one stroke abolished the offices of surveyors of customs, and our action was sustained by the full Committee on Appropriations and by Congress, and those offices went out of the picture. Their discontinuance has not caused a single adverse ripple, but the Service has gone on more efficiently than before.

This year, with the full approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Customs, we have decided to abolish the comptrollers of customs. Mr. Ballinger, representing the Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. Dow, as spokesman for the Customs Bureau, came before our subcommittee and approved the excision of these superfluous, high-paid officials from the Federal pay roll, stating that they are wholly unnecessary and that the work can easily be readjusted so that their elimination will not be felt. The comptrollers' offices to be abolished are located at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, San Francisco, and Chicago, and on the suggestion of the office of Secretary of the Treasury and the Customs Bureau we have discontinued the appropriation to pay the salary of Surveyor of the Port of New York, another useless office. The total amount to be saved by this program of abolishing unnecessary offices is $51,600 per annum.

We have allowed $252,000 for long overdue promotions in the Customs Service, where conditions are exceptional, in that many employees of the lower-paid groups have gone as long as 15 years without a promotion. We have provided that no employee receiving more than $3,000 a year shall benefit from this promotional program.

STRENGTHENING OF BUDGET BUREAU

Last year the President asked Congress for additional funds with which to strengthen and expand the staff of the Bureau of the Budget. The Congress responded, and in addition to the regular appropriation of $187,000 for that Bureau, a supplemental appropriation of $132,710 was granted, or $319,710 in all. In view of the tremendously important service rendered by the Bureau of the Budget in the appropriating scheme, it was felt that there was abundant justification for this reorganization of its functions and strengthening of its staff.

The reorganization is proceeding auspiciously under the capable direction of Mr. Bell, the Acting Director of the Bureau. Four main divisions have been set up, the Division of Estimates, the Fiscal Division, the Division of Coordination, and the Division of Investigation. Our subcommittee thought that it is important and in the public interest that this reorganization shall proceed without interruption, and we allowed the full estimates for the Budget Bureau, including $479,280 for salaries and expenses and $40,000 for printing and binding. Incidentally it will be of some interest to guardians of the Treasury to learn that the printing of the 1939 Budget cost $37,444, which is an item over which the Budget Bureau has no control.

ADDITIONAL PERSONNEL FOR INTERNAL REVENUE

The Internal Revenue Service is, of course, a vital service, as it brings in the main sinews of war required to run the Government of the United States. Recent acts of Congress have added to its responsibilities and functions. For salaries and expenses of that Bureau the estimate was $60,700,000, an increase of $2,000,000 over the appropriation for 1939. The estimates asked for the following increases in personnel: Twenty estate-tax agents, $61,000; 178 employees for field-collection service, $320,400; 273 employees for income-tax field service, $779,520.

We feel that a reasonable increase in personnel under this Bureau is justified, and we allowed $59,772,500 for salaries and expenses, which will permit of the employment of 15 additional estate-tax agents, 100 additional employees for field collection service, and 125 additional employees for the income-tax field service.

For income-tax refunds we allowed $38,000,000, which, although a reduction of $1,000,000 below the Budget, is $3,000,000 over the appropriation for 1939, and in the light of experience we believe this amount will be sufficient. This is an unpredictable item, and in no event can any harm be done, as refunds are legal obligations and have to be paid either by regular or deficiency appropriations.

COAST GUARD INCREASES

The Coast Guard, also an important service, requested an increase of 22 commissioned officers, 106 enlisted men, and 16 cadets in the average number to be carried; also an increase of $118,159 to make additions to the retired list. For 1939 the pay and allowances appropriation for that service is $18,037,000. We increased the amount to $18,445,500 for 1940 to take care of existing obligations and absolutely necessary increases of personnel. This is $59,500 below the Budget estimate. The reduction in this estimate is possible largely because the two new aviation stations will not be in operation until after January 1, 1940.

For additional Coast Guard airplanes we allowed $300,000 and directed that it be applied to the purchase of two planes each for the new Elizabeth City, N. C., and San Francisco stations, each of which already has been allowed three planes. It was our belief that a complement of five planes, one of long range, will enable each of these stations to function efficiently.

The Bureau of Engraving's reserve stock was replenished by the appropriation for 1939 and under its future program its output for 1940 will be reduced by 22,292,929 printed sheets. This is the main factor in making possible a reduction of $1,750,000 in the appropriation for that Bureau for the next fiscal year. We have fixed $8,450,000 as the 1940 appropriation.

THE FIGHT ON MARIHUANA

We have dealt liberally with the Bureau of Narcotics, partly because it has a fine record of service and because the fight that is being waged on marihuana has greatly increased the burdens and responsibilities of the Bureau. The Marihuana Act became effective in October 1937, and since that time agents of the Bureau have destroyed 26,000 tons of marihuana on 15,000 acres of land throughout the country. Marihuana will grow anywhere as a weed or plant, sometimes attaining a height of 10 to 16 feet in a short time. It has no indispensable medical value, but as a narcotic its reactions are violent, causing addicts to commit brutal and murderous crimes. It affects the higher nerve centers and creates insane delusions. Usually it is smoked in the form of cigarettes, but sometimes it is infused with whisky and consumed in that way. There is a resin called cannabinal which is supposed to be the active constituent of the drug. In the campaign against marihuana the Bureau is having excellent cooperation from police authorities everywhere. In Indianapolis there is a police official whose sole duty it is to spot plots of marihuana and report them.

We have allowed the Secret Service Division a small increase of personnel to take care of its increasing load, and we have recognized the expanding responsibilities of the United States Public Health Service by allowing that Service an increase of $31,800 over its 1939 personnel appropriation which may be used to employ additional commissioned health officers.

LIBERAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR PUBLIC HEALTH

We have dealt liberally with the Public Health Service in all of its items, recognizing its importance in the human equation. We have allowed $1,600,000 to carry on the diseases and sanitation investigations in the numerous categories of projects which will continue those projects with the same personnel as this year. We have allowed the National Cancer Institute, which is doing a most important work, an increase of $40,000 over its $400,000 appropriation for this year, and we have appropriated in grants to States for public-health work the full legal authorization of $8,000,000.

THE PUBLIC-BUILDINGS PROGRAM

We have approved the Budget estimate of $30,000,000 to carry on the construction of public buildings throughout the country under the authorizations contained in the acts of August 25, 1937, and June 21, 1938.

This is what is known as the 3-year program, for which $130,000,000 is provided in the two authorizations. So far $59,000,000 has been appropriated under this program; and if the $30,000,000 in this bill is passed by Congress, the total appropriation will be $89,000,000. If this $30,000,000 is appropriated, it will be entirely for the continuation of building construction outside the District of Columbia. The theory is that every congressional district in the country will have a building under this program, but there are districts where there are no eligible projects, and a reservation has been made of 56 projects, aggregating $4,450,000, pending a time when the eligibility of these districts may be established. With the appropriations contained in this bill, $41,000,000 will be left under the authorization to be appropriated in the future as the projects come along.

In this bill we also have appropriated $8,000,000 to continue work on the Social Security Building, $5,000,000 to continue work on the War Department Building, and $2,800,000 to complete construction of the Government Printing Office Annex, all of which have been authorized and appropriated for in part. The amounts allowed are in accordance with what the experts estimate will be required during the next fiscal year.

We have tried to exercise the most painstaking care in the preparation of this bill, and we have discharged our duty to the best of our ability. We believe that we bring to you a well-considered bill under which the two great Departments can operate with efficiency and with a minimum of waste. I believe this completes my presentation of the bill, and I thank you all kindly for your patience.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. O'NEAL. I would like to make a statement. Since my service in Congress I have seen a great many Members who are very thorough and conscientious in their attention to their duties on committees.

I believe the subcommittee of which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] is chairman is exceptional in the zeal and diligence displayed by most of its members. Speaking further in justified superlative, I believe there was never a chairman of a committee or a subcommittee who applied himself more thoroughly to his task or with more devotion, or with a more conscientious desire to protect his country and yet do the right thing as far as the Department is concerned than the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]. [Applause.] From the time this committee assembled in December he has worked day and night, going over the individual items of this bill with the care a businessman would use in his own business. I can say the same thing as to the ranking minority member of the committee [Mr. TABER]; and I assure the Committee that in the presentation of this bill it comes as the result of as thorough, conscientious, and intelligent consideration as has ever been applied to any bill. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. I thank my friend from Kentucky from the bottom of my heart.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY].

THE MAKING OF A CONGRESSMAN—THE CONGRESS, ITS WORK AND WAYS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, on the 27th day of February 1882, 57 years ago come Monday next, the then Senator James G. Blaine, of Maine, delivered a memorial oration before the two Houses in commemoration of the life and death of James A. Garfield, then late President of the United States.

In the course of his oration Senator Blaine said:

There is no test of a man's ability in any department of public life more severe than service in the House of Representatives; there is no place where so little deference is paid to reputation previously acquired, or to eminence won outside; no place where so little consideration is shown for the feelings or the failures of beginners. What a man gains in the House he gains by sheer force of his own character, and if he loses and falls back he must expect no mercy, and will receive no sympathy. It is a field in which the survival of the strongest is the recognized rule, and where no pretense can deceive and no glamour can mislead. The real man is discovered, his worth is impartially weighed, his rank is irreversibly decreed.

The truth of the above statement is just as obvious to all of us who sit in this Chamber today and observe its inexorable demonstration as it was 57 years ago.

"The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind exceedingly small" might well be a text for a sermon to those who in any session of Congress attempt the rapids before they have learned to swim.

How then may a newly elected Representative fit himself for efficient service and the discharge of his duties, as such, is an ever-recurring question with which all of us are confronted.

So it may not be out of place, and I hope may not be considered presumptuous, Mr. Chairman, if, with a due appreciation of my own limitation, I undertake to pass on to others some of the answers, counsel, and advice so generously given by those older and more experienced in service, to whom, on both sides of the aisle, we are grateful for such counsel, sought and given, as has helped us to steer past whirlpools wherein we most surely would have at least capsized and has saved us from many prospective bumps and bruises, and made life bearable for us.

One of the wiser and more farseeing of my friends advised me to familiarize myself with Lewis Deschler's (House Parliamentarian) Jefferson's Manual and Rules of the House of Representatives.

Says Deschler:

From the beginning of the first Congress the House has formulated rules for its procedure. Some of them have since gone out of existence. More of them have been amplified and broadened to meet the exigencies that have arisen from time to time. Today they are perhaps the most finely adjusted, scientifically balanced, and highly technical rules of any parliamentary body of the world. Under them a majority may work its will at all times in the face of the most determined and vigorous opposition of a minority.

I believe that I am not making too broad a statement when I say that the parliamentary practice of the House is a system of procedure that ranks second to none. It has proven adequate to meet all the emergencies that have arisen in the past. It will meet the emergencies and problems of the future with the same degree of success.

Having done that, he advised me to study CLARENCE CANNON's (Missouri) "Procedure in the House of Representatives."

CLARENCE CANNON, as you know, is our colleague, the distinguished Representative from the State of Missouri and former Parliamentarian of the House. In the foreword to his work he says:

The time of the House is too valuable, the scope of its enactments too far-reaching, and the constantly increasing pressure of its business too great to justify lengthy and perhaps acrimonious discussion of questions of procedure which have been authoritatively decided in former sessions.

The purpose of this book is to provide a synopsis of the procedure of the House for use on the floor where the authorities and sources, because of their bulk and diversity, are not always immediately available. While comprehensiveness and detail have been sacrificed to brevity and accessibility, no notable decision has been omitted, and each topic is, for practical purposes, a complete résumé of the procedure on that subject.

Having studied these, it was suggested that I make it my business regularly to attend the sessions of the House, in order to learn by observation and assimilation the application of the rules and how the House operates thereunder.

Then one man of long years of service said to me:

PLUMLEY, you will never know what it is all about and why unless and until you read Legislative Procedure, Legislative Assemblies, Legislative Principles, and Legislative Problems, four recognized works of authority with respect to the subjects suggested by the titles written by ROBERT LUCE, the eminent parliamentary authority and our colleague from Massachusetts.

In Legislative Procedure, Mr. LUCE states:

Lawmakers must themselves be governed by law, else they would in confusion worse confounded quickly come to grief.

It is true—

Says he—

that with Coke and Blackstone and Kent we do not ordinarily class Hatsell and Cushing and Hinds. It is true that the literature of parliamentary law is scanty and that it deals with minutiae of seemingly little consequence to human rights. Yet think what the law and the practice of legislative assemblies really mean. They make it possible under a representative form of government for the will of the people to be ascertained. Starting with the assumption that this will is the will of the majority, we can give it expression and effect only by processes that at the same time endow it with form and win submission by the minority. Lacking either achievement, chaos follows.

Again he says:

Herein lies the safety of the minority, and this it is that makes parliamentary law and procedure of the greatest consequence to the public safety. Government survives because the lesser part yields to the greater part. Teutonic peoples have had more success than others in self-government because with them the minority, however convinced of its own wisdom, consents to be ruled by the majority until in orderly fashion the minority can make itself the majority. The minority insist on only the right to be heard. There is the cry of Themistocles to Eurybiades, "Strike, but hear me!" Give them but the chance to present their arguments fairly, fully, and they will abide the issue. This is what we call liberty, though just why it would be hard to tell.

Thomas Jefferson took the same view. Referring to Hatsell in the introductory words of his Manual, he recalled that Mr. Onslow, the ablest among the Speakers of the House of Commons, used to say: "It was a maxim he had often heard when he was a young man, from old and experienced members, that nothing tended more to throw power into the hands of administration, and those who acted with the majority of the House of Commons, than a neglect of, or departure from, the rules of proceeding; that these forms, as instituted by your ancestors, operated as a check and control on the actions of the majority, and that they were in many instances a shelter and protection to the minority against the attempts of power." So far, said Jefferson, the maxim is certainly true and is founded in good sense, that as it is always in the power of the majority, by their numbers, to stop any improper measures proposed on the part of their opponents, the only weapons by which the minority can defend themselves against similar attempts from those in power are the forms and rules of proceeding which have been adopted as they were found necessary from time to time and are become the law of the House; by a strict adherence to which only the weaker party can be protected from those irregularities and abuses which these forms were intended to check, and which the wantonness of power is but too often apt to suggest to large and successful majorities.

I commend the foregoing references to your careful consideration.

And now we come to the practical proposition which has confronted us all, as to the source of information with respect to our daily duties, and as to where we can get information, and from whom; and what shall we do next.

I commend to you for perusal a speech made by a distinguished former Representative from Ohio, Mr. Lamneck, made on the floor of this House on the 22d day of February 1934, and which is, in my judgment, a most instructive, informative, and valuable rule and guide and one with which every Representative, old and young, should be familiar.

This speech you will find in full, commencing on page 3077, volume 78, part 3, of the permanent bound CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Seventy-third Congress, second session. You had better send for it and read it.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLUMLEY. I yield.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. While the gentleman is talking on this point I may say to him that I was here when Mr. Lamneck put this in the RECORD. It was a slightly revamped speech of Guy U. Hardy, who served here for 14 years. He originated and presented these questions and answers for the House RECORD, June 5, 1930. I wrote a letter recently to Mr. Hardy, and have his reply today, under date of February 20, 1939, from Canon City, Colo., asking if I might not repeat his questions and answers for the RECORD.

I quote this paragraph from the letter:

That document, Many Questions Asked, was popular. Its form and writing was original with me. I had many compliments about it from all over the country and many reprints were made. Andy Smith told me that no other document had been ordered by so many different Members.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I may say to the gentleman that he is just 24 hours late.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I congratulate the gentleman on beating me to it; two great minds run in the same channel.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I understand that is the fact. I feel that once in about 5 years it is a good plan to get this material before the Members of the House, especially when there are from 75 to 90 new Members each session whose attention has not theretofore been called to the fact that these things are in the RECORD, giving Mr. Hardy due credit.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Hardy was a Member of the House from 1918 to 1932 and a distinguished member of the Appropriations Committee. He was a scholarly and industrious gentleman. Mr. Lamneck was a man of ability and courage and a useful Member of the House, and his colleagues never could understand why he appropriated the original production of Mr. Hardy, of 4 years back, without giving the former Member from Colorado any credit.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I am glad I am following in the footsteps of so illustrious a gentleman. Giving credit to whom-ever and wherever it is due, those who made the codification did a good job and rendered all of us a most valuable service.

To give you an idea of its content and of its instructive value I quote as follows:

What are the duties of a Member?

They are many and manifold. He should study legislation and attend the meetings of his House. He should listen to a good deal of the debates, but not all of them by any means. Many Members are kept in committee meetings many hours of many days of every session. The average Member develops a large office business. This is particularly true of western Members. Their constituency is far away from Washington, so many problems are referred to the Congressman for assistance. The Members get a vast amount of mail. This requires much study, dictation of replies, and often visits to different executive departments downtown. The departments are far away and often far apart. Many ex-service men bring their problems to their Congressman, and he is always glad to help them out when and wherever he can, although he has not the power always to do as much as he would like.

A Member will get a thousand letters or maybe several thousand letters in a session from citizens advocating or opposing proposed legislation. Usually a Congressman answers every letter, though he cannot tell everybody what he thinks about every bill that has been introduced. He must wait development through committee hearings and give thought to those measures that are being brought forward by favorable committee action.

What are the important committees?

There are several. The two most important are probably Appropriations and Ways and Means. All bills that relate to the appropriation of money must be considered by and reported out by the Appropriations Committee of the House. This committee consists of 35 members, 21 Democrats and 14 Republicans. It reports out several bills that carry appropriations for a little over $4,000,000,000 each year. The Ways and Means Committee has to consider and report out all bills that have in any way to do with raising revenue, tariff, or any sort of taxes. This committee consists of 25 members, 15 Democrats and 10 Republicans. All revenue bills must originate in the House of Representatives and come out of the Ways and Means Committee.

There are about 44 standing committees, 4 joint standing committees, and several select committees appointed for specific purposes. The 10 principal committees are called exclusive committees in that a majority member of any one of these committees cannot serve on any other.

How do committees work?

They meet regularly or on call. They consider the bills that have been referred to them. They sometimes hold long hearings on important bills when those interested either for or against may come in and tell the committee what they think of the bills in question. Some hearings last several days and some several weeks. The committee then considers the bill and may report it out with or without amendments or may decide not to report it out. Sometimes the committee takes up several bills of a similar character, considers all phases of the question, and writes a new bill and reports that out.

Who selects Members for committee assignments?

Majority Members are assigned to committees by the Committee on Ways and Means. As a rule, once on an important committee a Member stays there as long as he is in Congress. If a vacancy occurs on an important committee, a member from another committee may be given the place by the Committee on Ways and Means if he desires it, and if he has the seniority and influence to get it. New Members get the places left available. The Republican committee on committees performs this function for the minority Members. All selections must be confirmed by election in the House.

Who appoints the chairmen of committees?

They are elected by the House, and theoretically the Committee on Ways and Means makes the selections of chairmen. In actual practice, however, the Member of the majority party who has served longest on any committee is selected as chairman. Here seniority plays an important part. The chairmen, of course, all come from the majority party, and the majority of the members of all committees are of the dominant party—at this time Democratic.

What is the Committee on Rules?

This is one of the most important committees, as it controls the destiny of more proposed legislation than any other. Bills from the Ways and Means and Appropriations have the right-of-way, so to speak, and can always be brought up for consideration. Other committees have only a few calendar days in any one session. So many bills reported out cannot be brought up for consideration. The Rules Committee can report a rule for consideration of a bill any day. It can bring in a rule for the consideration of any bill that has been reported out of any committee any time. In the last days of a session special rules to bring out special bills are much in demand. The Rules Committee has much power, certainly has the power of selection, but it must be fair and discriminating, selecting what the majority of Congress seems to want most, as the rule it brings in must be adopted by the House.

What is the steering committee?

This is a committee not much heard of nor mentioned in the newspapers. And I dare say that hardly two dozen Members of the House can tell the names of all of the members on the steering committee. This is a little party adjunct to help promote legislation the majority is interested in, and help to iron out a program of procedure, especially in the closing days of a session. It is composed of nine of the older Democratic Members. In addition, the majority leader acts as chairman. When important matters are up for consideration the Speaker and the chairman of the Rules Committee sit in. This committee really has a good deal of influence in helping to shape up the legislative program.

What are conferences and conferees?

The House passes a bill, for instance. It goes to the Senate and may be much amended over there, as are appropriations and tariff bills usually. The House will not accept the amendments. So the bill is sent to conference. The House appoints three or five Members as conferees and the Senate appoints an equal number. These gentlemen meet and hold a conference and discuss the points in disagreement. The conferees of the Senate give up some items and the conferees of the House agree to some. Finally they get together on a bill somewhere between the position taken by each House. Sometimes the conferees do not give up easily; sometimes the conference drags on for days or weeks, and they have run for months. Usually they get together, and usually the conference report is adopted by both Houses. Which end of the Capitol is the most stubborn? Well, the other end, of course.

How are bills introduced?

A Member writes up his bill and drops it in the basket on the Clerk's desk. It is then referred to the appropriate committee. Many bills lay in committee undisturbed and are never heard from again. In some cases they have served their purpose without further action. They have advertised the Member and the project. Many bills are introduced that have not the slightest chance of serious consideration or passage.

Stages of a bill of the House:

First. Introduction: By a Member by laying the bill on the Clerk's table informally. A Member sometimes introduces a petition only, leaving to the committee the drawing of a bill, such a petition referred to a committee having jurisdiction of the subject giving authority to report a bill. Sometimes communications addressed to the House from the executive departments or from other sources are referred to committees by the Speaker and give authority for the committees to originate bills. Messages from the President also are referred by the Speaker of the House and give jurisdiction to the committees receiving them to originate bills.

Second. Reference to a standing or select committee: Public bills are referred under direction of the Speaker; private bills are endorsed with the names of the committees to which they go under the rule by the Members introducing them. Senate bills are referred under direction of the Speaker. A bill is numbered and printed when referred.

Third. Reported from the committee: Committees having leave to report at any time make their reports from the floor; other committees make their reports by laying them on the Clerk's table informally. The bill and the report are printed when reported.

Fourth. Placed on the calendar: Occasionally a privileged bill is considered when reported, but usually it is placed with the unprivileged bills on the calendar where it belongs under the rule by direction of the Speaker.

Fifth. Consideration in Committee of the Whole: Public bills which do not raise revenue or make or authorize appropriations of money or property do not go through this stage. All other bills are considered in Committee of the Whole. The stages of consideration in Committee of the Whole are: General debate; reading for amendment under the 5-minute rule; order to lay aside with a favorable recommendation or to rise and report; reporting of to the House.

Sixth. Reading a second time in the House: Bills not requiring consideration in Committee of the Whole are read a second time in full, after which they are open to debate and amendment in any part. Bills considered in Committee of the Whole are read a second time in full in that Committee and when reported out, with or without amendments, are not read in full again, but are subject to further debate or amendment in the House unless the previous question is ordered at once.

Seventh. Engrossment and third reading: The question on House bills is taken on ordering the engrossment and third reading at one vote. If decided in the affirmative, the reading a third time usually takes place at once, by title. But any Member may demand the reading in full of the engrossed copy, in which case the bill is laid aside until it can be engrossed. Senate bills come to the House in engrossed form, and the question is put on third reading alone. When the question on engrossment and third reading of a House bill or third reading of a Senate bill is decided in the negative, the bill is lost as much as if defeated on the final passage. The question on engrossment and third reading is not made from the floor, but is put by the Speaker as a matter of course.

Eighth. Passage: The question on the passage of a bill is put by the Speaker as a matter of course, without awaiting a motion from the floor.

Ninth. Transmission to the Senate by message.

Tenth. Consideration by the Senate: In the Senate, House bills are usually referred to committees for consideration and report, after which they have their several readings, with opportunities for debate and amendment. The same procedure takes place in the House as to bills sent from the Senate.

Eleventh. Return of, from the Senate without amendments: If the Senate passes a House bill without amendment it returns it to the House, where it is at once enrolled on parchment for signature. A bill thus passed without amendment goes into possession of the Clerk and is not laid before the House prior to enrollment. If the Senate rejects a House bill the House is informed. Similar procedure occurs when the House passes a Senate bill without amendment.

Twelfth. Return of, from the Senate with amendments: House bills returned with Senate amendments go to the Speaker's table. If any Senate amendment requires consideration in Committee of the Whole the bill is referred by the Speaker informally to the standing committee having jurisdiction, and when that committee reports the bill with recommendations it is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to be there considered and reported to the House itself. When no Senate amendment requires consideration in Committee of the Whole the bills come before the House directly from the Speaker's table.

Thirteenth. Consideration of Senate amendments by the House: When a bill with Senate amendments comes before the House the House takes up each amendment by itself and may vote to agree to it, agree to it with an amendment, or disagree to it. If it disagrees, it may ask a conference with the Senate or may send notice of its disagreement, leaving it to the Senate to recede or insist and ask the conference.

Fourteenth. Settlement of differences by conference: When disagreements are referred to conference the managers embody their settlement in a report, which is acted on by each House as a whole. When this report is agreed to the bill is finally passed and is at once enrolled for signature.

Fifteenth. Enrollment on parchment: The House in which a bill originates enrolls it.

Sixteenth. Examination by the Committee on Enrolled Bills: While the Committee on Enrolled Bills is described as a joint committee, each branch acts independently. The chairman of each branch affixes to the bills examined a certificate that the bill has been found truly enrolled.

Seventeenth. Signing by the Speaker and President of the Senate: The enrolled bill is first laid before the House of Representatives and signed by the Speaker, whether it be a House or Senate bill, after which it is transmitted to the Senate and signed by the President of that body.

Eighteenth. Transmittal to the President of the United States: The chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills for each House carries the bills from his House to the President. In the House of Representatives a report of the bills taken to the President each day is made to the House and entered on its Journal.

Nineteenth. Approval by the President: If the President approve, he does so with his signature.

Twentieth. Disapproval by the President: When the President disapproves a bill he returns it to the House in which it originated with a message stating that he disapproves and giving his reasons therefor.

Twenty-first. Action on, when returned disapproved: The House to which a disapproved bill is returned has the message read and spread on its Journal. It may then consider at once the question of passing the bill notwithstanding the President's objections, or may postpone to a day certain, or refer to a committee for examination. The vote on passing the bill notwithstanding the President's objections must be carried by two-thirds. If the bill fails to pass in the House to which it is returned, it remains there; but if it passes it is sent to the other House for action.

Twenty-second. Filing with the Secretary of State: When approved by the President a bill is deposited in the Office of the Secretary of State; and when the two Houses have passed a bill notwithstanding the President's objections, the presiding officer of the House which acts on it last transmits it to the Secretary of State.

What is "unanimous consent"?

Many little actions are done in and taken by the House by unanimous consent. The Member asks for unanimous consent to do this or that—to correct the Record, to speak for 5 minutes or more out of order, to insert remarks in the Record, to change an amendment he has offered, to have a letter read. If there is no objection on the part of any Member, then consent is granted. Frequently a gentleman says, "I object", and that settles that.

The leader of the majority makes many unanimous-consent requests, and usually they are granted. He may ask consent to meet at a certain hour, to adjourn over for a day or two, to hold a night session, to have so many hours for debate on a bill, to take up specified matters on certain days out of order, to set days for the Private and Consent Calendars. The granting of the request saves the passing of motions or the making of rules.

Many bills are passed by unanimous consent. All bills of a private character go on the Private Calendar. And another character of bills go on the Consent Calendar. On days when these bills are in order the Clerk reads the title of the bill, the Speaker asks, "Is there objection?" Any Member may say, "I object," if he desires, in which case the bill cannot be taken up; and the next title is read. If no objection is made, the bill is read and passed very quickly usually. The theory is that if no one cares to object to a bill certainly many would not vote against it, so it ought to be passed. Both party organizations have several Members who make it their business to study all bills on the Consent Calendars and be ready to object or insist on what they think to be the proper amendments before consent is granted for the bill to be considered.

Often a Member will arise and say, "Reserving the right to object," and ask questions about the bill. This gives the author of the bill a chance to explain or defend it, and sometimes quite a little debate is stirred up even on consent days. After a while somebody may shout "Regular order!" The Speaker says, "Regular order is demanded." Whereupon the gentleman who started the trouble by "reserving the right to object" must immediately make his objection or withdraw it. He may be just as apt to do one as the other, and on his decision rests the destiny of some anxious Member's important bill—for all bills are important to their hopeful authors. On consent days Members with bills on the calendar are most patient, polite, and persuasive in their ways toward the gentlemen who sit at the table and whose business it is to inquire into the merits of bills coming up.

How are votes taken?

Four different ways. Usually the Speaker puts the question in this form: "As many as are in favor (of the motion) say 'Aye,'" and then, "As many as are opposed say 'No.'" In most instances the vote taken thus is decisive enough to satisfy. But if the Speaker is in doubt, or if it sounds close, any Member may ask for a division. In this case the Speaker asks those in favor to stand up and be counted. Then those opposed to the proposition to stand up and be counted. The Speaker does the counting and announces the result. But if he is still in doubt, or if a demand is made by one-fifth of a quorum—that is, 20 in the Committee of the Whole or 44 in the House—tellers are ordered. The Speaker appoints one gentleman on each side of the question to make the count. The two tellers take their place at the head of the center aisle. All Members favoring the proposition walk through between the tellers and are counted. Then those opposed walk through and are counted. This vote settles most questions.

But a roll call may be demanded by anybody on any question in the House, and if supported by one-fifth of those present it is ordered. This privilege is guaranteed by the Constitution. The Clerk reads the names of the whole membership, and as his or her name is called the Member answers "aye" or "no." The names of those not voting the first time are read a second time, so that all Members in corridors, cloakrooms, committee rooms, or offices, who have been notified of a roll call by signal bells, may come in and vote.

Roll calls are ordered sometimes to get a full vote on a measure, because of a lack of a quorum, sometimes because Members want to be on record on a measure, and sometimes to put the other side on record against the measure for imaginary political advantage. The roll calls are published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and are sometimes quoted to a Member's advantage or disadvantage, as the case may be.

Many bills of lesser importance and some of greater importance are passed without a roll call. This can be done if a quorum is present when the vote is taken and as many as one-fifth of those present do not demand a roll call. This is done often to save time and sometimes to save Members the embarrassment of having to be recorded for or against a measure.

What is a quorum?

Everybody who ever attended a literary society knows that it requires a quorum to do business. In the House of Representatives a quorum is a majority of the membership. When there are no vacancies in the membership a quorum is 218. There are usually a few vacancies—Members who have died or have resigned and their places yet unfilled. So an actual quorum is usually a little under that figure. Much business is transacted without a quorum. But no business of any character, except to adjourn, can be transacted without a quorum present if any Member objects. All any Member has to do to get a full House is to arise, address the Speaker, and make the point of order that "no quorum is present." The Speaker says, "I will count." If he cannot count a majority present, the doors are closed, the bells are rung in the corridors and House Office Building, and the roll is called. This usually produces a quorum, and business proceeds.

When the House is in Committee of the Whole a hundred Members make a quorum.

Is legislation much influenced by oratory?

Not much. People back home may picture the House as a forum for debate upon the merits of the many bills they read about. It is in a way, but most of the debate is as potent as a sham battle. Very few bills that are brought up in the House for action under general or special rules are defeated. I think more than 95 percent of bills thus brought up are passed, despite the forensic display of oratory that may be directed against them, and usually is by the minority or the opposition. Hardly 1 amendment in 40 offered to bills on the floor is adopted unless offered or accepted by the committee reporting out the bill up for consideration.

Legislation enacted by any Congress is largely that originating with or sponsored by the majority party. Important measures brought up have had thorough scrutiny and a favorable report by a well-organized committee. They have probably had strong backing from the country. Some have had the approval of the steering committee and some have been reported out by the Rules Committee. Such measures are on the program for passage, and long debates and much oratory cannot defeat them. On the other hand, bills that are not slated for passage do not often get up for action in the House.

Committee responsibility is great and committee action influential. On most amendments and on most bills a majority of the Members vote most of the time with the committee—and it is difficult to break into that influence even with fine oratory.

What are the duties of the Speaker?

He presides over the House, appoints the Chairman to preside over the Committee of the Whole, appoints all special or select committees, appoints conference committees, has the power of recognition of Members, makes many important rulings and decisions in the House. The Speaker may vote, but usually does not except in case of tie. He may appoint a Speaker pro tempore but not for more than 3 days at a time without the consent of the House.

What is a party leader?

There is a majority leader and a minority leader. In talk on the floor we do not refer to Democrats and Republicans usually. It is more dignified, it seems, to refer to the majority and the minority. The majority leader now is a Democrat and the minority leader a Republican. The majority leader has the more influence, of course, since he has the majority of the membership back of him.

The leader is all the title implies. He leads in party debate, brings forward party programs and policies. His advocacy of or opposition to proposed legislation indicates the party preference. The majority leader has much control over what comes up and when of the legislative program from week to week. When he makes a motion it is nearly always carried. He usually makes the motion to adjourn, and it always carries. If someone else, not authorized to do so, makes a motion to adjourn, it is nearly always defeated.

What are the duties of the whip?

The whip looks after all legislation and endeavors to have all present when important measures are to be voted upon. When the vote is apt to be close he checks up, finds out who is out of the city, and advises absentees by wire of the important measure coming up.

Whoever originally compiled and codified the foregoing as quoted and the material referred to as appearing in the RECORD must have spent many valuable hours in research, study, and in the preparation of this contribution for our enlightenment. For one, as I have privately, so I now publicly, express my appreciation. [Applause.]

MR. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

MR. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, buried somewhere in this bill is the annual appropriation for the Intelligence Unit of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. On many occasions I have called to the attention of the members and to the country the activities of this unit. I contend if this Government activity was granted additional funds, and I base my statement on the record it has made, that for every dollar that is appropriated the Government would be enriched $30. Does it not seem to be good business when $30 can be brought to the Treasury for a dollar expended that we increase this appropriation?

As chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments I find upon investigation that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1938, the Intelligence Unit, with a force of 230 agents, investigated numerous cases involving alleged evasion of taxes by various taxpayers, including several prominent business and professional men as well as women and individuals engaged in illegal businesses, and recommended the prosecution of 309 individuals. One hundred and nine individuals were indicted, and of those so far brought to trial 50 were convicted. That these activities were profitable is shown by the recommendation in these cases for the assessment of additional taxes and penalties aggregating $26,106,014.

One outstanding case brought to a conclusion during the fiscal year 1938 involved a partnership prominent in the amusement field. Investigation by special agents of the unit disclosed that its income-tax returns were underestimated by $6,000,000 through the medium of concealment of income, fraudulent claims for losses on abandoned property, and fictitious purchases of assets on which fraudulent claims for depreciation had been made, and the Government had been defrauded of $3,500,000. Several former employees of the Bureau of Internal Revenue were found to be involved in the fraud and with the attorney for the partnership were indicted, convicted, and sentenced to prison.

The conviction was also obtained of a prominent public official of Chicago who for years had been identified with property assessments and had received large sums of money for favors granted those seeking reductions, which had not been reported for income-tax purposes. This individual was convicted and sentenced to 2 years in the penitentiary and to pay a fine of $5,000 for evasion of approximately $60,000 income taxes. In cooperation with agents of the Customs Service a Japanese racketeer on the west coast who had avoided prosecution on frequent previous violations of the law and who allegedly was responsible for several murders was found guilty of income-tax evasion on about $40,000 tribute extorted from several gambling clubs and was sentenced to 18 months in the penitentiary and to a fine of $3,000.

There are many other cases that could be cited but one, rather unusual, is worthy of mention. During the fiscal year an investigation involved a corporation engaged in the erection of jails and the construction of prison cells the officers of which were found by special agents of this unit to be concealing income from this source. Approximately $20,000 was recovered in taxes and criminal proceedings instituted. These officials might eventually find themselves occupying the very cells they constructed. This is one unit of the Government that does not have a publicity agent. Under the law there is no authority to make public its activities from time to time insofar as giving the facts in various cases to the press. Only when criminal proceedings are instituted or a case is taken to the Board of Tax Appeals does information become public. I am aware of one case where about five times the amount of the unit's annual appropriation was recovered based upon illegal shipment of liquor.

When local and State courts failed this unit stepped in and convicted gangsters and racketeers of income-tax evasion including Al Capone and his associates.

Elmer L. Irey, a man who has spent many years in the Government service is Chief of the Intelligence Unit. It is my opinion that Irey was responsible for solving the Lindbergh kidnaping case. I followed this case very carefully as I had introduced a bill making kidnaping a Federal offense. The bill had not been enacted into law when the Lindbergh baby was kidnaped. The Government had no jurisdiction other than from the standpoint of income-tax evasion. When the ransom money was paid the one who received the money was subject to the income-tax laws. The officials had a right to see that this individual did not defraud the Government and entered the case.

It was Irey who insisted that not a dollar should be passed until the serial number of each bill was recorded and gold certificates be included for easy identification. At first there was objection as Lindbergh, nervous, wanted his child and felt then if he paid the ransom the child would be returned, but Irey won his point. After the money was paid and Lindbergh was told he would find his baby on a motorboat off the New England coast it was Irey who accompanied him in the plane when he went in search of the boat. While it is true that the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice later entered the case, it was not until the kidnaping and fugitive from justice acts were passed that it had jurisdiction. The point I make is that no one would have known it was Lindbergh money that the oil station attendant received from Hauptmann if Irey had not insisted that gold certificates be included and that the serial numbers on the bills be recorded.

The principal work of this unit is the investigation of tax frauds but investigations were also made of 7,500 cases of miscellaneous character, including applicants for appointment and charges against employees as well as those practicing before the Treasury Department. During the fiscal year 89 employees were separated from the service as the result of such investigations, 20 being prosecuted for violations of criminal statutes and 18 convicted.

Let me impress upon the Members of the House that while this unit has an annual average of having collected more than 30 times the amount of money appropriated for the activity, still there is a feature of its work that brings big returns that are not reflected in the amount. Prosecutions in the criminal cases, as well as sending violators to jail, cause many taxpayers who have been careless in making returns or who have evaded payment of taxes, realizing some day they might be the one who is being prosecuted, make proper returns which enrich the Treasury.

I am not one who tries to override the Bureau of the Budget or the Committee on Appropriations when it appropriates the amount the Budget recommends, but I do feel it would be beneficial to the committee and to the country if it would see that in the future the appropriation for this unit is carried separately in the bill. In that way the Bureau of the Budget, as well as the committee, would realize the excellent work the unit is performing, and then I am sure the recommendation will be to enlarge its activities.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask special attention of the members of the committee in charge of the bill. I find in the bill a limitation, reading as follows:

That not to exceed $942,000 of the total appropriated herein may be expended for personal services of the Intelligence Unit, of which not to exceed $50,500 may be expended in the District of Columbia.

This seems to me to be a very dangerous limitation if permitted to remain. No one knows what might develop that would require additional expenditures in this most important unit. There might be a number of gigantic frauds develop in the next fiscal year. If this limitation remains, I doubt if the Commissioner of Internal Revenue could even assign men to the unit who were being paid through some other roll without violating the limitations.

In reference to the limitation as to expenditures in the District of Columbia, let me advise the Committee that the headquarters for the regional office which looks after all business in the District of Columbia, Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia, and North Carolina, is located in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. My understanding is this $55,000, to which the gentleman referred, is the expense required for the strictly departmental activities of this unit. The amount required for the field force, whether the members of that force operate in the District of Columbia or not, is not within this limitation. This applies as well to very many other items all through the appropriation bill under consideration.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] 5 additional minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I want the RECORD to show it is the intent of the committee that the cost of operating this regional office, which looks after the District of Columbia, Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia, and North Carolina, is not included in this limitation of $55,000. Am I correct?

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. This limitation does not appear to me to carry out that intent. The wording of the limitation is what I object to. Frankly, I think it is a mistake to put it in the bill.

Mr. TABER. It is just the same language carried all through the bill, and it operates in that way with reference to every unit of the Government.

Mr. COCHRAN. Naturally, I will accept the gentleman's view, as he has had years of experience on the committee. I know you do not want to cripple this unit. For instance, at times you have some big conspiracy case in the Department or in Washington. It is necessary to bring the field men to Washington, men from various parts of the country, for temporary service. It would cripple the service if this was not permitted, and therefore I am pleased to know the intent of the committee, as expressed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

NARCOTIC SERVICE

Mr. Chairman, also included in this bill is the appropriation for the narcotic service. A complete statement in reference to the activities are outlined by the testimony of Hon. H. J. Anslinger, the Commissioner, and the Deputy Commissioner, Hon. W. S. Wood. The statement reflects great credit on the personnel of this unit and shows that the drive to stop the illicit traffic in drugs resulted during the fiscal year in a decrease in the number of violations from 4,585 to 4,049; 3,206 arrests for violation of the Federal narcotic laws, despite the fact that owing to a limited appropriation it was necessary for the unit to curtail its activities during the last 6 months of the year.

Considerable headway was made by Commissioner Anslinger and his aids in stopping the source of supply. Every conceivable method was used to bring into this country, in violation of the law, narcotics, especially heroin, which is smuggled from the Far East and Yugoslavia. Through the efforts of Mr. Anslinger and others, Yugoslavia has now adopted laws that they hope will prevent the traffic in heroin from that country.

An added duty in recent years to this unit is the enforcement of the Marihuana Act of 1937. Eight hundred and forty-six violations of this law were reported during the fiscal year. It was interesting to note in Mr. Anslinger's testimony how the States of the Union are cooperating with the Government in an effort to stop the traffic in this horrible weed. Thirty-nine States and the District of Columbia have adopted the uniform legislation directly affecting traffic in marihuana, while two other States can prosecute under the State narcotic law, leaving but only seven States in the Union that have not as yet passed the necessary legislation. This weed can be grown almost anywhere. Cigarettes made of marihuana even reach the hands of school children to such an extent that it became alarming, but the activities of this unit, together with the State authorities, are rapidly sending those responsible to the penitentiary. The statement of Mr. Anslinger also shows that the number of the outstanding dealers in the illicit narcotic traffic were apprehended and sent to the penitentiary to serve long terms during the fiscal year. I feel that we should pause for a moment and commend the work of this very important unit. In my opinion the most despicable creature in this country is the one who engages in the illicit traffic of narcotics and we should not only send them to the penitentiary, but when they have served their sentences, those born in foreign countries should by all means be deported.

SECRET SERVICE

Mr. Chairman, now I am going to refer to some other activities of the Treasury. I speak now of the Secret Service Division, which is headed by Hon. Frank J. Wilson.

During the last fiscal year they brought to trial 2,569 cases and the convictions were 96.91 percent. This was a considerable increase over the previous year. Throughout the testimony of Mr. Wilson before the committee it showed that the activities of the Secret Service reduced the loss to the general public through the acceptance of counterfeit money to $435,000. More counterfeit notes were seized during the last fiscal year than the previous fiscal year, the total amount being $241,000. The investigations involving Government checks increased from 2,300 in 1937 to 5,737 in 1939.

CUSTOMS AND ALCOHOL UNITS

Time forbids me to discuss at length the Enforcement Unit of the Customs Service, as well as the Alcohol Unit of the Treasury Department. The Customs Service is engaged in many activities. For instance, they seized over 500,000 lottery tickets in Maine and 300,000 such tickets in Baltimore. They brought about convictions of some of our leading citizens who violated the customs laws and regulations, as well as seized a tremendous amount of narcotics.

The Alcohol Unit submitted an excellent statement in reference to its activities and it is evident that the efficiency of this Division is increasing from year to year.

In concluding, I want to commend the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, for coordinating the activities of the enforcement agencies of the Treasury Department. While this is in its infancy, it has already shown the benefit that will ultimately result from his action. At the present time Hon. Elmer L. Irey, Chief of the Intelligence Unit, is the Chief Coordinator, and the improved conditions in enforcement through Treasury agents as outlined in the hearings certainly will convince anyone that the step of coordination was one in the right direction.

These combined Treasury enforcement agencies are responsible for sending to the Federal penitentiaries approximately 65 percent of all Federal prisoners. [Applause.]

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to House Document No. 177, which apparently is the procedure being followed in connection with the construction of post-office buildings and buildings in the course of construction. It also covers the proposed construction of buildings.

On page 51 of this bill there is provided an appropriation of $30,000,000 for the construction of buildings. In connection with the letter contained in House Document 177, signed by the Postmaster General, Mr. Farley, as I said in reference to a question I asked the chairman of the subcommittee on appropriations, it would take 54 years if we followed this procedure to meet the present demand for post-office buildings in my district alone. I am going to ask the Members of the House to read this letter of Mr. Farley's, as well as the paragraph dealing with the appropriation for new post-office buildings, then consider the question of increasing this amount through amendment to at least double the amount contained in the pending bill.

Mr. Chairman, I am now going to speak about something that has no relation whatever to the bill under consideration. It has reference to a colloquy that occurred between the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], and myself, with reference to the interpretation of the law as applied to the National Labor Relations Board.

Mr. Chairman, on pages 1678 and 1679 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 7, 1939, appears a colloquy between the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] and myself concerning provisions of the Wagner Act, relative to the right of employers to appeal from a decision of the National Labor Relations Board.

Excerpts from the colloquy follow:

Mr. HOFFMAN. In answer to the gentleman from West Virginia and the gentleman from Montana, I am asking the gentlemen if they do not know that 90 percent of the representation cases are not even made up or reported and the employers have no right of appeal?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman recall that I called his attention to the fact that the word "employer" was a mistake and that the word I used was "employee"?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I recall that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And that the correction was made in the RECORD as soon as the error was called to my attention? The correction will be found on page 1546 of the RECORD.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Just a moment.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman kindly make that correction as he goes along?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will tell what the facts are as I go along.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Because at no time have I ever claimed that the employer did not have the right of appeal.

Mr. O'CONNOR. When I finish with this I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman for any question if the chairman will give me further time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Just make that correction now before you go any further.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I continue:

Mr. HOFFMAN. In answer to the gentleman from West Virginia and the gentleman from Montana, I am asking the gentlemen if they do not know that 90 percent of the representation cases are not even made up or reported and that the employers have no right of appeal.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Let me answer that statement. Those cases are settled, and whenever cases are settled they do not make headlines in the newspapers, and that is the reason the public does not know about them.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And the employers have to take the decision.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, no.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Let the gentleman point out in the Wagner law where an employer can appeal from a decision of the Board in such cases. It cannot be done.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This Board acts exactly as the Federal Trade Commission. They have the right to appeal from the National Labor Relations Board, and only 6 percent of the entire 15,000 cases ever went to the court for final determination.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I challenge the gentleman from Montana, as long as he has made that statement—

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman can get that right from the Labor Board itself.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I challenge the gentleman to point out to this House any day when I am on the floor a provision in the Labor Act that gives the employer the right to appeal in a representation case.

I may say now that I asked one of the pages to call the gentleman from Michigan over to the floor of the House so he would be here while I am discussing the matter.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is on the same plane as the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That provision is not in the law, and the gentleman cannot point it out.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We will point it out to you, do not worry.

You will note in the preceding colloquy that the gentleman from Michigan challenged me to point out in the Wagner law where an employer can appeal from a final order of the Board.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; not now. I will yield in just a few minutes. I need not point out to Members of this House the traditional position of the gentleman from Michigan respecting employers and employees. You will note that the gentleman from Michigan used the word "employer" four times in the preceding colloquy.

On page 1546 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 17 the gentleman from Michigan made a correction of remarks in the aforementioned colloquy and stated—I quote from the RECORD of that date:

The error occurs by reason of the use of the word "employers" when I meant and when I said "employees."

Needless to state, I was not on the floor of the House when the correction was made.

At this point I yield to the gentleman from Michigan for a question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman think for one moment I ever contended that under the Wagner Act the employer could not appeal, when the act itself provides for an appeal?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I may say to the gentleman—and I am not saying this in a contentious spirit—that I have no means of knowing what the gentleman was thinking except by what he said. Four times the gentleman used the word "employer," and the House reporters got it that way four times.

Mr. HOFFMAN. There is where we differ. I say I never used the word "employer," because every man in this House who has ever read the act knows that the act itself gives the employer the right of appeal. No one doubts that. What I said and what I contend today is that the act does not give the employee, the man who works, the right of appeal in a representative case, nor even in any case unless he has been permitted to intervene.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will permit me to proceed, I may say I fully agree with the gentleman's statement that any lawyer who has read the act knows that the employer has the right of appeal.

May I say I am not criticizing anybody; I am just trying to discuss this in a lawyerlike fashion.

In order to support the correction, the House reporters presumably misquoted the gentleman from Michigan four times in the use of the word "employee" in the colloquy.

However, the gentleman from Michigan entered his correction in the RECORD. This correction was made before the House went into Committee of the Whole on that day. After the correction was made I met the gentleman in the Hall and he spoke about making a correction to show him as using the word "employee" for the word "employer." I believe I said, "Well, make any correction you wish." I did not know that the gentleman was going to rechallenge me. The only reason I am replying to the gentleman now is that on that date, when I was not present, the gentleman gave me another challenge, and I accept that also.

I am first going to point out to you that employers have the right of appeal, and I am also going to point out to you that employees have the right of appeal in complaint cases, and that there is no necessity for appealing any representation case because it is not an appealable order.

However, the gentleman from Michigan entered his correction in the RECORD, and after stating that he meant to say and did say "employee" instead of "employer," the gentleman said:

I renew my challenge issued on the 6th day of February to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. Chairman, this is the only reason I am taking up the time of the Committee this afternoon to discuss this matter, other than as a matter of enlightenment. I do not know but that it might be well for us to think about this Wagner Act a little and about the administration, as the Board has been terrifically maligned. I also wish to point out the provision of the Labor Act which gives the employee the right to appeal.

In other words, I am challenged now to produce the part of the law that gives the employee the right to appeal from a decision of the Board in a representation case—get this—or in any complaint case where the employer acquiesces in the order of the Board. You will observe that the gentleman from Michigan challenged me again, in his correction of remarks, on the Wagner law with reference to its application to a different state of facts.

The gentleman from Michigan states further in his correction:

The point which I made on February 6, and which I desire to renew, is that the act is unfair to employees; that it deprives them of the right of collective bargaining through representatives of their own choice; that it denies to them their day in court.

This is the language of the correction.

In the sixth paragraph of his correction, the gentleman from Michigan states:

Even the most casual reader of the act knows that the act itself gives the employer the right of appeal under certain circumstances.

With that statement I agree. As I have said before, anybody who has read the act knows it gives the employer the right to appeal. He continues:

All who have studied the act know that the employees are not given such right by the act, except as an employee might fall under the designation of "any person aggrieved by final order of the Board," in section 10 (f).

The gentleman points out the exception himself.

Mark the words of the gentleman from Michigan. He says "except as an employee might fall under the designation of any person aggrieved by the final order of the Board." I am quoting the gentleman from Michigan.

It is obvious that if a person, employer or employee, was not aggrieved by the final order of the Board, he would have no desire whatsoever for an appeal from the final order. And section 10 (f) explicitly sets forth that if a person is aggrieved by the final order of the Board, he may appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals.

The gentleman from Michigan concludes his correction remarks by stating:

Let the gentleman show me any provision in this act which gives the worker, the employee, the right to appeal to the court to protect him in his constitutional right of free speech, freedom of action, or his right to enter into a contract with his employer, all of which have by the decisions of this Board on occasion been denied the worker.

Permit me to quote a portion of section 10, paragraph (f) of the Wagner Act:

Any person aggrieved by a final order of the Board granting or denying in whole or in part the relief sought may obtain a review of such order in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States in the circuit wherein the unfair labor practices in question were allowed to have been engaged in or wherein such person resides or transacts business, or in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, by filing in such court a written petition praying that the order of the Board be modified or set aside.

Now, what is a "person"? We will define "person." I quote from Judicial and Statutory Definitions of Words and Phrases, published by the West Publishing Co., that—

The natural and obvious meaning of the word "person" is a living human being.

I quote further:

Generally, when the word "person" or "party" is used in statutes, it is broad enough to include corporations, artificial persons, unless intention to exclude such artificial persons is plainly obvious.

I also wish to quote the definition of person as applies to "employee." The word "persons" in statutes including within Workmen's Compensation Act those employing other persons to carry on industry or business may apply to single employees, thus bringing within the act one who hires single employees.

In addition, when the word "person" is used in statutes, it naturally includes all "persons" except in cases where restrictions or exclusions are set aside.

The question is, Is an employee a person? Obviously, he is. Now, I do not want to take up any more time at this time unless the gentleman wishes me to conclude so that he can ask me a question.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Being one of those who believes in settling international disputes by conference, I am wondering if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] and the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] might not retire to the cloakroom and settle who is right around the conference table, so that the business of the House may proceed.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. This not being an international dispute, this being a question as to the interpretation of the Wagner law, and the gentleman from Montana, as well as your humble servant from the Fourth Congressional District of Michigan, having the privilege as the gentleman from the Second District of Michigan has the privilege of addressing the House on occasion, although not so frequently, may I call to the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] that he has the privilege of retiring either to his office, the cloakroom, or the theaters of the town, if he does not care to listen to the debate. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, on December 5, 1938, Mr. Chief Justice Hughes delivered the opinion of the Court in the action brought by the Consolidated Edison Co. of New York, Inc., and its affiliated companies, et al., petitioners, against the National Labor Relations Board et al., and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local Union No. B-825, et al., petitioners, against the National Labor Relations Board et al.

Excerpts from the opinion of the Court delivered by Mr. Chief Justice Hughes follow:

The companies petitioned the circuit court of appeals to set aside the order, and a petition for the same purpose was presented by the brotherhood and its locals. These labor organizations had not been parties to the proceeding before the Board but intervened in the court of appeals as parties aggrieved by the invalidation of their contracts.

The Board urges further that the unions have availed themselves of the opportunity to petition for review of the Board's order in the court of appeals * * *.

While it is true that the employer did not acquiesce in the order of the Board, nevertheless the brotherhood considered itself an aggrieved party, as well as the employer, and an appeal was taken to the circuit court of appeals.

Proceedings under the act fall into two distinct categories: First, those involving unfair labor practices, and, second, those involving the question of what, if any, organization represents the majority of the employees in the appropriate unit. In the first category, known as complaint cases, the act provides for appeal by any party aggrieved whenever there is a final order. "Any party aggrieved" includes, of course, any employee or labor organization.

A different problem, however, is involved in representation cases. The act provides that whenever a question arises concerning whether or not the employees have chosen a representative to bargain collectively for them, the Board may conduct an investigation and certify to the parties the name of the representative selected. The method of determination which the Board employs is ordinarily either by check of union membership lists with the company's pay roll or by the holding of a secret election. Section 9 (d) provides that such certification by the Board is not immediately reviewable by the courts.

Congress made clear its reasons for declaring that such a certification was not immediately reviewable. Its reasons lie (1) in the very nature of the proceedings and (2) in the practical policy involved.

As to the nature of the representation proceedings, it is important to note, as pointed out by Congress that—

The election is but a preliminary determination of fact. * * * (H. Rept. No. 1147, 74th Cong., 1st sess., p. 7).

An election is the mere determination of a preliminary fact, and in itself has no substantial effect upon the rights of either employer or employees (S. Rept. No. 573, 74th Cong., 1st sess., p. 14).

Such representation proceedings, therefore, are simply investigatory, and are not considered adversary. The certification amounts only to an announcement or statement of the result of the Board's research and investigation as to what representative has been selected by the particular employees concerned. It is in no sense a judicial order, and does not require any party to do or not to do any act. As stated by the Senate report (No. 573, p. 14):

There is no more reason for court review prior to an election than for court review prior to a hearing.

The Third Circuit Court of Appeals, in refusing to review a certification, held (United Employees Association v. National Labor Relations Board, 96 F. (2d) 865):

Here the union is merely certified as "the exclusive representative of all such employees for the purpose of collective bargaining. * * * This is not a final order. It is, in fact, not an order at all but simply the certification of a fact which may be entirely ignored by the association (i. e., the union) and the company.

Since the certification is not a judicial order, neither the employer nor employees are bound by it. If they do not agree to a certification, they can disregard it. It is at this point, of course, that the matter may become subject to judicial review. If there is a refusal to bargain collectively with the union which has been previously certified, the Board may hold a hearing and order the employer to cease his refusal to bargain collectively. The prior representation case then becomes a part of the record, which, before the employer is bound to bargain, is reviewable by the court.

And this review would include within its scope the action of the Board in determining the appropriate unit for purposes of the election. This provides a complete guaranty against arbitrary action by the Board (S. Rept. No. 573, p. 14; H. Rept. No. 1147, p. 23).

Reasons of great weight led to this procedure which Congress thus set out. Under the joint resolution of Congress whereby the first Labor Board was established, elections which the Board sought to conduct were interminably delayed by appeals to the courts. The old Board was not able to conduct a single election in which court proceedings were instituted. Such a situation defeated the very purposes of the law, in that it led to great unrest, friction, and industrial strife. Thus the reports stated:

OBSTACLES TO ELECTION

Under Public Resolution 44, any attempt by the Government to conduct an election of representatives may be contested ab initio in the courts, although such election is in reality a preliminary determination of fact. This means that the Government can be delayed indefinitely before it takes the first step toward industrial peace. * * *

This break-down of the law is breeding the very evil which the law was designed to prevent. * * * (S. Rept. No. 573, pp. 5-6).

The ability of employers to block elections has been productive of a large measure of industrial strife. When an employee organization has built up its membership to a point where it is entitled to be recognized as the representative of the employees for collective bargaining * * * the union, unless an election can promptly be held to determine the choice of representatives, runs the risk of impairment of strength by attrition and delay while the case is dragging all through the courts, or else is forced to call a strike to achieve recognition by its own economic power. Such strikes have been called when election orders of the National Labor Relations Board have been held up by court review (H. Rept. No. 1147, p. 7).

When it is considered that the Board, up to January 1, 1939, handled 6,157 representation petitions, involving just short of 2,000,000 employees, the tremendous burden of litigation and the great possibility of delay and unrest, which, permitting appeals from such cases would entail, becomes staggering. Experience has amply demonstrated that employees or even unions instigated by employers are too often willing to act at the employers' bidding. By permitting employee appeals from certification, an easy method of delaying his duty to bargain and an easy opportunity of weakening a bona fide union would be presented to an employer.

Particularly in view of the availability of complete court review if there is a final order based on certification, and also in view of the fact that certification in itself is an order that binds no one at all, the value of permitting immediate appeals is not apparent. The existing procedure, adopted by Congress after careful consideration, fully protects the interest of employees and employers insofar as is consistent with the protection of the paramount interests of the public in maintaining industrial peace by efficient and speedy determination of the issues which pave the way toward collective bargaining.

Inquiry was made by me to the National Labor Relations Board as to the construction of section 10, paragraph (f), in connection with whether or not the employee has the right of appeal from the final order of the Board. The reply of Charles Fahy, general counsel of the Board, is very enlightening on this subject. I quote Mr. Fahy's letter to me:

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN O'CONNOR: I think there is no doubt that you are entirely correct in the conclusion that the right of review of final orders of the Board in complaint cases is not limited to employers but includes labor organizations and employees, under the provisions of section 10 (f) providing "Any person aggrieved by a final order of the Board granting or denying in whole or in part the relief sought may obtain a review of such order in any circuit court of appeals in the United States." A recent illustration is the case of Consolidated Edison Co., et al. v. National Labor Relations Board (decided by the Supreme Court of the United States December 5, 1938). In this case a labor organization petitioned the circuit court of appeals for review of an order of the Board affecting contracts to which the labor organizations have petitioned under section 10 (f) as a person aggrieved, i. e., National Motor Bearing Co., et al. v. National Labor Relations Board, now pending in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. The Board has never attempted to construe the statute so as to prevent such review.

Of course, the question whether or not a person is aggrieved by an order is subject to the principles of law applicable to the facts of the case; but assuming that the party claiming to be aggrieved has sufficient interest in the order, and the order is one that is reviewable by the courts, the statutory provision is no more limited to employers than to employees in labor organizations. In addition to the cases referred to above and others that might be mentioned, the circuit courts have also in several cases permitted employees to intervene in the court proceedings even though they had not intervened before the Board.

CHARLES FAHY, General Counsel.

[Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. I inquired of the chief counsel, Mr. Fahy, the general counsel with respect to the Wagner Act, what his construction of the law was as to the right of an employee to appeal, and I am setting forth in the RECORD a copy of his letter which shows that in his judgment and according to the decisions thus far rendered not only the employer is given the right of appeal, but the employee is given the right of appeal in all complaint cases.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman write him another letter and ask him what position the counsel for the Board took in the Calcraft case now pending, as to whether or not the employee was a person aggrieved?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, I am not going to be outdone by the gentleman in civilities. I suggest that he write the letter he refers to and I am sure that he will get a prompt reply. Very well. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I have been a Member of the House for a few years, but this is the first year in which I have been a member of the Committee on Appropriations. I have been amazed at the arduous additional duties of a member of the Committee on Appropriations and I have marveled at the fortitude and physical, as well as mental, capacity of our chairman [Mr. LUDLOW] in sitting through these hearings from 10 o'clock in the morning until late in the afternoon over a period of about 2 months. And I have observed that while the gentleman from Indiana is somewhat peaceable in the matter of national affairs, he is very militant, may I say to the House, in interrogating witnesses and going to the very bottom of all appropriation matters submitted to the Treasury-Post Office Subcommittee. I cannot too warmly commend the patriotism and industriousness of the ranking minority member [Mr. TABER], as well as other members of the subcommittee. This bill, being the first under our subcommittee which has been brought to the House during my short time on the committee, has been somewhat interesting to me from several viewpoints.

It may be noted that in the Federal service we now have about 917,000 employees. This bill makes appropriation for more than one-third of all of the employees of the Federal Government. We have in the civil service at this time about 562,000 people under the so-called merit system. Of that number, in this bill we make an appropriation to pay the salaries of 58 percent of those 562,000 employees. Those who are favorable to the merit system under the civil service ought to take consolation in the fact that so large a part of our revenue is devoted to the payment of civil-service employees. Of our 285,000 employees in the postal system, all but about 5,000 are under the merit system. More than 40,000 of the 68,000 employees of the Treasury Department are under the so-called civil-service merit system.

The postal system and the activities of the Treasury Department are indispensable to our modern-day life. The suspension of these activities would within a few hours create chaos in every part of the Nation. It is therefore, of course, necessary to have the men and the money to carry on these functions.

A great amount of money is necessary for these departments. Realizing that throughout the country there are many unemployed and underpaid people, and bearing in mind the financial condition of the Government, we sought to effect every possible economy. Even at that, we are recommending the appropriation of a huge amount of money for the activities of the Treasury and Post Office Departments.

Of course, in appropriating some $790,000,000 for the Postal System we realize that we get back in revenue all but about 7 percent of that money; but this bill, as the chairman has already explained, carries an appropriation of $1,700,000,000 for both Departments. It will be noted from the report that permanent appropriations, such as money for the carry charge on our public debt, and so forth, all for the Treasury Department, amount to more than $3,000,000,000. So, actually, the bill before us calls for a total appropriation of more than $4,700,000,000. That sum is equivalent to about four-fifths of all Federal revenues last year. Someone has facetiously remarked that we might pass this bill and go home, because this carries all the money that we have.

I wanted to make particular reference to some items carried in the bill in which I think some gentlemen have a special interest. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] made some reference awhile ago to the public-buildings program. All Members are naturally interested in knowing whether or not they are going to get a new Federal building in their districts; and Members understand that most congressional districts, having an abundance of eligible towns, have received a Federal building—post-office building—each year during the past 4 years. In 1937 we authorized an appropriation for post-office buildings, and so forth, of about $70,000,000, and in 1938 we authorized an appropriation of $60,000,000, making a total of about $130,000,000, and it was the purpose of Congress that out of the $130,000,000 we have two buildings for each congressional district over a 3-year period. I think the Members of the House ought to understand that while we are appropriating some $30,000,000 in this bill for Federal buildings, it does not mean that we will get an additional building for our district during 1939.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. For what purpose will the $130,000,000 be expended if not in post-office buildings in the various districts?

Mr. MAHON. We have authorized since 1937, $130,000,000 for public buildings. When we appropriate this $30,000,000, we will have appropriated $89,000,000 of the $130,000,000; and the $130,000,000 is required to give approximately, as I understand it, two Federal buildings for each congressional district, where the requirements can be met, during the 3-year period beginning in 1937. Last year, after the appropriation, the gentleman will recall that we were called upon, some of us, to recommend the places in our districts where the buildings were to be constructed.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I would like to ask a further question. I take it that the purpose is to construct these public buildings in large cities, as has been the practice in years past, and let the country towns that have had no benefit or convenience of public buildings go as they have in the past. Is that true?

Mr. MAHON. I think the gentleman knows that in the distribution of Federal buildings they have been fairly equitably distributed among the various sections of the country. At least that has been true since my first election to Congress in 1934. I am not familiar with the public-building program prior to that time.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. But the gentleman will admit that the large cities have received the lion's share and that the country districts have been left until the other districts have been amply served.

Mr. MAHON. I would not at all agree to the statement of the gentleman in that regard. I think we ought to have additional buildings this year, but our approach to that is not by increasing this $30,000,000 in this bill, or through any amendment that might be offered to this bill, but by other legislation which would authorize a larger public-building program. I compliment my good friend from Missouri for his zeal in behalf of the rural districts. I, too, represent an agricultural and not a city district.

Perhaps I should make it clear that the $30,000,000 carried in this bill for public buildings will not provide for any new buildings. It merely provides for those buildings which have already been selected and designated for construction.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In the letter to which I referred, written by Mr. Farley, he points out that under the authorizations contained in the acts of August 25, 1937, and June 21, 1938, allotments have been made for 728 projects. Referring to the act of August 25, 1937, I call to the gentleman's attention that the language in that act provides for the construction of a Federal post office in each congressional district every 3 years, instead of every 1 year. That is the way this money is going to be used and that is the policy that the Post Office Department is carrying out, and for that reason the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] and myself tried to amend that act by striking out the word "three" and inserting the word "one"; but we did not receive approval of that amendment. The result of that is that in my own district it would take 54 years, carrying out this policy, to give to the smaller towns referred to by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ZIMMERMAN] any post-office buildings.

Mr. MAHON. I think I have yielded sufficiently to the gentleman. For the past 4 years we have provided for one Federal building each year in each district, as a rule. If the gentleman has 54 eligible towns in his district—

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; 18 eligible towns.

Mr. MAHON. It would take 54 years under the program that has been followed in the past 4 years to supply 54 Federal buildings for the gentleman. Having only 18 eligible towns, at the rate of 1 building a year, or 2 buildings every 3 years, it would not take 54 years to supply the needs of his district. I will say to the gentleman that there are a hundred towns in Texas, some 8 or 10 in my own congressional district, that are eligible for Federal buildings. I would like to see money appropriated to build those buildings, but additional authorizations are going to be necessary.

Now, there is another matter to which I would like to refer.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. Has the gentleman had any complaints about building Federal buildings in any of these towns? I have listened to the newspaper clatter in Washington that they did not want the Government buildings in Washington because we were not paying taxes on them, and they feel that the Federal Government should pay taxes on every building they build. Has the gentleman had any such complaints as that from the rural districts?

Mr. MAHON. I have not heard of any, but if the gentleman will refer to these hearings he will find that the Post Office Department very emphatically maintains that it is cheaper to rent quarters than it is to build post-office buildings and maintain them. I would like to say, however, that too often we are spending too much money on these buildings, whereas we could provide some ten or fifteen or twenty thousand dollar postal facilities, perhaps even in the well-established third-class-office towns.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. With reference to the question just propounded by the gentleman from Texas, I represent a district composed of five suburban cities. We now have a Government post office in each of those cities. The people in my district have been very happy indeed to have the buildings, and they have made no complaints whatsoever on the ground that they were not taxable property. They are glad to have the facilities.

Mr. MAHON. I thank the gentleman. May I say that in the large agricultural district which I represent we have six Federal buildings, and a contract will be let for another in the near future.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. The remark that the gentleman just made that the Post Office Department claims it is cheaper to rent buildings than it is to build them is true, but the class of buildings you get is not only not comparable at all but are often a disgrace to the Post Office Department, which rents them.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman has presented a very correct position there.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT. Does not the gentleman feel that by spending something like one-third or one-half the amount that is now being spent on Federal buildings, in towns with a population of from three to five thousand, we could build buildings in keeping with the other buildings in those towns and enable us to have about three where we now have one, or probably two where we now have one Federal building?

Mr. MAHON. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I do not know that you could build them for five or six thousand dollars.

Mr. GARRETT. No. I say in towns with a population of from three to five thousand.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, yes. I think the gentleman is correct. I know the gentleman has been working along that line for some time and I think that is a sound policy.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I just called the Post Office Department to inquire whether or not the first item of $30,000,000, on page 51 of the bill, represents one post-office building in each congressional district this year. I may not have heard the gentleman's explanation of that. Would he mind telling me?

Mr. MAHON. I have just explained that it takes about $60,000,000 to construct a post-office building in each district each year. The $30,000,000 carried in the bill is just to carry on the 3-year program of two buildings for each congressional district for the 3-year period.

Mr. DONDERO. And those buildings have already been allocated.

Mr. MAHON. In almost every case.

Another matter to which I wish to call attention and to which consideration should be given is that of the star-route carrier. The star-route carrier is shamefully underpaid.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Is the gentleman now leaving the building-program feature?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield to permit me to make an observation regarding it?

Mr. MAHON. With pleasure.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman from Texas makes a suggestion which, while it might be entirely practical, might be disastrous in the long run. It has been the experience that where a high-class building is put in a town, of a type better than the ordinary buildings in the town, it encourages the building of better buildings in that locality.

Mr. MAHON. I thank the gentleman.

As I was about to say, the star-route carrier is shamefully underpaid. It is no fault of the administration of the star-route law that he is shamefully underpaid, but it is due to the nature of the law itself. The law itself brings about this shameful discrimination against the star-route carrier. In 1925 the star-route carriers were carrying the mail 90,000,000 miles a year. In 1938 the star-route carriers carried the mails 171,000,000 miles; and they carried it more than 171,000,000 miles this past year for less money than they carried it 90,000,000 miles in 1925. In other words, the star-route carrier for carrying the mail 90,000,000 miles in 1925 received compensation in the sum of $12,000,000, but in 1938 for carrying the mail 171,000,000 miles he will perform this service for about $11,500,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. GEYER of California. Does not the star-route carrier secure his route by competitive bidding?

Mr. MAHON. He does.

Mr. GEYER of California. How would the gentleman recommend that this condition be remedied?

Mr. MAHON. The legislative committee of the House on the Post Office and Post Roads has been trying to work out a basis that would provide a fair standard of pay. It must be remembered that during the 1920's it was hard to get people to bid on these routes; men ordinarily were getting such good pay they did not care to bid on them; but now, with some six or ten million people unemployed and wanting these star routes and bidding on them when they do not know much about the real cost of operating the route, they bid hopelessly low; and the Post Office Department, notwithstanding its knowledge of that fact, is nevertheless compelled to let the lowest bidder have the contract. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] was telling me that he knows of a man in his district who is carrying the mail 90 miles a day for $80 a month. Bear in mind that this is substantially his only pay, and out of this $80 he must provide all the expense incident to owning and operating his car. The average star carrier gets 4.11 cents per mile for carrying the mail in Texas. The average for the Nation is about 6½ cents. The average per-mile pay of the star carriers in 1925 was 13½ cents. I know of many cases of great hardship and injustice in the star-route service. The injustice should have been corrected years ago. Remedial legislation certainly should be passed at this session.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. POAGE. Let me also call attention to the fact that the average star-route carrier in our section makes a box-to-box delivery exactly as the rural carrier does. The theory of the star-route carrier is that he takes the mail from one point to another, but in actual practice he makes box-to-box deliveries also.

Mr. MAHON. That is the fact, the majority of star-route carriers now actually make box deliveries.

Mr. POAGE. And may I ask the gentleman one other question?

Mr. MAHON. Certainly.

Mr. POAGE. Is it not a fact that a star-route carrier to retain his contract, no matter how low that contract is, must underbid himself for the simple reason that everybody in the county knows what he has got it for? If he has it for $60 a month this year he knows somebody else will bid $55 a month, and if he expects to hold it he will have to bid $50 himself.

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. POAGE. He has got to underbid his own low bid in order to hold it.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman has correctly stated the situation. The only way that situation can be met is for the legislative Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to bring in corrective legislation. They did bring in such legislation 2 years ago. It passed the Congress, but the President vetoed it. Last year I appeared before a subcommittee of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee of the House in behalf of star-carrier legislation. The committee has had considerable hearings on the subject for many years. I want to make it clear that I am not criticizing the great Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I know they have been working on the matter; that they know about the injustices of the system. I do believe that the great majority of the Members of the House and Senate are in favor of a square deal for the star carrier, and that if the Post Office and Post Roads Committee will bring out a reasonable bill on the subject the legislation will be passed.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARRETT. Does not the gentleman feel the Post Office Department should not be required to accept the lowest responsible bid, as it is termed? Does not the gentleman think it ought to have more latitude in passing upon these matters?

Mr. MAHON. I think the gentleman is correct. The star-route carrier wants something approaching reasonable pay to support himself and family. He is not advocating a big salary.

I had hoped to speak at some length regarding that provision of the bill which has reference to the program of the Federal land bank and land-bank commissioner. It will be recalled that we have reduced by previous legislation the legal rate of interest on these loans to 3½ percent on land-bank loans and 4 percent on land-bank commissioner loans. However, my time has about expired, and I cannot undertake to do this. Of course, there are many other features of the bill which might profitably be considered further.

Under leave to extend and revise my remarks, I wish to submit for the RECORD the following with further reference to the star-route carrier problem under discussion. The following table will reveal the increases in the number of routes, the length and annual mileage of the routes, and the decreases in the annual cost and the cost per mile in the period from 1925 to the present.

Data on star-route service

Fiscal year	Number of routes	Length (miles)	Annual mileage	Annual cost	Cost per mile (cents)
1925	10,908	164,209.19	90,869,158.35	$12,145,635.95	13.37

A few days ago I received a letter from a friend of mine who is a patron of a star route in my district, which I believe presents this problem in a representative way, not only from the standpoint of the star-route carrier, but also from the standpoint of the patron of the service which results from this system of competitive bidding. That letter was from Mr. Robert N. Wagener, of Forsan, Tex., proprietor of the Wagener Engineering & Equipment Co., and I herewith submit it verbatim for the RECORD:

WAGENER ENGINEERING & EQUIPMENT CO.,
Forsan, Tex., February 7, 1939.

HON. GEORGE MAHON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MAHON: I wish to call your attention to the viciousness and consequent poor service due to the contract system on star mail routes.

The men who bid on these routes have only limited resources and in general do not realize the cost of operating a car or light truck. In the case of Mr. S. Grubaugh, who has the route through Forsan to Sterling City, I find that his annual contract calls for $1,595.72. The route mileage is 131 miles per day and 313 days per annum. A light truck cannot be operated for less than 4 cents per mile. By simple calculation we find that his annual cost of operating this truck is $1,640.12.

We can conclude that this man is working for the United States Government for less than nothing. In order to continue he must pick up freight for Forsan and Sterling City. This delays the mail here. The east-bound train arrives at Big Spring at 7:40 a. m., the west-bound at 7:10 a. m. With only the duties of a mail route we would have the mail here at 9 a. m. Instead, the average time of his arrival is 10:45 a. m.

He starts to work at 7:30, leaves Forsan on his return route at 5 p. m., and checks out at the Big Spring post office about 5:45. His total working hours are 61½ hours per week. You can readily understand that we have here a violation of the minimum wage and hour law by the United States Government, at least in effect. Moreover this man does not have the advantage of a pension as a Government employee or of the Social Security Act.

We have here a third-class post office and are entitled to 7-day mail service instead of 6. Also we should have at least two mail deliveries per day instead of one.

A number of the oil companies here, in order to get their mail early, must have the expense every day of a 50-mile round trip to Big Spring and about 2 hours of one man's time.

These men should be put on civil service at a decent wage and the cars or trucks furnished by the Government. There are three other star routes out of Big Spring and the situation in each case is almost as bad as that of the example given.

Please do what you can to correct this unfairness.

Kindest personal regards.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBT. N. WAGENER.

The Post Office Department has classified the types of services rendered by star routes into eight distinct classes, as follows:

- (1) Serves post offices and performs delivery and collection service to box patrons.
- (2) Serves post offices but does not perform box delivery and collection service.
- (3) Handles only restricted classes of mail and serves post offices only.
- (4) Serves post offices and provides rural-delivery features to box patrons.
- (5) Performs box delivery and collection service to patrons but does not serve any post offices.
- (6) Provides rural-delivery features to box patrons but does not serve any post offices.
- (7) Known to be operated by bus or transit companies, handling all classes of mail.
- (8) Known to be operated by bus or transit companies, handling only restricted classes of mail.

It is in regard to those classes wherein box delivery is made to patrons along the star route, and wherein the principal reason for the existence of the carrier is the delivery of the mail to the offices and the boxes served, that I feel special consideration should be given by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads looking toward appropriate legislation which would place the carriers involved on a sound and fair living wage and at the same time insure to the patrons who are served along the route, and the offices that are served, an improved service, sound and efficient in its method of operation. In regard to the situation of those star routes on which no box deliveries are made, I want to say frankly that I am not familiar with any problems of the carriers or the Department, and do not at this time speak in regard to them. Without appropriate legislation designed to correct the deficiencies in the present system of competitive bidding, the Post Office Department is bound under the law to go on accepting the lowest bid without any special consideration to the efficiency of the service or the living conditions of the men who render that service.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that on the 7th day of February, when the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] was speaking and I asked a question which was answered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR], I did not ask to have the transcript sent over to my office for correction. It was a week or two after the remarks were made on the floor and had been printed in the United States News that the error was called to my attention, and I discovered the official reporters had inserted the word "employer" in place of the word "employee." I assume the responsibility for being misunderstood by the reporter rather than charge that he was in error.

Mr. Chairman, anyone reading the act knows that the employer has the right to appeal after the Board has made a final order. I know too, as he stated, that one section of the law states that any "person aggrieved" by an order of the Board may appeal. I know also that the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of National Labor Relations Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation (301 U. S. 1), made the following statement:

Any person aggrieved by a final order of the Board may obtain a review in the designated courts with the same procedure as in the case of an application by the Board for the enforcement of its order.

A layman reading this statute would assume that any person aggrieved, whether he be employer, an employee, or a union, might appeal, but if I read the act correctly, and if I read the decisions of the National Labor Relations Board, the circuit court of appeals, and the Supreme Court correctly, it has never been held that an employee had the right to appeal in a representation case nor in a complaint case unless he had been, in the discretion of the Board or court, permitted to intervene.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD tomorrow morning, he will find that I point out a case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, in which the opinion was written by Justice Hughes, to the effect that an employee, the Labor Board, or a labor organization may have the right to intervene and in connection with this decision it is clearly pointed out by Justice Hughes that the employee had the right to appeal in any complaint case.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What about a representation case?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is now talking about something else. If the gentleman had not added "complaint cases" to his challenge, I do not think I would have answered him. The difference between a representation case and a complaint is that a representation case is simply an investigation to find out who has the right to represent the union.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes. I am sure we all appreciate and thank the gentleman for his exposition or commentary on the law.

Mr. O'CONNOR. For the purpose of bargaining collectively. It issues a certificate. That is not a decision of the Board at all, and it is not a decision from which an appeal could be taken.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do not take too much time. I appreciate the gentleman's statements and I do not have any particular quarrel with the gentleman on that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. A complaint case is a case in which a decision is rendered after a complaint has been filed, an answer has been filed, the issues joined and a trial is had. Then both employee and employer have the right to appeal.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman get more time for me from his side? He is using my time to explain matters we all understand and do not question.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will get him 5 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. A complaint case can only arise, if I read the law correctly, where an employer is involved. A representation case arises, as I think the gentleman stated, when the Board or the examiner is called upon or assumes to decide who shall be selected and certified as the bargaining agent.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is correct.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What is more vital to the employee, the man who works in the factory, than the question as to who shall represent him, whether he shall be represented by group A or group B? When once the Board or the examiner makes a decision that group A is to represent me, a worker, have I the right of appeal to the courts?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Get this point—

Mr. HOFFMAN. Have I that right? Answer that question. That is the point at issue in all this discussion. Tell me, can I appeal from the order or rule or whatever it be that advises me that union A shall represent me in collective bargaining with my employer?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I got the gentleman 5 minutes, so I hope he will yield me 1 minute.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do not use 10 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The Board makes an investigation.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman is talking about a representation case.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes. It finds that such-and-such a union has the right to represent the employees, or that John Smith has the right to represent these employees. And so certifies.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The only occasion on which a controversy can arise is where the employer refuses to recognize that representation.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, no. If 40 or 60 percent of the workers do not wish to be represented by the group certified by the Board there may be, there often has been, a controversy which closed the factory.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is the only case in which it can arise. The point is that the employer proceeds to ignore the certification of the Board, and then is when a decision may come in. For instance, the employee can then proceed to compel the employer to comply with the selection made by the Board; in other words, to cease and desist ignoring the certificate made by the Board.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That may be true so far and in the case that the gentleman has cited, but what right of appeal have the employees who wish to be represented by group B when the Board has designated group A as the representative for collective bargaining and the employer complies with the Board's order?

Or assume that, because of the intervention of the Board, it has brought about one of those so-called settlements and the company, the Board, and Union A have all agreed that Union A shall be the bargaining agent. Where is the provision in the statute that gives the members of group B the right to appeal to the court because they feel themselves aggrieved? In the case I have cited there is no final order. Group A, the employer, and the Board have all agreed outside and off the record that A shall be the bargaining agent. Even though group B represents 50, 60, or 80 percent of the employees, where is their remedy under this statute?

Let us say that these two gentlemen over here want to be represented by Union B. The gentleman from Montana and I want to be represented by Union A. Along comes the Board and says that the bargaining agent is the agent selected by Union B. Now, you tell me where in the law, where in a decision, where in a ruling of the Board, it is stated that members of the A Union, the employees, the men who work in the factory and who belong to Union A, and who are not permitted to select a bargaining agent, can appeal to any court?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Now the gentleman is getting right.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have been right all the time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh no; that is where the gentleman is wrong. This law covers two categories of cases, representation and complaint cases. Does the gentleman want to know the reason now—

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I want the gentleman to tell me where in the law it is stated that the employee, the man who works in the factory, can, when a rival union has been recognized as the bargaining agency by the Board and the employer, appeal to the court. That is what I want to know.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Not in a representation case.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is all I want to know, and I call the gentleman's attention to the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Third Circuit, which he will find reported in Ninety-sixth Federal (2d) 875, where that court held in no unmistakable terms that when the Board certified that one union was the exclusive representative of the employees for collective bargaining, such a certification was not a "final order," was not an "order," and it was not reviewable, and from it employees or other unions had no right of appeal.

The court, ignoring the practical situation, said that until a "final order is made, the party is not injured and cannot be heard to complain." That statement, of course, ignores the fact that, after one union has been certified, it is matter of common knowledge that a rival union loses its members, is unable to collect its dues, and that an employer will not bargain with it.

It ignores the fact that after such a certification has been made the Board may delay proceedings for a month or a year or for a term of years, and during all that time, not only the employer, but the employee and the rival union has no remedy.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman included in his challenge not only representation cases but complaint cases, and that is where the gentleman made his mistake.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Let me tell the gentleman there is just one complaint case I have been able to find, and the gentleman has that $3,000,000 force down there at his disposal.

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; I have not.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Have them point out to me a complaint case where an employee has been able to get into court where a final order has not been made except in this case of Edward P. Harris against National Labor Relations Board, which is now pending before the Supreme Court on an application for a writ of certiorari. The only way they got into court in that case was because the Board in that particular case permitted them to intervene originally, which the Board did not need to do. So much for that.

If I understood the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] correctly, he concedes that, in a representation case, an employee cannot appeal from a decision of the Board which may affect him adversely, but he contends that the words, "any person aggrieved by a final order of the Board * * * may obtain a review of such order in any circuit court of appeals of the United States," found in subdivision (f) of section 10, gives an employee the right to appeal in any complaint case.

When, on February 17, page 1546 of the RECORD, I made the correction in the question asked of the gentleman on the 7th of February, I repeated my question and asked him "to point out that provision of the Labor Act which gives the employee the right to appeal from a decision of the Board in a representation case or in any complaint case where the employer acquiesces in the order of the Board."

The provision of the act just quoted is evidently the statutory provision upon which the gentleman relies for such right of appeal. Unfortunately for his argument, it does not follow that the words, "any person aggrieved," mean an employee.

If reference is made to preceding paragraphs of section 10, it will be found that the word "person," as previously used in this section, refers only to an employer, not to an employee.

For example, in subdivision (a), we find the word "person" and as there used, it can mean only an employer.

Again, in subdivision (b), unless the word "person" there refers to an employer, it is meaningless. And again in the same subdivision (b), it is provided that "the person so complained of," and so forth. Here again the employer is meant.

In fact, Chief Justice Hughes, in the very case referred to by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR], Consolidated Edison Co. v. National Labor Relations Board (59 S. C. R., at p. 219, par. 25), said that the Board contended "that only employers can be so charged"—with an unfair labor practice.

In subdivision (c) of this section the words are, "If, upon all the testimony taken, the Board shall be of the opinion that any person named in the complaint," and so forth. Here again the word "person" means employer, not employee, for a complaint cannot, under the act, be filed against an employee.

Still farther down in subdivision (c) there is a provision that "Such order may further require such person to make reports from time to time, showing the extent to which it has complied with the order." Inasmuch as the Board has no authority to make an order against the employee, again the word must be construed as meaning employer.

Then subdivisions (d) and (e) have reference to the setting aside of an order made by the Board and the right of the Board to petition the court for enforcement of its order.

We then come to subdivision (f), containing the words which the gentleman argues gives an employee the right of appeal. As I have pointed out, the words "any person aggrieved," construed in the light of the other provisions of the law, do not refer to an employee.

If, for the sake of the argument, it be admitted that they do refer to an employee, the gentleman's argument is no answer to my contention that the employee is at the mercy of the Board, for no one has a right to appeal until a final order has been made, and even when a final order has been made, an employer may disregard it until the Board petitions the circuit court of appeals for an enforcing order.

Many orders, rules, or decisions, or whatever you may wish to call them, can be made in complaint cases before a final order is made and those rules, decisions, or orders, even though they are not final, can work hardship to—yes, can destroy—the opportunity of the individual employee to work without paying tribute or may destroy the independent union to which he belongs, by giving aid and encouragement to a rival organization.

In support of his contention that the words "any person aggrieved" include an employee, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] quotes a letter written by Charles Fahy, general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, which, among other things, states:

I think there is no doubt that you are entirely correct in the conclusion that the right of review of final orders of the Board in complaint cases is not limited to employers, but includes labor organizations and employees under the provisions of section 10 (f), providing * * *

And so forth.

The Board has never attempted to construe the statute so as to prevent such review.

I do not know the date of the letter, but I hold in my hand the record in the case of Edward P. Harris, as president of the Calcocraft, petitioner, against National Labor Relations Board, on petition for a writ of certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, in which I find that Mr. Fahy, under date of August 18, 1938, in a case then pending in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Third Circuit, No. 6854, filed a motion with the clerk of the third circuit, in which, among other things, he stated:

The Board does not, by anything said or implied in this petition, admit that Calcocraft is a "person aggrieved" within the meaning of section 10 (f) of the act and has standing to file a petition to review the order of the Board.

Apparently, Mr. Fahy has changed his mind as to the meaning of "person aggrieved" some time between the 18th day of August 1938 and the date of his letter to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] also cited—in support of his contention that an employee may appeal from an order or decision of the Board—two statements by Mr. Justice Hughes in the case to which reference was just made.

The first quotation, which is as follows—

The companies petitioned the circuit court of appeals to set aside the order and a petition for the same purpose was presented by the brotherhood and its locals. These labor organizations had not been parties to the proceeding before the Board but intervened in the circuit court of appeals as parties aggrieved by the invalidation of their contracts—

Is taken from page 212 and is a statement of the facts, as distinguished from the opinion of Mr. Justice Hughes.

The second quotation, so much as I can remember of it without having taken notes when the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] was speaking, is from that part of the opinion found on page 219, where it is said:

The Board urges further that the unions have availed themselves of the opportunity to petition for review of the Board's order in the circuit court of appeals, and that due process does not require an opportunity to be heard before judgment, if defenses may be presented upon appeal. * * * But this rule assumes that the appellate review does afford opportunity to present all available defenses including lack of proper notice to justify the judgment or order complained of.

From the reading of the decision as reported, it appears that certain contracts which the employer had with the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and its local unions were by the Board ordered to be disregarded and that the brotherhood either petitioned the circuit court for the setting aside of that order, although it had not been made a party in prior proceedings, or, when the Board asked that the order be enforced, it intervened and so became a party to the proceedings.

In any event, the Board had made a final order and the case does not decide the question as to whether an employee may, as a matter of right, appeal from a decision of the Board where he has not been made a party prior to the making of the final order.

If it be assumed that, upon the making of a final order, an employee has the right of appeal, it still leaves him at the mercy of the Board in all representation cases and in all complaint cases where no final orders are made and in all those cases where the Board, a rival union, and the employer by agreement exclude him or discriminate against him.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The question of whether or not a man is aggrieved is a question of fact, not a question of law.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; but the Board did not admit in the Calcraft case that an employee can be "a person aggrieved." The act is bad. Its interpretation by the Board is worse.

A CONFESSION OF GUILT—AN ADMISSION THAT FAIR PLAY, COMMON DECENCY, JUSTICE, AND LAW ARE DISREGARDED BY THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

On the floor of this House many times has your attention been called by me to the necessity for the amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, if employees are to enjoy the right of collective bargaining through representatives of their own choosing; if employers are to be permitted to carry on their business, give jobs to the unemployed, and do their part toward assisting in national recovery.

So far, the majority has made no attempt, at least in the open, to mitigate these evils; nor has the minority as an organization made the slightest effort toward the amendment of that unfair law or the abolition of the vicious practices carried on by the Board, its examiners, attorneys, and agents.

The American Federation of Labor has condemned the Board as being biased, unfair, and active in its efforts to aid the C. I. O., a rival organization.

Many individuals, many organizations of independent employees, hundreds of thousands of individual workers, many employers, and many organizations composed of employers have offered proof demonstrating that the law is unfair, that it is being improperly administered, and have demanded that it be amended.

Yet Congress remains deaf to the appeals of these workingmen, of these employers who would decrease to a large extent the burden of unemployment now resting upon all of us, if Congress would listen to their appeal for aid.

There is little reason for anyone to longer pretend that the act gives freedom of organization and bargaining power to the employee. Joseph A. Padway, general counsel for the American Federation of Labor, on the 17th day of October 1938, arguing a case before the Supreme Court, made the statement, and I quote:

One would imagine that every employee, under section 7, has the absolute right to freedom of choice in respect to representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining. Nothing can be further from the truth.

There is no longer any excuse for us to close our eyes to the situation as it exists. Nor is there excuse for further delay on our part.

Congress passed this law. Congress enacted the provisions under which the Board was created. Congress a week or two ago appropriated some $3,000,000 so that the Board might carry on its activities.

Time and again have I stood on the floor of this House and called attention in general terms to the defects in the law and, on more than one occasion, pointed to specific instances which showed beyond argument its harmful effect and the unfair manner in which it was being administered.

If any Member doubts the statements which have been made, he has but to read the act and the decisions which have been made under it. True, the Supreme Court of the United States has declared the act to be constitutional as it has been interpreted in those particular cases which were before it. But never has the constitutionality of the act been questioned on the ground that it deprived a worker of his right to enter into a contract; of his right to work; of his property without due process of law; or that it deprived him of his day in court.

Passing by for the moment the question of the constitutionality of the act from that standpoint, as conclusive proof that the act is unfair, that it is being administered in an improper, un-American way, let me today offer, not the record of a particular case, not a general statement, but the confession of Dr. Towne Nylander, director of the National Labor Relations Board for southern California.

In the Inglewood Daily News of California, under date of February 7, 1937, we learn that Dr. Nylander made an address before the Inglewood Community Forum, and this newspaper quotes him, in the course of that address or in answer to questions from the floor, with having made the following statements:

I'll tell you frankly, when we go into a hearing the employer hasn't got a chance.

Let me repeat that statement:

I'll tell you frankly, when we go into a hearing the employer hasn't got a chance.

Here is a man charged under the law with the duty of administering the law; a man whose duty it is to hold fair, unbiased hearings, meting out justice to all; who quite frankly admits that, when a hearing is held, the employer "hasn't got a chance."

And listen to this statement of this same man, Nylander:

I hope the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L. never do get together. Each can serve a good purpose by exposing the stuffed shirts in the other organization.

Here on the floor of this House, we have heard the act and its administration condemned because of its unfairness and its arbitrary action.

The President of the United States himself and other members of his official family have bitterly denounced the arbitrary and unfair acts on the part of Hitler and Mussolini. Never in their most unfair moments did those two men go further to impose their will than this director of the National Labor Relations Board says it is his practice to go in hearings.

When the employer is charged with an unfair labor practice this director of the Board says "the employer hasn't got a chance." This is "free" America.

Nor is there any doubt but that Dr. Nylander believes that the Board intends to continue that unlawful, that un-American course, for he says, and I quote:

Unless they amend the act, we will soon get to the rest of the employers whom we haven't yet been able to reach.

Think over, if you will, in the quiet of your own home and take up with your conscience, if you will, the meaning of this statement made by Director Nylander and then decide whether we, sitting here as representatives of the people, can longer submit to the injustice and the tyranny of the National Labor Relations Board.

Only yesterday and the day before we had a demonstration, to which reference was made by me on yesterday, as to how the failure of the Board to act brings unemployment and financial loss to thousands upon thousands of employees.

The Board has authority under the act to issue complaints, to order elections to select the agents for collective bargaining. In the motor industry in Michigan we have had almost continuous industrial strife for more than 2 years.

Recently the officials of a C. I. O. affiliate fell out, quarreled among themselves. Homer Martin represented one faction; Thomas represented another. By court action Martin secured the books of one of the locals. His faction elected its local officials. The other faction elected a different set of officials.

The company did not know with whom it might safely bargain collectively. One group of union officials claimed the right to handle the records and collect and disburse the dues taken from the workers. Another group claimed the same right.

There was no dispute between the company and its employees. There was no dispute between the company and any union. There was no dispute between the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L. The dispute was between two groups of men, all belonging to the U. A. W. A. Nevertheless, a strike which threw out of employment between 17,000 and 23,000 men took place.

Had the National Labor Relations Board back in January of 1937 called and insisted upon an election, provided a secret ballot, to enable the employees to choose their own representatives for collective bargaining with the automobile industry, all this trouble, or at least the most of it, might have been avoided.

On the doorstep of the N. L. R. B. rests the responsibility for the chaos now existing in Michigan; for some of the unemployment which has existed there during the past 2 years and for the failure of the motor industry to again lead us on the road toward prosperity.

Is it not time, after all, that we just quit fooling around and either from that side—and you have control of the legislation—or from this side, bring in some amendments? I have offered two or three, but, of course, just being a new Member who is an old man, the amendments were not even considered. But is it not time that some of the gentlemen who know about this law, as does my friend from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR], who knows all about it, who has had the advice of these attorneys in the Labor Department, should bring in a law protecting the employees?

Mr. O'CONNOR rose.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, not now. Is it not time that some of you or your friends should bring in some amendment that will give the employee the right to bargain collectively, that will keep him free from coercion on the part of an organizer, such as is the situation which now exists in Michigan and which the people of Flint are trying to remedy by ordinance? What is the trouble up there? There were in Detroit 2 days ago seventeen to twenty thousand men out of work, and why? Because there is a dispute between the men who work and the employer? Oh, no; there is no argument between them. Is it because there is an argument between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O.? Oh, no; not in this particular controversy. Then what is it all about? It is to determine whether the head of one faction or the head of the other faction, both belonging to the U. A. W. A., which is affiliated with the C. I. O., shall collect the dues of those two groups.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a brief question?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If we should bring in an amendment enlarging the rights of the employee, will the gentleman vote for it?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Sure, if it gives them the right to bargain collectively, free from restraint, and the right to a fair judicial hearing.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, they have that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; they have not. Why, they are picketing up there now to compel them to join the C. I. O., when they want to join another union or no union at all. That is the trouble. In all seriousness, is it not time we get at it and amend the act so that it will lessen the causes of industrial disputes affecting foreign and interstate commerce?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is what it is for.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The title of the act says that the purpose of the act was to lessen the causes of industrial dispute, but, as a matter of fact and in actual practice, it has increased industrial strife. It has been used as an organizing agent to further the interests of the C. I. O. and to destroy the A. F. of L. and it has deprived the employee, the man who does the work, as distinguished from the labor organizer, of the right which the act was supposed to grant, that is, the right to bargain collectively through representatives of his own choosing.

What I am asking—what the people are demanding—is that this Congress get about its business and draw a labor relations act which will accomplish the purpose set forth in the title of this act, which is known as the Wagner law.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Before I start in to say what little I care to about this bill I call attention to Public Document 177, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, which is available here at the desk, which has a list of all of the public buildings in the different districts in the United States that are supposed to be built under the programs that have already been authorized, and for the continuance of which we are carrying $30,000,000 in this bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. In that report to which the gentleman referred there are two columns, one column of projects where there already have been allotments, and the other where there are no allotments, but the projects qualify. Would the $30,000,000 include any of the projects where there has been no allotment up to date?

Mr. TABER. My understanding is that the amount authorized does not include enough money to take care of anything in that last column, which is a proposed limit of cost for projects not authorized to date. That is my understanding.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. I just called Mr. Purdum, of the Post Office Department, and he confirms what the gentleman is saying, that it does not provide any money for new projects, but only for projects already established or allotted.

Mr. MICHENER. I have my own town in there and had that same information, but I did not know whether the committee had made any changes at the request of the Department.

Mr. TABER. The committee has not attempted in this bill to make any blanket increase of authorizations. I am personally of the opinion that the Committee on Appropriations should not attempt to bring in a blanket increase of authorizations to the House, and that it should be done by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds before there is an embarkation upon an additional program to that now authorized. In my own opinion I do not see any particular objection to a small adjustment of a few thousand dollars in the cost of a few buildings, where the situation is such locally that the needs of the community cannot be taken care of by the program as it was set up originally, but any general authorization for a new program, in my opinion, should come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. These buildings in the right-hand column have already been authorized, but the money has not been allotted?

Mr. TABER. No. If the lady will pardon me, the cities mentioned in the right-hand column are eligible under the statute for a building. Those are places in which the receipts exceed $10,000. Every place in the country where the receipts exceed $10,000, if it is not in next to the last column, is in the last column, unless it already had at the time these projects were undertaken suitable building facilities.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Take the city of Melrose in my own district. That was authorized quite a good many years ago and then it was not built because there was not enough money. So that definitely was authorized and supposed to have been allotted some years ago. It is only fair to give Melrose the money for that post office.

Mr. TABER. I would say that if the building had ever been authorized there, that authorization would continue until it was satisfied by the construction of a building. That is true.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It is only fair to give it the money, it seems to me.

Mr. TABER. Yes. It would be fair. If that was allocated a good many years ago, it would probably depend on how long ago it was authorized, whether it could be built with these funds or not. Buildings which can be built with these funds would be limited, according to my understanding, to the fulfillment of the authorization of the items that were specified in the Third Deficiency Act for the fiscal year 1937.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That was in that list.

Mr. TABER. But not as an authorized project at that time was it?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It has been authorized, but they did not have the money.

Mr. TABER. It was not set up as one to which the money had been allocated at that time?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. No. It was not allocated.

Mr. TABER. I would doubt if that could be built, under the language of this particular statute.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Did you give all the money that the Department asked for in this bill?

Mr. TABER. Yes. That is, for this particular item. We did not for every item all the way through, because there were some of the items where a review justified a cut; but for this particular building program in the districts we gave all that the Department asked.

Of course, I want to call attention to the fact that the program is quite backward. That is, the buildings are not progressing as rapidly as it was planned at the time the last program was set up, a little less than a year ago, because the Procurement Division has been turning its architects and engineers over to the P. W. A. for their operations, and they have gone behind in this particular program of construction out in the districts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am receiving a great many complaints for that reason, and certainly the Members are not given their post office a year which they have been promised for a number of years.

Mr. TABER. We were only to have a post office once in 3 years on the last program that was set up.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The prior one.

Mr. TABER. Under the prior one there have been a great many delays; there is no question about that.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. They always tell me when I ask that every Member was to have a post office a year, unless it included a tremendously large post office, and then they did not get it. But where a Member has reasonably small, inexpensive post offices, that Member was to receive a post office a year. They are not living up to their program.

Mr. TABER. I think that is true, that they have not. The reason why they have not made the expected progress in the last year is that which I have just specified.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The $30,000,000 provides simply for the construction of projects already allocated?

Mr. TABER. Or authorized under the programs, which total $130,000,000 altogether.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I know the gentleman is informed on this, but it is my recollection that the act of August 25, 1937, provided for setting up a plan whereby a post-office building would be authorized and constructed in every congressional district throughout the United States every 3 years. That is, one every 3 years.

Mr. TABER. That was the program that was set up at that time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Now, has that program been changed?

Mr. TABER. Just as I have specified here. It has dragged because of the loaning of the architects and engineering forces to the P. W. A., but that should not result in the ultimate change in any program with reference to public buildings.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In other words, if we go on with the present plan in a district such as mine, where I have 18 cities eligible for a new post-office building, and each one crying for them, it would take 54 years before the Government would meet the present demand for post-office buildings. So that plan should be changed.

Mr. TABER. May I ask the gentleman whether all these Montana towns that are in the last column are in his district?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Nearly all of them are. There is Big Timber, Conrad, Cut Bank, Forsythe, Fort Benton, Glacier Park—

Mr. TABER. There are 21 in the whole State.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will be brief and say that there are 18 eligible cities in my district. Not only can they qualify, but they need these post-office buildings.

Mr. TABER. None of those are in the next to the last column?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not see any.

Mr. TABER. None of those 18?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Sidney is one, but I think it is the nineteenth. As I recall, nearly all of these—in fact, all excepting Whitefish and one or two others—are in the western district.

The western district has fared better, apparently, than the eastern district. Just as the gentleman from Missouri has pointed out, it seems that the Government has been following a plan that favored the larger cities to the exclusion of the needs of the smaller places.

Mr. TABER. It is true that the Procurement Division has gone ahead and spent the biggest part of this money in the larger centers.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman think it would be the fair and decent thing to do to amend the bill by doubling the amount of this item, making it $60,000,000 instead of $30,000,000, so we can construct at least one post-office building in every congressional district each year instead of once every 3 years?

Mr. TABER. I do not know that I care to pass on that question without going into the thing thoroughly, and one of the committees of the House held hearings on it.

I am sick and tired of the method of authorizing programs for public buildings without any substantial hearings on the subject. It has been the practice for the Procurement Division to come up here with a list, such as is included in this public document, and without any substantial hearings other than the statement that it would provide public buildings in each of the districts in the country and also take care of certain situations in certain of the large centers, we have included the item in a deficiency appropriation bill and passed an authorization. I do not feel that this is the way to do the Government's business. I feel that if we are going to have any more programs they should be authorized after full hearings on the part of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] has made the point which would indicate that under this particular program the small town is being discriminated against in favor of the large town. I have a lot of authorizations for new buildings in my district. They appear on page 24. Does the gentleman know how these towns are to be selected for the construction of buildings? I understand that the Procurement Division and the Post Office Department get together and select as the site for a building the town which has the largest postal receipts. Does not the gentleman think this leads to discrimination, as brought out in his colloquy with the gentleman from Montana, that the small town is being discriminated against in the selection of sites for new buildings?

Mr. TABER. I do not know just exactly how they are selected.

Mr. STEFAN. Does the gentleman know that that is the plan?

Mr. TABER. I do not know whether they do it the way the gentleman states or not.

Mr. STEFAN. I was told that that was the way the selections were made.

Mr. TABER. The last column in this table indicates the towns in which postal receipts are $10,000 and there is no building. The next to the last column indicates towns in which a building has been built under one of these recent programs, or is building now, or is to be built with the completion of this program.

It will require about $30,000,000 more to complete this particular program; and, besides what we are appropriating at this time, there is a very considerable unexpended balance that will be carried over into the fiscal year 1939 because of the delay that has taken place in the early part of this fiscal year. I do not believe that the Procurement Division could possibly build any more buildings and do a decent job of it if they were given more money than is carried in this item. There will, in my opinion, be close to $50,000,000 that can be spent in the fiscal year 1940 with this appropriation.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. I am particularly interested in asking as to the method of selecting the sites for buildings, whether or not the gentleman knows or has any information that came out in the hearings as to whether or not the procedure is to put the new building in the town where the postal receipts are the highest.

Mr. TABER. I would not think that that was the usual or general procedure.

Mr. STEFAN. How are they selected?

Mr. TABER. They are supposed to take into consideration the needs of the community. In some towns they have a pretty good building that is available, for instance; and in some towns they have used closed and abandoned bank buildings for post-office purposes. In a great many cases these have taken care of the situation pretty well and provided better quarters than could have been gotten in some other way. In some other instances they are located in wooden rookeries that are fire hazards and which ought not to be used for post-office purposes at all. I think they are supposed to take care of the condition that is the most urgent. Perhaps they do not.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman might be interested to know that in my district the town that received the post office was the town which showed the largest postal receipts.

Mr. TABER. It should be the town that shows the greatest need.

Mr. MUNDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. On page 39, I note the post offices listed for the State of South Dakota. I wonder if the gentleman can give me some idea of the method used by which some of these post offices appear in one column and some in the other. For example, Britain, Canton, and Clark are in the column which says that the projects are not authorized to date. Do these two divisions, the Procurement Division and the Post Office Department, have the ultimate decision in that matter or does some committee in the Congress determine it?

Mr. STEFAN. The Post Office Department and the Procurement Division.

Mr. TABER. The practice followed is that the Chief of the Procurement Division and the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Purdum, who constitute the public buildings committee, get together and go over the situation. They make a recommendation in such a communication as Public Document 177, which the gentleman has. This is signed by Mr. Farley, Postmaster General, and Mr. Gibbons, Acting Secretary of the Treasury. It submits the recommendation.

The Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has been accustomed to go over the schedule submitted and give it legislative sanction. The projects in the first column, headed "Projects authorized," and amount allotted are projects that have been included in some public-building program reasonably current, or since the practice was started of the Procurement Division having jurisdiction over the construction of public buildings under the Treasury Department.

The last column covers projects that are eligible under the statute for consideration so far as a post-office site is concerned. Those are the towns that have no buildings, but in which the postal receipts exceed $10,000.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. We are wasting a lot of money in other ways and we might as well waste a little here. There is no justification for an appropriation for post offices in second-class cities or the smaller first-class cities. There are plenty of vacant buildings of suitable nature in every one of these towns, and I venture to say in every one of the 18 in the district represented by the gentleman from Montana. We are only justified in doing this on the ground we are wasting a lot of money in other ways and we might as well have some out in the country.

Mr. TABER. There is a great deal to what the gentleman from Kansas has said with reference to a great many of these post-office buildings.

Mr. MICHENER. If the amount were increased at all, as suggested by the gentleman from Montana, the amount of the increase would have to be borrowed money and would have to be added to the national debt; is that correct?

Mr. TABER. If the Congress should be so bold as to increase the limit of the national debt.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has reference to the fact that the national debt has been limited by statute to $45,000,000,000?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Is it the gentleman's opinion that the authorizations to date have already reached the point so that if we add to this bill $30,000,000, as suggested by the gentleman from Montana, we would have to get further authorization from the Congress to increase the national debt beyond $45,000,000,000?

Mr. TABER. I do not believe we can meet the appropriations that are carried in the Budget estimates already submitted this year to the Congress and stay within the forty-five billion debt limitation.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. If the gentleman from Michigan will read the hearings which he has before him, he will find on page 5 an answer to that question, which was brought out in a colloquy between himself and the Secretary of the Treasury. I would like the gentleman who is now speaking to come back to the post-office situation again. As long as we are spending this money for buildings, and if the plan and program is to build in those towns where the postal receipts are the highest, there is absolutely no chance under the present program for a small town to get a building. That results in discrimination in favor of the larger towns. Is that not correct?

Mr. TABER. I would not say that was so. I do not know.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I have just talked to Mr. Betterly, of the Post Office Department, and he tells me that the criticism just made by the gentleman who preceded me is not well founded but, on the contrary, it is based entirely on the conditions in a locality; it is based on the need, the condition of the building, the geography of the place, its increase in population, and its postal receipts and other factors that enter into the matter. I am informed the question whether it is a big city or a small city does not enter into it, but that the city chosen is the one where the need is greatest.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman mentioned me in his statement.

Mr. DONDERO. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield so that I can interrogate the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. I want to repeat that in my district the site for a new building was selected in towns where the postal receipts were the highest. The gentleman's statement just made is news to me; that is, it is not so that the program is carried out along those lines. Need may have something to do with it, but the need, after a conference between the Procurement Division and the Post Office Department is based upon the amount of postal receipts which eventually will result in discrimination against the smaller towns which can never hope to get large postal receipts, in favor of the larger towns. I insist that is true.

Mr. DONDERO. I do not think it has worked out that way in my district.

Mr. STEFAN. I am talking about my district, in which we do not have big industrial cities or large factory towns. I still insist that the plan of the Procurement Division and Post Office Department is to select towns where the post-office receipts are the largest. You will find in the last column there are a large number of towns eligible for new buildings that will not get them under the present program, whether you like the spending policy or not.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the recommendation of the Congressman have anything to do with it?

Mr. STEFAN. Not my recommendation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 additional minutes.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Does not the gentleman feel, from his experience, the fact that these post-office buildings in these second-class cities cost practically twice as much to the Government as the same kind of a building would cost a private individual makes them unpopular and that the Congressmen are deluding themselves with the idea they can get a few more of these in their districts so that they may be that much more popular?

We have to meet the standards of organized labor and a dozen different requirements that exist a hundred miles away from home. They take the prevailing wages that exist there and put them in effect out in the country. This is not popular, and the people do not appreciate it. They know it is a waste of money. Does not the gentleman believe that is the reaction?

Mr. TABER. There is a great deal to what the gentleman from Kansas has said. We are spending practically a minimum of $70,000 for every building that is put up. There is no question in the world that for half that sum of money a building suitable to the needs of many such localities could be erected; so if we were going to spend the same amount of money, it would cover twice as many towns. I am not sure but that they could put up a building that would be satisfactory, if they did things right, for a great deal less than $35,000.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. I am inclined to agree with my friend the gentleman from Kansas. In my district last year, in my home town, there was authorized to be erected a post-office building, one of these $75,000 structures. The Post Office Department is very well taken care of in a very fine building for which about $900 a year rent is being paid. The post-office clerks and the postmaster himself are perfectly satisfied. They have every convenience available, and they are able to give the citizens of my city excellent service. Still there has been authorized the construction of a $75,000 building. Let me tell you the folks at home are thoroughly disgusted with the situation.

Mr. TABER. I would expect such a situation would arise in a great many places. I know, you all know, and the gentleman from Kansas I am sure knows that if his community or my community undertakes to build a courthouse or a city hall or a town hall or something like that we get better architectural results and better price results by far than does the Procurement Division. Does not the gentleman find it that way?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Without any doubt, because the Federal Government is hedged about with labor and other restrictions. When a post-office building is being constructed in a town a hundred miles from Kansas City they go to Kansas City to find a union standard of prevailing wages to apply in the country in erecting the building, and this makes it very expensive.

May I make the further observation that if they did not have these post offices to build there would be no occasion to have a ceremony on the breaking of the ground, another ceremony on the laying of the cornerstone, another ceremony on the enclosing of the building, and another and final ceremony when the building was opened for business.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I have listened with considerable interest to the comments of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON]. I agree with him on only one point he brought out, a point I believe it well for him to drive home in the minds of us new Congressmen, and that is that anything a Congressman may have to do with the post-office-building program is a headache. I think that is true regardless of the party affiliation of the Congressman. If a certain town gets a new post-office building, many feel hurt because of the location of it, and other towns are sore because they did not get one. However, I disagree with the gentleman in all other matters mentioned.

The gentleman says we do not need to put up new post-office buildings because we have a lot of unused buildings. I wonder if the gentleman knows just how suitable such buildings are for postal purposes. I know the gentleman's statement is not true out in my community, because I live in the West, which is not yet built up, but is in the building. Its future is ahead of it, as a future ought to be. I suppose there are parts of this older portion of the community, however, where there are plenty of unused buildings. Some of them are abandoned church buildings. I do not believe the gentleman from Kansas would go so far as to recommend that we use some of these unused churches as post-office buildings. No doubt they would be donated.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Practically every town of any size or any city which has a second-class post office has a vacant bank building with a furnace and a vault that you can rent for $15 to $25 a month, or buy for $250.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. If I may go one step further, Mr. Chairman, may I say that it seems to me we ought to take some pride in the physical evidence of this great Government of ours. I regard a post-office building in even the smallest town as a symbol of the American Government. For that reason I have always contended the postmaster ought to be the finest man in the community, because he is a representative of this great Government, and the post-office building also ought to be a credit to this Government of ours. When I say this I am not intending to imply that we ought to waste money or that we ought to go ahead with an outlandish building program now because we are in a spree of spending. I do want to impress this point, however, that out where the West begins we have never put up a building, as far as my memory goes, that has been adequate 5 years after it was finished. We are not building sufficiently for the future out there. I should like my brethren to see that point and make allowance as between a growing part of the country and a part that has already had its growth.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I should like to say something now myself, if I may.

If we go too far in the building of post offices, we are going to have to pay for them with the kind of currency the gentleman from Arizona gave me the other day, one of the rebel Mexican currencies. This is about the kind of currency we will come to, if we keep on with the spending program that has been going on for a long time.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. I wish to refer again to the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] in connection with empty bank buildings. I should like to talk to him personally about the racket that has been played upon the public by certain cliques in gobbling up hundreds of these empty bank buildings and renting them to the Government as post offices. However, that is not the point I am trying to make. I am opposed considerably to unnecessary spending, but we have an authorization and an appropriation to build.

The gentleman from Kansas would not build any new buildings in the small towns or in the towns where second-class post offices are located, but I still wish to make the point that if his psychology were carried out in the Congress, as long as that program were carried out, the small towns in the West would never get a new building.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I am now going to talk a little bit about the Treasury bill and some of its features.

Under the gold bill the Government of the United States has on hand, as of December 31 last, $14,500,000,000 of gold. This has been brought in from our banks and from foreign countries in very large volume so that at the present time we have practically three-fifths of all the world's gold in our Treasury. Unquestionably if we attempted to sell it we could not get what we paid for it.

On top of this we have gone ahead with a large silver-buying program, and what have we done in that respect? We have built up in the Treasury silver amounting in all, as of November 30 last, to 3,698,000,000 ounces, an increase of 1,674,000,000 ounces from June 19, the date of the Silver Purchase Act, down to last November, and for that silver we have built up in the Treasury silver amounting in all newly mined silver bringing anywhere from 60 cents to 77 cents per ounce. Of the silver that was brought in, costing us somewhere around $800,000,000 or $900,000,000, only 253,143,000 ounces were in domestic, newly mined silver. The balance was old silver or foreign silver that was imported.

Now, what have we done? In order to give a subsidy to the silver miner of approximately $130,000,000, or an average over the 5-year period of approximately $26,000,000 a year, we have spent about $900,000,000 for silver or an average of $180,000,000 over the last 5 years. Much better, if we have got to subsidize the home producer of silver, to hand over the $30,000,000 and have done with it than to attempt to go ahead and buy all the silver that is offered us from every country of the world, as we have been doing for the past 5 years. This has placed a terrific burden upon our country, and has placed it in debt to an additional amount of approximately $900,000,000.

Now, we have gone ahead with that silver, and we have issued silver certificates against it at the rate of about $1.25 an ounce—I have forgotten the exact figure—so that we have outstanding against that silver which has been purchased approximately $1,600,000,000 of silver certificates.

This is the form in which the debt exists. Some of the people from the silver-mining territory, who do not understand the situation, say that we are making a profit by issuing the liabilities of the Government at the rate of $1.26 an ounce, or whatever it is, against that silver which costs less than half of that amount. Now, do you not see that this is a debt of the Government and must be paid just like the bonds that are issued? The trouble with their point of view and their perspective is this: In order to cover up a subsidy of $30,000,000 a year, or a little less, they have inveigled the Government into a tremendous silver program where we have absorbed all this silver that has come from all over the world.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Is not that inflation?

Mr. TABER. By another name, the same thing.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. It seems to me that is genuine inflation.

Mr. TABER. It would be, except it has crowded out of the market in that time approximately the same amount of Federal Reserve notes, and it is simply an addition to our direct debt.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I think the gentleman ought to point out that the silver program which we have been following has had two objectives.

The gentleman lays stress on what he calls a subsidy to silver, whereby we have been spending about $30,000,000 for American-produced silver. We have been buying silver abroad. I am not here to defend the purchase of foreign silver, but if we have been doing it, we have been doing it with the idea not of a subsidy, or aiding American silver producers, but of stimulating foreign trade. I do not care to go into that at all, but I am here to say that we have been pursuing a wise national policy with reference to domestically produced silver in paying more for American silver than for foreign silver and more than the world price. I should like to see that program continued, only that I would have the price of domestic silver at least 77 cents an ounce.

Mr. TABER. I say to the gentleman that he and the Representatives from the silver States are making a great mistake in trying to have continued a program for the purchase of $180,000,000 to $200,000,000 of silver, the most of it foreign silver, which is brought in here from other countries and which is being used now just the way the gold is being used, and I am going to call attention to that at this moment. The gold and silver have been brought in here from foreigners and the foreigners have been getting credit for it, and with that money they have gone into our stock markets and bond markets and have obtained in the last 5 years a very large interest in our bond and stock market, and they are able as a result of that interest to manipulate our bond and stock market up and down, to the detriment of our own people, just the way the old Wall Street pirates used to do 25 years ago. That is one of the situations that you have been promoting by this program. I think it is about time we stopped the freezing of gold in the Treasury, and the gathering in from all the world all the gold and the silver that we can gather, and turning over our investment markets to foreigners to manipulate up and down.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Would it not be possible for us to carry out a part of this silver program confining our purchases to domestically produced silver and not the other silver?

Mr. TABER. Only as a subsidy. If the Government feels that it should subsidize the silver-producing industry that might be an excuse for it on the part of those who feel they should subsidize every industry, and only in case they were to subsidize every industry. Of course, we all know—those of us who have followed the tables that have been presented to us—that most of this money for silver goes to the United States Smelting & Refining Co. and to the American Smelting & Refining Co. Of course, they do employ some people in some of the silver-mining territory, but the whole thing goes into the Treasury, most of it, through four of five large smelting outfits, such as I have described; and I am making no attack on them because they are entitled to the subsidy just as much as anyone else under the statute. They have been able to put it across. The question is, How long are the American people going to be that kind of suckers?

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. What will happen if we stop buying silver and gold?

Mr. TABER. We can create a free market for gold, the same as England, and not have the burden of letting England load the whole job of financing and stabilizing her currency onto us.

Mr. STEFAN. Was there anything in the hearings to the effect that the price of gold is going to be increased within a short time from $35 an ounce to $41 an ounce?

Mr. TABER. No; we had no intimation that that would come.

Mr. STEFAN. Was there anything in the hearings as to when we are going to stop buying the gold and silver and what would be the effect when we do?

Mr. TABER. Of course, as I understand it, there is an expiration date on the statute that authorizes the purchase of certain types of silver. Unless Congress extends that act—and I hope it will not extend it, because I want to see us stop being made suckers in this country—unless that act is extended we will have to stop buying foreign silver at that time.

Mr. STEFAN. Most of the gold we are buying now and most of the silver that we are buying is coming to us from foreign countries, is it not?

Mr. TABER. At least two-thirds, and probably three-fourths of it.

Mr. STEFAN. Resulting in great profit to foreigners?

Mr. TABER. Yes. Now I want to go into another feature of the situation in the Treasury Department. The chairman of the committee [Mr. LUDLOW] in his statement said that this committee has refused to appropriate funds for new employees to take the place of W. P. A. employees who are doing work in the different Treasury units. We found great blocks of W. P. A. employees doing work of all sorts in bureau after bureau of the Treasury, where there had been and could be over the last 4 or 5 years no real review of the situation.

When a department comes before the Committee on Appropriations and asks for funds, in my opinion, it should justify every dollar it is going to use in the coming year. In the last 4 or 5 years it has been customary, whenever the head of any department wanted to go ahead and expand his activities, to put W. P. A. employees on the roll and to build up his department just as high as he wanted to have it. Now, we have gone ahead with our situation, and there has been absolutely no brake on it. When the Appropriations Committee brought in the last so-called relief bill a year ago, it tried to set up for the accounting activities and disbursement activities of the Treasury the funds that were necessary, instead of using funds appropriated for the purpose of handling the relief load. But when we came to investigate we found that the Treasury had been using these employees who were provided for with W. P. A. funds, for all sorts of things in the Treasury, regardless of whether it had anything to do with handling the pay of the relief employees or not. That is a practice that I hope the committee and the Congress can solve and stop when the next relief bill is considered. I hope it will not be considered as an emergency measure, but will be considered upon its merits, with time enough involved so that the Congress can stop a great many of the abuses that these departments have pulled off in the last 5 years. In some of them you cannot tell anything about the way they were operating. They showed all sorts of inconsistencies and all sorts of jumping around in such a way that I was inclined to believe they were paying these people an unconscionable sum for the work they were doing—more than they would pay if they were regular employees.

Now, I want to call attention to another situation that exists in the Government. In 1934 the total number of Government checks drawn was 13,483,000. In 1937 it was 113,436,966—nearly 10 times as many. I know of nothing that presents a clearer picture of what we are doing in this country, running our expenses away up.

Another item of the bill contains a large sum of money which is set up for the purpose of providing for the issuance of Government securities. In connection with the so-called baby bonds that have been put out we have high-pressure salesmen who are handling the job. They get good big salaries, and they came before the committee with their high-pressure methods and tried to sell us the program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed beyond the hour that is allowed by the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. I yield myself 15 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, we found that a very large number of people were buying these bonds under high-pressure advertising and that sort of thing and the work of high-pressure salesmen. It is a fine thing when our citizens will buy our bonds, but it is a very serious thing when we crowd those bonds onto a lot of poor people who cannot afford to hold them and who must give them up before they can get any interest.

If they have a few dollars to stow away like that, they might better put it in a savings bank where they might get a little interest, rather than to have to redeem the bonds before they can hold them to an interest period. Our committee put a stop to these big advertisements in the newspapers and magazines and a lot of this extravagant expenditure that has been going on. It is still possible for the Department to operate with some of these high-pressure salesmen. Frankly I do not believe that situation should be allowed to continue. I do not believe that in times of peace, when we have funds available to buy our Government securities, that we can afford to be crowding on to people who cannot afford to carry them, Government obligations.

I do not believe I will go into a great many more of the features of the bill at this time. I want to call attention to the situation in the Post Office Department, and then I am going to bring what I have to say to a close.

The estimated post-office revenue for 1939 and 1940 is approximately the same as it was for 1938 and approximately the same as it was for 1937. The operating expenses, on the other hand, are showing a continuous increase—larger than the increase in the receipts. With $1,000,000 increase in receipts there is an increase of $14,000,000 in estimated expenditures from 1938 to 1939. With $9,000,000 increase in receipts, approximately the same amount is estimated in increased expenditures for 1940. Everywhere, regardless of the fact that the receipts of each post office are about on the same basis, we are having a set-up of increased personnel. Frankly I do not think it is in the interest of the Government to go on with that great big increase in personnel. I believe we should have enough to do our work, but I do not believe we should go along building up a tremendous personnel, larger than was required to do the same amount of business a year before.

I hope that the additional funds which we are giving to the Budget this year—the Budget appropriation is now going to be a little over $300,000 as compared with $75,000 or $80,000 in previous years—that the Budget will make an improvement in its set-up. They have been allowed all sorts of investigators and all sorts of auditors and hearing officers to go into the Budget situation thoroughly and cut it down.

Frankly, I do not think that the funds that we gave them in the deficiency bill last June were spent to the best advantage, because they came in here with proposed increased estimates for almost every bureau and department of the Government. It is my belief that the expenditure of funds on their part should result in the weeding out of the waste which I believe exists throughout the Government.

Mr. Bell told us one thing that was very interesting when he was before us. He said he felt that had the Budget had the force that has now been given him, the loose ends of the administration of government could be well taken care of and that we could get rid of duplication and waste. He said he did not believe there would have been any agitation for a reorganization bill if such a function had existed. I hope that when Mr. Bell comes up here next year with the Budget he will have thoroughly combed the departments of this Government, and instead of bringing increased estimates he will bring us decreased estimates for the operation of the Government, and that he will have culled out of the Budget estimates any outfit which is duplicating the functions of other outfits that should be doing the work. I want to see this Government put on a sound basis and get rid of the waste and duplication that exists.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CLEVENGER. I find myself on the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. We have been here nearly 2 months. So far nothing at all of any importance has come before this committee. I looked up the history of the committee the other day. The committee is some 10 years old. I found that it succeeded to the duties of about 11 other expenditure committees. Does it not seem to the gentleman that some of these conditions he still finds prevailing and of which he complains—the use of W. P. A. employees in the departments, for instance—might have been discovered by this committee if it had functioned according to the purpose for which it was created by the Congress?

Mr. TABER. I think one of the most outrageous things that has occurred in the last 6 years has been the failure of that committee to function. It was set up to get at the root of a great many evils in government and get rid of a lot of waste. It has absolutely failed to function.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. LUDLOW. I share 100 percent the gentleman's wish that the Budget Bureau would hold down these estimates. While we are contemplating that prospect, I wonder if we should not wish also that the Congress do its part and not go to extremes in the matter of authorizations.

Mr. TABER. I think Congress should stop authorizing the expenditure of funds except where it is absolutely necessary for the functioning of the Government.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. A great many authorizations have come about in the last few years in a left-handed fashion. The President has been given power in relief bills without any direct authorization to start new projects which require hundreds of millions of dollars to finish. Congress, therefore, is not responsible for many of these projects that were started under relief measures.

Mr. TABER. There is no question about that. Upward of two-thirds of the funds that have been appropriated for relief have not been used for relief but have been used for building structures that had nothing to do with relief, and for enlarging the functions of the Government and enlarging the activities of the departments of the Government; and we should stop this kind of activity.

Now I want to say a word or two about this bill and about this committee. The chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. LUDLOW, and the members of the committee, Mr. O'NEAL, of Kentucky; Mr. JOHNSON, of Indiana; Mr. DALY, of Pennsylvania; Mr. MAHON, of Texas; Mr. McLEOD, of Michigan; and Mr. DITTER, of Pennsylvania, up to the first of the year, spent 7 or 8 weeks going over this bill. The committee has given it, I think, the most thorough hearings that any appropriation bill has received since I have been a member of the committee. In addition to that you will note, if you look at the report from page 50 on, almost every item in the bill has received a cut. Some of the cuts some of us thought ought to be larger, and sometimes we argued quite a while, but finally reached an agreement on the amounts. When it is possible for a committee to cut over $27,000,000 from an appropriation bill in an effort that called for so much personal service, it is a very considerable accomplishment. The committee has been able to report a net cut of $27,926,000; and I want to commend the spirit with which the committee went at its job. I wish it might be an example for every other committee that comes into this House with any bill calling for funds to be taken out of the Public Treasury. I believe that in a great many other bills where there are larger items on projects and that sort of thing, a much larger saving proportionately could be realized with the same kind of treatment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I read with keen interest the speech made by our colleague the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] on the question of Fascist groups and Nazi bunds in the United States.

Having been close to the notorious New York meeting on Monday last, I made a number of observations. Most of the unscrupulous persons participating in that meeting had questionable allegiance to our country and the majority of them held dual nationality. Meeting under the cloak of purported Americanism at a so-called Washington celebration, they saw fit to desecrate the honored man whose birthday it was by openly preaching race hatred and obnoxious doctrines, attacking some of our most prominent public officials, including our own great President.

Similar meetings were held in other sections of the country, and I dare say, Mr. Chairman, that they could not get away with that in any other democracy of the world.

Free speech was used as a guise for free abuse of our Constitution, our form of government, and our people. Free speech was used to protect themselves from almost being massacred by red-blooded Americans, over 100,000, who stood behind Madison Square Garden protesting against the insidious attacks upon the principles George Washington stood for. It took 1,800 police officers of the city of New York to stop bloodshed.

I am surprised that as a result of this un-American meeting which was publicly announced there were only 15 arrests.

I was also surprised that the Dies committee, knowing of this meeting, took no steps to check and recheck on the proposed so-called pro-Washington Birthday meeting. Mr. Chairman, I want to say it was horrible and disgraceful. To my great surprise and astonishment I read in the press yesterday—and I am only quoting from the press—that the Dies committee is going to have nine probers or so-called investigators, who are going to assemble evidence of subversive influences in the United States. It will take 3 or 4 months to make an examination, gather the evidence, and take the testimony for presentation at public hearings next summer. Do I understand that to mean that since last June the Dies committee had no evidence at all on fascism, Nazi-ism, and other isms? Do I understand from this press statement that we have to start all over again to find the culprits who are undermining this Government with a foreign ideology, foreign doctrines, and foreign principles in their attack upon democracies? Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that we have to start this thing all over again?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will be glad to yield in a minute.

A week ago I took the trouble to present certain specific facts on the floor of this House. If the Members will read the RECORD, or if these investigators will read the RECORD, and if the members of the Dies committee will take the trouble to do likewise, they will find it will not take 4 months to make this investigation. I have given you the names of persons, the leaders of alien groups in this country, whom you may subpoena forthwith and conduct your investigation so that we may have something in the form of legislation before we adjourn this Congress.

Before proceeding I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Do I understand that the distinguished gentleman from New York is criticizing the procedure of the Dies committee because of something he has read in the newspaper with reference as to how it is going to proceed?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I just stated I quoted what I read in the newspapers. I was not the author of that statement. If it is correct, I have some criticism to make.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am sure the gentleman realizes that the press is not always correct. I saw a picture of the gentleman from New York the other day, Mr. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN, and underneath was the name Fritz Kuhn. That was not correct.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If the gentleman wants to take my case, we can sue for libel.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am not an attorney.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I hope the gentleman will recommend one to me.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Do not take everything literally.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am not exactly making an attack. I am trying to awaken the American people. I have been trying to do this for 4 or 5 long years.

We all talk about the Dies committee, and I have the highest regard for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], and all the other members. I know they are trying to do a good job.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I thank the gentleman so much.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. One of the führers, as they call it, or Nazi leader, got on the platform of Madison Square Garden the other night in front of 20,000 or more people, hundreds of whom were in Nazi uniform, a foreign uniform, and this leader said:

I have just returned from a tour out West and we now have 100 Nazi units in the United States. We have created four units in the State of Texas right near the place where Congressman DIES' congressional district is located. In the district of the great American, MARTIN DIES.

The crowd just went wild. I admit Mr. DIES is a great American, but he should try to destroy all Nazi bunds in his district or any other district of Texas. He should try to destroy all other influences which are un-American and obnoxious to our people and to our Government.

You do not have to be an investigator and take 4 months to find all this out. You do not even have to be a G-man to do that. The evidence is on the surface and noticeable wherever one moves.

Mr. HAWKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In a moment. I endeavored to give advice to the people. The mere fact I am not a member of this honorable committee does not change the situation at all. If you want to go places and if you want to destroy un-Americanism, do not bring up little insignificant labor problems or little insignificant Communist groups that do not mean a thing.

Mr. HAWKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. Did the gentleman say "little Communist groups" just now?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I did say that; yes, sir. I said do not pick up little fries. Get after the big fellows.

Mr. HAWKS. The Communist movement, in the gentleman's opinion, is a little movement?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No, I did not say that at all. Do not put language into my mouth. If the gentleman will follow me, I advocate bringing the big fellows here. Do not pick up a little labor dispute in which one accuses the other of being a "red." Let us get the real "reds" who are responsible for communism in this country, and, God knows, I have no use for them. I would destroy them just as I would any other "isms" we have in this country.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas. Mr. LAMBERTSON. Is it true that the main speaker at this New York meeting, Mr. Kuhn, I believe, wore a German military uniform?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Absolutely; and not only he but hundreds of the Nazi troopers came there in foreign uniforms and attacked democracy under the guise of free speech at a pro-Washington rally. They did the same thing in San Francisco, where there was a riot involving over 2,000 persons.

The question I ask this House is, If this committee was created to look into exactly such situations, why should they wait 3 or 4 months to subpoena Fritz Kuhn or other members of the bund and to confiscate their records?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does the gentleman from New York have any knowledge of whether or not the Dies committee has a complete report on what occurred in New York City a few nights ago?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I did not say they had.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does the gentleman contend the Dies committee could have prevented that meeting in New York, which was held with the permission of the mayor of New York City, the city the gentleman represents in part in this Congress, and with police protection provided by the mayor of New York City?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. This is a proper question.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is my question a proper question?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think it is a proper question, and I will be glad to try to answer the gentleman. The mayor, as well as I and, I believe, my friend, believes in freedom of speech.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Most assuredly I do.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Because we cherish and love freedom of speech, we want to protect it. We gave these persons the right of free speech and assembly, but this right is being abused. They are clamoring and telling the public that they are not going to be investigated, that they have not been subpoenaed since the committee was created, that nothing has been done to them, and that they can carry on their work. These are their statements in their public meetings, and the newspapers carried them. Why have not subpoenas been issued since June of 1938? Why have not their records been confiscated? Why do we not know what they are doing here and what foreign dictator they represent? I could name to the gentleman and his committee, if they wished to listen, hundreds of names. I do not need 4 months to give you information if you want to take it, but I do not want to stand behind the back door of the Dies committee and say, "Please take this information." I say that if you had subpoenaed the Kuhns, the Fritzes, and the Hanfstaengels, and all such groups before this meeting took place you could have exposed their activities to such an extent that people would not have dared to go into that hall, because every person who went in there and thus lent support to that movement would have been publicly acknowledging his being an enemy of this country.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, may I say that as a member of the Dies committee I can assure the gentleman from New York he will be very welcome to come before the committee, and it will receive any information he has which has to do with the investigation the committee is setting out to make.

As to whether the bund leaders in New York a few nights ago transgressed to the extent that they should have been stopped, was a matter for the mayor of New York City to handle, not for the Dies committee.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I grant that.

Mr. DEMPSEY. May I say with respect to uniforms that, as far as I personally am concerned—and I am sure every member of the Dies committee will agree with me—it is offensive to me that any persons dressed in the military uniform of any country in the world should be parading around carrying an American flag and attacking our form of government. I agree with the gentleman on that point.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I call to the attention of the Dies committee that you can destroy these groups and get the public behind you by publicly exposing un-Americanism, which the committee could have done if it had taken the trouble to subpoena representatives of these groups, and I have named hundreds of them in the Record.

Mr. DEMPSEY. With what would the committee subpoena them?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. With a subpoena.

Mr. DEMPSEY. These hundreds of groups all over the United States?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; the men whose names I have given and which the gentleman's committee could itself obtain, who are actively engaged in undermining this Government.

Mr. DEMPSEY. What would the committee use for money to bring them here?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The committee seemed to continue its office in New York without money, and it has an office in New York and has two men working there. Why do not the members of the committee do what I or any other American would do; that is, dig down in my pocket for two bucks and subpoena as many people as I could with the money I could spare?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does the gentleman believe we are renting an office in New York?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; I did not say renting an office. You have an office in New York in the Federal Building.

Mr. DEMPSEY. We were permitted to use that office in the Federal Building.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. You have two men working there. How do you pay them?

Mr. DEMPSEY. We paid them out of the $25,000 we were allowed and from no other source. We consumed every dime that was given us by this Congress. We went as far as we could, and we went as deeply into the Nazi un-American subversive activities as we did the Communist activities.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I would not say that.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I know the gentleman would not say it, but I am saying we did.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman is taking in a lot of territory. You have not even subpoenaed one real Nazi before you. You have not even subpoenaed the Communists before you. I have read the record of the gentleman's committee.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have not yet heard the gentleman from New York, who has this mass of important information, make an attempt to give any of it to the Dies committee. It would certainly be most welcome. Instead, the gentleman has come on the floor of this House and attacked the committee, which is doing the best it can.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am not attacking the committee; I am merely constructively advising the committee.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The most constructive thing the gentleman can do is to give us the information he has. We will welcome it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman is the first member of the committee who has even asked for the information.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am not asking for it; I am pleading for it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will be glad to give it to the gentleman if he will ask for it, or to the committee if the committee asks for it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. We did ask for it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I disagree with the gentleman. The committee never asked me. I know the committee is capable of doing its job. All you need is a start, the knowledge of where to go, which at the present time you do not have.

Mr. DEMPSEY. We will welcome any assistance the gentleman gives us. If the gentleman can show us the way to go, I am sure we shall be pleased to follow the proper line.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. You just tell that to your chairman, and I will be very happy to put you on the right road. You do not have to take 4 months to make the investigation, and I can save you some money. I would rather have you hold the money for other purposes, because I believe you will need it during the course of your investigation.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I feel sure I can speak for the chairman and say that he will welcome any cooperation the gentleman can give him.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I wish to bring to the attention of the House a matter that vitally affects and distresses labor and the veterans, and also very many of us all over the country, and that is the rumored transfer of the United States Employment Service to the Social Security Board.

Very many protests have come to me already from both labor and the veterans. I am opposed to a transfer of the United States Employment Service to the Social Security Board, and I believe the Members will all agree with me in this matter.

I am opposed to this transfer on the following grounds:

The United States Employment Service must be guaranteed its vigor and independence because it is one of the principal means of combating depressions. It puts men back to work, and that is assuredly what we all ought to be striving to do today.

The United States Employment Service was created by the Wagner-Peyser Act in 1933. Unfortunately, we lost Congressman Peyser a number of years ago. He made a fine contribution to the Congress and to the Nation.

The United States Employment Service was started under the Republican administration and has been continued under the New Deal and has been one of the most successful of the New Deal's activities. According to Labor Department figures it has made more than 25,000,000 placements during the last 5 years. There are now more than 1,600 employment offices affiliated with it, and I am sure other Members, just as I have done, have gone to the offices of this Service trying to secure employment for their constituents.

Undoubtedly transference to the Social Security Board could not help but react adversely upon the placement function for these reasons:

The Social Security Board is an insurance agency, not a promotional, placement agency.

Experience shows that administrators are inclined to take the easier of two courses, which in this case would be benefit payments. Benefit payments are not so large as wages, so the shops as well as the workers and employers would lose, as would the taxpayers.

As an insurance-dominated employment service would almost certainly lead to neglect of aggressive placement activities, which in turn would lead to increased demands upon insurance benefits, the net result would be a static, dying economic order.

Of course, this would be most unfortunate in every way and would retard putting men back to work or providing more employment.

The Social Security Board's unemployment compensation program covers only 50 percent of the country's working population. The United States Employment Service, on the other hand, is available to all. Would you hurt 50 percent in order to give the other 50 percent alleged benefits, which I believe can be secured better by another means?

Surely the United States Employment Service belongs in the Department of Labor and nowhere else. The Department of Labor was created to protect labor, to give jobs, and to help labor with all of its problems. It is the agency to which all workers look for a whole-hearted effort to make jobs available.

In its functioning it should have in mind the operation of various labor laws, such as minimum-wage, maximum-hour, and child-labor legislation, and should in effect constitute a workers' center, and, of course, the Department of Labor does all these things. As I stated before, the veterans all over the country are anxious that it should be kept in the Department of Labor, just as are the members of the labor organizations and those outside of the labor organizations in this country. As a result of experience and constructive experimentation, the United States Employment Service has perfected a method of coordinating unemployment compensation work with that of the employment offices. With increased financial and legislative support, this program can be made increasingly and uniformly available throughout the entire country.

The placement function and the unemployment-compensation scheme are both big jobs. They are so big and so important that they should not be completely scrambled. This would invite disaster. I favor the closer coordination of the United States Employment Service and the Bureau of Unemployment Compensation, which might well be secured by coordination of the two agencies within the Department of Labor. In order to safeguard their strength and effectiveness, they would be maintained as separate bureaus. However, in order to secure unity in relationship with the several States, it has been suggested that they might both be directed by an assistant secretary, with power to make financial and other arrangements and also by increased financial support of the United States Employment Service under the terms of the Wagner-Peyser Act. We need jobs so desperately in the United States today every effort should be made to facilitate getting them.

I feel sure there will be great objection on the part of the Members of the House to any transfer of the Employment Bureau from the Department of Labor to the Social Security Board. I think we all agree that it belongs in the Labor Department, the Department created for labor, and I repeat again the distress and fear of various veterans' organizations that this transfer to the Social Security may be quietly effected. I ask the interest of the membership of the House in this question.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; gladly.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am greatly interested in this program because in my own State the lack of coordination between the two agencies led in the few months prior to last fall to a very serious depletion in the effectiveness of the work of the employment service. Does the lady not agree that whatever is done about this matter, the first and primary job is the job of placement; that that ought to be a thing on which major emphasis is placed; and then referral should be made where jobs are available to other agencies?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Of course, they ought to be closely related, and their first job is to get people back to work. It is better for the unemployed and for the Federal Government both, for the shops, and for the taxpayer, economically and as a matter of humanity. It is much better for the entire country when people are employed. Does not the gentleman think it belongs in the Labor Department?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think probably it does, although my main concern is to see to it that the very thing is done which the gentlewoman suggests, that the Employment Service becomes the major consideration, instead of having the thing reversed and the major emphasis placed on the payment of benefits. How the thing can be worked out I do not know. For my part, anything that can be done to preserve and encourage the Employment Service as it now is, is to preserve all of the things about which the gentlewoman spoke, and to me they are of primary consideration and should be given primary consideration.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman very much for his views. He always wants to be helpful.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, and members of the Committee, I wish to use the few minutes allotted to me to direct my efforts toward the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] with regard to the silver policy that we have been pursuing. As I said in my interruption in his remarks, there are two phases to this silver question—the purchase of foreign silver and the purchase of domestically produced silver. You may logically object to one without logically objecting to the other. I am not here to defend the purchase of foreign silver, but I am merely trying to say now that that is only one phase of it, and I am going to address myself to the other phase. However, I have heard some say that it might be well to buy silver from Mexico and China if thereby we could stimulate export trade with these nations.

I am not well enough versed in these matters to know whether that is a good thing or not. If it can be done, it may be a wise policy. But I leave that entirely and refer to this matter of domestically produced silver. Let us remember that in the early days of this administration—I am not sure whether it was 1933 or 1934—we had a Silver Purchase Act which provided for the purchase of silver to such an extent that our monetary supply of silver should be one-third that of gold. That is on the statute books. I hope it remains on the statute books. It should remain there. If you will look into the matter, you will find our present supply of silver is far less than one-third of our supply of gold. I just call that fact to your attention. I am not enough of a financial expert to know whether we ought to buy foreign gold, so I do not care to bring that into the discussion.

I am here to say that I believe it is a wise national policy for us to make wider use of the white metal in our monetary system. Throughout American history there has been a conflict between the two types of metallic money; gold versus silver. All of you remember the battle of the standards. Throughout our American history there has been a battle between the two types of paper money; bank currency on the one hand and governmental currency on the other. For the most part, I have always been a sound-money man. I do not believe in fiat money to any great extent, but I have come to believe that we have too long permitted this sovereign function of furnishing money to the Nation to pass out of the hands of the Government and into the hands of the banks and bankers.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Gladly.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Can the gentleman think of any money that is more truly fiat money than bank deposits which are created by a bank in order to make loans therewith?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I cannot. I cannot think of any greater inflation than we have witnessed many times and shall continue to witness under this system. When you talk about inflation coming about because of the purchase of silver, that is trifling inflation as compared with the volume of deposit money or bank credit which can be expanded overnight.

Let me remind you of the plain fact in history that the white and yellow metals have attracted the attention of human beings ever since trade has been carried on. It seems that about one-half the world, the occidental half, loves the yellow metal, gold. The eastern half, at least, and I think more than one-half of the American Continent, is very fond of white metal, silver. Ever since the day when Abraham bought a burial place for his wife Sarah and paid for it in silver, gold and silver have constituted the money of the common people; but in our country we have gotten away from it.

Although the Constitution of the United States says that Congress shall have the power to coin money and regulate the value thereof, we have permitted that power to go into the hands of the banking class. I tell you the people of this country demand that this Government reassert its power; recapture that function of sovereignty which has been permitted to slide away from it.

Now, with regard to domestically mined silver, it has been said that we have been subsidizing a few great corporations by that program. I know many small mining camps which have been kept going by this slightly better price which the Government has been paying for the past 5 or 6 years. It is also true that some of our copper producers, when the price of copper has been low, have gotten by because of the Government's purchase of their byproducts, silver. I want to tell you that in the little mining camp of Tombstone, Ariz., one of our chief silver-mining camps of the past, several small operators closed down about a year ago, when the price of silver dropped from 77 cents an ounce to 64 cents an ounce. Just that difference of 13 cents an ounce closed down those people and increased the relief load in that town. I say to you that if all the silver-mining camps of this country had closed down, which they would have done without this purchase program—and some copper camps as well—we would have been called upon to spend four times as much to carry their people on relief as we have spent purchasing American-produced silver. No doubt if we had free and unlimited coinage of silver, which I am not advocating, it would mean a certain amount of inflation, but it is scientific inflation and probably just about to the degree that the country needs.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Gladly.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Does not the gentleman believe that the word "inflation" is very often used in a mistaken sense? In other words, the word "inflation" really means an increase in the volume of money, which takes place more rapidly than the increase in volume of goods and services flowing through the channels of trade, but with not as much increase in the value of money each year as our industries and our agriculture increase the volume of those goods and services. So that is not inflation, if that much increase takes place?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I believe the gentleman is correct in his definition of inflation. Far too often the word "inflation" is used as we use the term "un-American" when we wish to discredit something.

Taking American economic history as a whole we find that business increases—business requiring an increase in the volume of money—from 3 to 5 percent annually. Money is the lifeblood of business. Inflation and deflation can be likened to changing the blood supply of the human body. Were I to allow a quart of my blood to be drawn off I would become anemic, I might possibly die. On the other hand, were I to allow someone to inject a quart of blood into my veins I would flush up and I might die. So uncontrolled inflation is an evil, uncontrolled deflation is an evil. Both must be geared to American productive capacity and need. Under our bank-managed system we have seen some tragic operations performed.

It is my belief that so long as our paper money has a metallic base—not gold alone, for that puts too much power into the hands of one class—our financial structure is safe. If the time ever comes when both gold and silver prove inadequate, we may have to add to the base other commodities constituting real wealth. Our money for a time should be based upon a combination of gold and silver, the amount of each depending upon our production of these precious metals, as it has been for a portion of our history. Increase should come not in the nature of "bank inflation" but according to business needs. I believe that the banking element of the East, those who want to keep up the value of gold and the increased value of their property based on gold, are making a sad mistake when they frown upon the use of silver as a monetary base and attempt to banish the white metal from our monetary system. However, if I had not pursued this line of thought I could have justified the Government's program of buying domestically produced silver as cheaper than relief which otherwise would have been imperative in mining camps.

I shall fight to the last ditch to see that the white metal occupies its proper place in the American monetary system. I believe any other course is folly, not only against the interests of the common people, but eventually it will react against the interests of the moneyed class. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CORBETT].

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, due to the widespread misunderstanding of the objections which were raised against H. R. 3590, popularly known as the public salary tax, and due to the fact that this bill will soon be before the Senate of the United States for approval or disapproval, I wish to explain the reasons why I have vigorously opposed this bill.

First, it is not at all reciprocal as regards my native State of Pennsylvania. Second, it is a clear violation of the immunity rule and is therefore unconstitutional. Third, there should be no distinct extension of Federal power without the consent of the people.

Regarding the first point, all persons familiar with the situation know that Pennsylvania cannot levy a graduated income tax without amending its constitution. We also know that 2 years ago the people of Pennsylvania voted against an amendment which would have made possible such a tax. The consequences of this state of affairs are quite simple. Once this bill becomes the law every paid employee of the State of Pennsylvania and all of its subdivisions become liable to pay a Federal income tax, but none of the Federal employees who reside in Pennsylvania become eligible to pay a State income tax. This is not reciprocity, but rather it resembles a condition where a man without a cow agrees to share all of his cows with his neighbor who has many cows.

In this same connection, even if the day should come when the people of Pennsylvania decide to have a graduated income tax, the fact still remains that the State and municipal employees outnumber the Federal employees on the ratio of about 5 to 1. Quite naturally the Federal Government is very willing to grant reciprocal powers to the States when a decided advantage will accrue to itself. Therefore it is my clear and sincere conviction that, at least so far as the State of Pennsylvania is concerned, the tax is not reciprocal, and no volume of vocal hysterics can ever alter the fact that Pennsylvania will suffer as a result of the passage of this legislation.

I wonder at this point if the people of Pennsylvania knew that when they urged the passage of this bill that they were urging the passage of a tax which would only result in drawing more money out of their State for the benefit of other States and without proper corresponding compensation. I wonder if they knew that in order to place a tax on the untaxed salaries of State and municipal employees they would have to place a similar tax upon their own salaries and incomes. I wonder if they knew that to tax the incomes of Federal employees who, it should be emphasized, already pay a Federal income tax, that they would have to pay a similar levy themselves. I wonder if the great popularity of this bill was not based upon a type of demagoguery which aroused the feelings of the people against a group of individuals that they mistakenly felt were enjoying privileges that they do not enjoy. Briefly, and mark it well, every Federal employee now residing in the State of Pennsylvania pays every tax that any other citizen pays, and every State and municipal employee pays every tax that every other citizen of our State pays, except the Federal income tax. Hence, by this bill we have a queer situation in which the people have asked that a State income tax be levied on themselves and all Federal employees in order that State and municipal employees will have to pay a Federal income tax. Somehow it just does not make sense. Never before in the history of the State have the people urged an increase in their own tax burden and the tax burden of others simply because they felt that a few State and municipal employees should have to pay a tax to the Federal Government. Perhaps if debate in the House of Representatives had not been limited to 3 hours, perhaps if the Gallup investigators had phrased their questions fairly, perhaps if the public had been properly informed on both sides of the question the people of Pennsylvania would have risen in loud opposition to this subtle trick that had been played upon them.

Let us now turn aside from this point to a consideration of the constitutionality of the measure. I have stated innumerable times that this bill constituted a clear violation of the immunity rule and is, therefore, unconstitutional and this statement has remained unchallenged by anyone who can speak with authority. At the outset, let us consider briefly the importance of the immunity rule as explained in the famous case of Collector v. Day (11 Wall. 113). The Court ruled that the immunity rule is—

Upheld by the great law of self-preservation, as any government, whose means employed in conducting its operations, if subject to the control of another and distinct government, can exist only at the mercy of that government.

Earlier Chief Justice Marshall in the famous case of McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat.) ruled that—

The exemption from taxation has been sustained on a principle which so entirely pervades the Constitution, is so intermixed with the materials which compose it, so interwoven with its web, so blended with its texture as to be incapable of being separated from it without rending it into shreds.

This, Mr. Chairman, is the rule which the Members of the House of Representatives who supported this bill ignored. This is the rule which those of us who voted against the bill refused to ignore. This is the rule on whose existence the existence of our dual system of government may quite possibly depend. Once we have set it aside we have opened the way for destructive taxation, and, as ever, the power to tax is still the power to destroy.

Another feature of the unconstitutionality of this act should be properly emphasized, because some people have been led to believe, particularly by the public press, that the sixteenth amendment gave Congress the power to levy such a tax. The exponents of this theory point with great mental pride to the words "whatsoever source derived" and say, "What could be more simple and plain?" I grant that these words are misleading, but their existence does not excuse those who seek to shape public opinion from studying their historical origin. In 1910 Charles Evans Hughes, at that time Governor of the State of New York, called on the Senate of the United States to express an opinion as to whether the words "whatsoever source derived" might some day lead to a tax on the instrumentalities or means and property of the State and municipalities or on the salaries of their officers. The answer to his question may be found in Senate Resolution 175 submitted by Senator BORAH on the 8th day of February 1910.

After reviewing for 1 hour all of the legal implications involved Senator BORAH concluded that no such danger threatened, that the immunity rule was inviolate, and that—

No one should be misled by the utterly unfounded proposition that this amendment contained the power to embarrass the State and rend the whole fabric into shreds. To construe the proposed amendment so as to enable us to tax the instrumentalities of the State would do violence to the rules laid down by the Supreme Court for a hundred years, wrench the whole Constitution from its harmonious proportions, and destroy the object and purpose for which the whole instrument was framed. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 45, pt. 2, pp. 1694-1698.)

At another place in the same resolution Senator BORAH declared that the words "from whatsoever source derived" add nothing to the force of the amendment. On the basis of these and similar assurances the States of these United States ratified the sixteenth amendment; so if the Salary Tax Act becomes part of the law of this land, it is not too much to say that the Congress of the United States has not merely done an unconstitutional thing but it has broken faith with the sovereign States that compose the United States.

I for one did not desire to be a party to that breach of faith, nor did I care to violate my oath of office by voting for a bill which I conscientiously felt to be unconstitutional. Others, of course, and I have the utmost respect for their opinions and integrity, must have felt differently, but I believe that the hasty manner in which the bill was rushed through the House and the lack of opportunity to study the whole situation may account for their vote.

Regarding the third point, which states that there should be no distinct extension of Federal power without the consent of the people, I grant again that opinions may differ, but I have always believed that the tenth amendment of the Bill of Rights, which says "all powers not granted to the Federal Government are reserved to the States or the people thereof" is not only part of the fundamental law of the land but it is likewise a good provision, and so long as it remains as a vital part of the United States Constitution the people should be privileged to vote "yes" or "no" as to whether or not they desire any increase in the power of the Federal Government at the expense of the States, the municipalities, or themselves.

At the present time it appears that the bill will become a law and will be tested before the Supreme Court. This is in accordance with the desire of those whose reasons for sponsoring the bill have not yet become clear. Just why they adopted this method when other and speedier methods were available is likewise a mystery, but I venture the prediction that unless the Court rules contrary to all established precedents that it will declare this bill to be unconstitutional by a decisive majority.

When that day comes, if it does, we may then proceed in a proper and orderly manner to give the people of these United States an opportunity to express their will, and that opportunity can be extended in a way which will limit the granting of new power to the Federal Government to the specific objectives of this bill or such other specific objectives as may be included in the amendment. By this method the people can secure this tax if they want it without endangering in the slightest the sovereign power of their States and municipalities. I favor this method.

In closing I emphasize that I never opposed the idea that taxes should fall equally upon all persons in proportion to their ability to pay. What I opposed was the method employed for so doing, and the fact that the people of Pennsylvania will suffer an unjust tax burden as compared with the 31 States which impose State income taxes.

Regardless of the fate of this bill and regardless of how popular it may be, I feel that I would not have been displaying much courage if I had not done all that I could to defeat it. No one can possibly attribute any motive to my actions except a sincere conviction that this bill was a bad bill predicated on unwholesome principles, and one which was not reciprocal for my State and district.

In any event, right or wrong, I do not choose to be a rubber stamp for any President, pressure group, editorial writer, poison-pen artist, or opinion poll. I predict that the day will come when I can point with pride to my vote against H. R. 3590. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOEHNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 4492, had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father, who alone art all-wise and all-knowing, whose tenderness is from age to age: We thank Thee that Thou hast taken us out of our own keeping and hast bidden us to put ourselves in Thy hands, that, resting in Thee, we may be comforted, dropping our cares where burdens have no weight and tears no bitterness.

And since the Master has walked our common ways, tuning all life to sweeter, loftier grace, and by His lowly toil has forever stamped true labor with its highest dignity, grant that we and all Thy workers, with willing hands and hearts, may consecrate our work to Thee, that lust and greed may never rule the world again, and Thy temple, builded not with hands, may be revealed in the opened hearts of men. We ask it in the name of the master builder, Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, February 23, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Kansas, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 6

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to appropriate all of the funds collected under the terms of the Pittman-Robertson Act for Federal aid to the States in wildlife restoration

Whereas under the terms of the Pittman-Robertson Act, passed by the Congress of the United States, the 10-percent excise tax on sporting arms and ammunition is earmarked for appropriation by the Congress for Federal aid to the States in wildlife restoration; and

Whereas, unofficial, but usually reliable, sources estimate the full amount of this tax at about three and one-quarter million dollars, and this year it was recommended that the full amount of the tax be made available to the States; and

Whereas this recommendation was cut to $1,000,000 before the Budget was presented to the Seventy-sixth Congress; and

Whereas if this recommendation to appropriate only $1,000,000 to the States is followed, the State of Kansas would receive only about $17,000, while if the entire amount collected was made available to the States, Kansas would receive about $57,000: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Kansas (the house of representatives concurring therein), That we request and urge the Congress of the United States to make available to the States all of the funds collected under the Pittman-Robertson Act, passed by the last Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That sufficient copies of this resolution shall be printed and the secretary of state is hereby directed to transmit a copy of the same to the President of the Senate of the United States, a copy to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and a copy to each of the Kansas Senators and Members of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Ohio, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Senate resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States, relative to the policy of assuming the assessments and the entire cost of improvements in conservancy districts, especially with reference to the Miami Conservancy District

Whereas the Congress of the United States passed an act June 22, 1936, authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes, which act is known as the Flood Control Act, wherein the Federal Government assumed the responsibility for all flood control in the United States, and Congress had amended this act in 1937 and 1938 as the Ohio River Basin; and

Whereas the Miami Conservancy District was constructed for flood-control purposes and it benefited flood control in the Ohio and Mississippi River Basins and that the maintenance is necessary for flood control in Ohio and the Mississippi regions; and

Whereas additional work and construction is necessary in the Miami Conservancy District looking toward the maximum efficiency for flood control as required under the Federal Flood Control Act; and

Whereas the Federal Government should assume control to coordinate the various flood-control districts for effective application of its flood-control policy, and should further assume the outstanding obligations of the Miami Conservancy District, the greatest part of which has been paid by the taxpayers of the district upon assessments during the past 20 years: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the members of the senate hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to carefully weigh the advantages as a whole that were derived from the Miami Conservancy District and to assume the obligations of the district yet outstanding, and to assume the control and maintenance of said Miami Conservancy District; be it further

Resolved, That properly authenticated copies of this resolution be forwarded by the clerk of the senate to President Franklin D. Roosevelt, Vice President JOHN N. GARNER, to the United States Senators, ROBERT A. TAIT and A. V. DONAHAY, and to each of the Members of Congress from Ohio.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following letter from the Governor of Arizona and joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, STATEHOUSE,
Phoenix, Ariz., February 18, 1939.

PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,

United States Congress, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith Senate Joint Memorial No. 4, relating to the stabilization of the price of silver, adopted by the Arizona Fourteenth Legislature in regular session convened.

Your memorialist respectfully urges careful consideration of this matter.

Respectfully,

R. T. JONES, Governor.

Senate Joint Memorial 4

Joint memorial relating to the stabilization of the price of silver
To the President and the Congress of the United States of America:
Your memorialist respectfully represents:

Hundreds of thousands of workers in the United States are employed in the mining industry, and they and their dependents must rely on the continued operation of that industry for a livelihood.

A stable price for silver is vital to the mining industry in general, inasmuch as gold, lead, zinc, and copper are generally associated with silver in ore and rock.

If the Federal Government discontinues the policy of maintaining a fair price for domestic silver, the producers of that metal will be able to obtain only the world market price, which currently approximates 45 cents per ounce, and, in the absence of governmental action, would doubtless fall to the depression level of 25 cents.

In such event, a large number of the nonferrous metal mines would be forced to close, owing to the relatively low market prices for copper, lead, and zinc, with which metals silver is generally associated, and the prices of which are not easily susceptible of stabilization by governmental action.

The history of the past decade substantiates this statement. In 1931 and 1932, nearly all such mines were closed, and unemployment was the almost universal condition of the miners, whereas immediately upon the initiation of the policy of Government stabilization of the price of silver, a large number of silver, copper, lead, and zinc mines were able to resume operations because of the fact that the profitable price for silver compensated for the low prices for the other metals, enabling operation at a profit.

The closing of any considerable number of mines at the present time would adversely affect not only the problem of relief, but also the prosperity of many other industries, and not only the mining States, but the country as a whole. The mines consume great quantities of coal, electric power, powder, machinery, and other supplies, thus providing profitable employment for thousands and needed markets for vast amounts of American goods, to say nothing of the purchases of farm and factory products by the employed miners. If the mines close, the farmer's local market in mining States is destroyed, and he must seek markets in other States which are already oversupplied. The National, State, and local Governments would lose the taxes now paid by the mines, which burden would fall upon land.

The Government's policy of maintaining the price of silver has cost the taxpayers nothing, and has netted the United States Treasury a clear profit, in addition to the saving of the amount which would otherwise have had to be expended for the relief of unemployed miners.

It would be inequitable for the Federal Government to assume the obligation to protect all classes of products except metals, and all producers of wealth except miners, when the establishment of a permanent program of stabilization of the price of silver would so greatly benefit the producers of not only that metal, but gold, copper, lead, and zinc.

Wherefore your memorialist, the Senate of the State of Arizona (the house of representatives concurring), urgently requests:

1. That the President of the United States of America do all within his power to maintain the price of newly mined domestic silver at not less than its present level.

2. That the Congress of the United States of America enact legislation permanently stabilizing the price of silver at a level which will protect and foster the mining industry of the country.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Senate Joint Memorial 9

Whereas there are now pending in the current session of the Congress of the United States of America two proposed bills to further amend the Federal Oil and Gas Leasing Act, as amended, same being H. R. 2662 and H. R. 2663; and

Whereas said H. R. 2662 proposes to extend certain oil and gas prospecting permits issued under said Federal Oil and Gas Leasing Act; and

Whereas said H. R. 2663 provides for the issuance of oil and gas leases with reasonable and workable rental, royalty, and bond provisions; and

Whereas said proposed legislation, necessary in the public-land States in order to promote the prospecting for minerals on the public domain, located in the Western States, will be of great importance to all the citizens of the State of Colorado, and will increase employment and will add to the prosperity of this State and of the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Thirty-second General Assembly of the State of Colorado (the house of representatives concurring herein), That the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized to immediately and favorably consider and act upon said H. R. 2662 and H. R. 2663, so amending said Leasing Act in the interests of the citizens of the State of Colorado and of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That copies hereof be promptly transmitted to the President and Vice President of the United States, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Senators and Representatives from the State of Colorado in the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Delaware, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

RESOLUTION IN REFERENCE TO FEDERAL TAX ON MOTOR FUELS AND LUBRICATING OILS

Whereas it is generally acknowledged that the special Federal excise taxes upon the sale of motor fuels and lubricating oils were originally imposed by the Congress of the United States as emergency measures; and

Whereas by subsequent acts the Congress has continued to levy these taxes year after year until more than $1,500,000,000 in revenue has been paid by the motorists since these taxes were first imposed in 1932; and

Whereas the fullest use of these commodities is vital to the full development of industry, communication, and transportation throughout the Nation and the State of Delaware; and

Whereas the taxing of these commodities by the Federal Government constitutes an invasion of the States' rightful field of taxation, established through priority, upon which depends the past investment in, and future security of, the highway system of this State, the impairment of which would prove highly detrimental to the citizens of Delaware; and

Whereas the already excessively taxed motorists and highway users are unjustly forced to bear the additional burden of this taxation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Delaware (the house of representatives concurring therein), That this One Hundred and Seventh General Assembly of the State of Delaware does hereby petition and urge the Congress of the United States to refrain from enacting or reenacting any and all laws imposing Federal excise taxes on gasoline and other motor fuels and on lubricating oils; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate of the Congress of the United States, and to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, and the chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate of the Congress of the United States, and to Hon. JOHN G. TOWNSEND, Jr., and Hon. JAMES H. HUGHES, Senators from the State of Delaware in the United States Senate, and to Hon. GEORGE S. WILLIAMS, our Representative in Congress from the State of Delaware, urging them to exert their utmost efforts to secure the desired objectives as expressed in this resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolution memorializing the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives of the United States to carefully consider the General Welfare Act of 1939, H. R. 2, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session

Whereas the general welfare of the United States must be provided for and promoted by supplying to the American people generally a more liberal distribution and increase of purchasing power by some means to be devised and practiced by the country as a whole; and

Whereas the plan devised and put in operation should be national in scope to accomplish and attain the end sought; and

Whereas a considerable number of the citizens and taxpayers of the State of Nebraska have an abiding conviction that the increase in the purchasing power of the mass of the people making up the United States of America can be realized under a national economic policy enacted into Federal statutes whereby citizens of the United States upon attaining the age of 60 years should retire from gainful employment, thereby stabilizing gainful employment for other citizens, stimulating agricultural and industrial production and general business, and alleviating the hazards and insecurity of old age and unemployment, through a system of retirement annuities to be spent each month as received for commodities and services furnished and sold by citizens of the United States; and

Whereas H. R. 2, Seventy-sixth Congress of the United States, now referred to the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives of said Congress embodies the plan hereinbefore set forth in this preamble and is worthy of consideration, merits discussion and debate by both the lower and upper bodies of the Congress: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Nebraska in fifty-third regular session assembled:

1. That this legislature respectfully petitions, memorializes, and urges the Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives of the United States, carefully to consider in all its phases H. R. 2, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, commonly known as the General Welfare Act of 1939.

2. That the clerk of this legislature is hereby ordered and directed forthwith to forward a copy of this resolution, properly authenticated and suitably engrossed, to the chairman, Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.; to the President of the United States, to the Vice President of the United States as presiding officer of the United States Senate; to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of the United States Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Nebraska in the Congress, to the end that representatives in the Government and the Congress of the United States may be advised of the sincere desire on the part of this legislature that said H. R. 2 be given full and complete consideration and a fair hearing and discussion upon its merits at the present session of the Congress. Provided, That this resolution, passed by the Nebraska Legislature, is not to be considered as an endorsement of H. R. 2.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, favoring an amendment to the Social Security Act to provide for the payment by the Federal Government of one-half the funds used in aid of dependent children, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See joint memorial printed in full when presented today by Mr. MURRAY.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, favoring the enactment of legislation to grant certain public lands to the State of Montana for the use and benefit of the Northern Montana Agricultural and Manual Training School, also designated as the Northern Montana College, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

(See joint memorial printed in full when presented today by Mr. MURRAY.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from a convention of 600 members of the construction industry assembled at Los Angeles, Calif., praying for an additional appropriation for salaries and expenses of the Federal Housing Administration, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Lodge No. 1117, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, of Gary, Ind., protesting against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate the memorial of J. D. Baird and 116 oil-field drillers and helpers, of Hughes County, Okla., remonstrating against the operation of the wage and hour law as applied to oil-field workers, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from the secretary of Cleveland Industrial Council, C. I. O., of Cleveland, Ohio, praying that adequate funds be allotted to continue the investigation by the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor investigating violations of civil liberties, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of presidents and chairmen of the Sixth Congressional District Townsend Plan, Oakland, Calif., praying for adoption of the so-called Townsend plan for old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the annual meeting of the Rhode Island Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, Providence, R. I., relative to foreign relations and the national defense, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Division No. 173, train-service employees, in the State of Missouri, protesting against the enactment of legislation to regulate the mileage of train-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. GERRY presented a resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, protesting against any change in the home port (Newport, R. I.) of the frigate Constellation and favoring the preservation of the frigate for the people of Rhode Island and New England, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. GREEN.)

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of sundry citizens of El Paso, Tex., praying for the enactment of House bill 11, a general-welfare bill granting old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Topeka, Kans., praying for the enactment of House bill 11, a general-welfare bill granting old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Osborne, Kans., praying for discontinuance of the shipment of war supplies from the United States to Japan for use in operations in China, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Malden, Mass., praying for the enactment of House bill 11, a general-welfare bill granting old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the lifting of the embargo on the shipment of arms and munitions to Spain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from members of the faculty and student body of Smith College, Northampton, Mass., praying for the enactment of the so-called Thomas amendment to the Neutrality Act, so as to permit the lifting of the Spanish embargo, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. REED presented a petition of 66 citizens of Holyrood, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation either imposing a processing tax on wheat or giving to farmers the cost of production plus a profit, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of 195 citizens of Fontana, 39 citizens of Lehigh, 60 citizens of Smith County, and 60 citizens of Walton, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 1234) to amend section 13 (a) of the act approved June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1069), entitled "Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938," which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of 33 citizens of Hope, 50 citizens of McPherson, and 96 citizens of Parsons, all in the State of Kansas, praying that the United States adopt a policy of nonparticipation in aggression by stopping the shipment to aggressor nations of all goods that may be used for military purposes, and that immediate steps be taken to stop the shipment of such goods to Japan, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of 35 citizens of Chanute, 80 citizens of Newton, and 150 citizens of Wichita, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation limiting the service of certain railroad employees to 208 hours in a month, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HOLT presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the Sportsmen's Square Circle Club, Marion County, W. Va., remonstrating against curtailment of the wildlife restoration fund, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from Branch 92, American Federation of Hosiery Workers, of Martinsburg, W. Va., remonstrating against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from Rev. Carmi Webb, pastor of Haney's Branch Baptist Church, of Ceredo, and 30 other citizens, in the State of West Virginia, remonstrating against inclusion of religious bodies and their employees under the operation of the social-security system, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Taylor County (W. Va.) Board of Trade, protesting against the enactment of House bill 188, amending the Interstate Commerce Act, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HOLT also presented the following resolution of the House of Delegates of the State of West Virginia, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

House resolution opposing the enactment of H. R. 188, S. 126, S. 138, and S. 153, now pending in the Congress of the United States, pertaining to freight rates

Whereas there have been certain bills introduced into the Seventy-sixth Congress, namely, H. R. 188, S. 126, S. 138, and S. 153, which, if passed, would be harmful to labor, agriculture, and industry in West Virginia; and

Whereas the primary object of these bills is to compel by legislative action the establishment and maintenance of freight rates from one rate territory to another on the rate per mile that applies within the destination territory which in turn would provide a substantially higher rate in one direction than in another over the same rails and between the same points; and

Whereas the United States has been naturally divided into several rate territories because of differing costs of transportation caused primarily from the fact of differing volumes of tonnage produced and available for transportation in the various sections of the country; and

Whereas West Virginia is located in what is designated official territory and being that territory lying east of the Mississippi River and north of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers, and recognized as one of the greatest industrial sections, not only of the United States but of the entire world, and because of this fact it provides the greatest number of tons per mile of transportation and consequently the lowest cost of operation for the railroads in that territory in the United States; and

Whereas one of the purposes of establishing the Interstate Commerce Commission was to create a body which could coordinate all the interstate rates applying to all sections of the country, the effect of which, after more than 50 years of functioning by the Commission, has been to remove many inequalities and discriminations in the rate structure of the country as a whole, and to remove unfair advantages which one section of the country might have over other sections differently situated; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States is not equipped to make thorough investigation of rate structures, or to study them, whereby such laws as the proposed legislation can only result in the vicious circle of affecting one part of the United States adversely by attempting through legislation to assist another; and

Whereas these bills, or any of them, if enacted into law, would require the Interstate Commerce Commission, regardless of the facts, evidence, equity, their better judgment, or otherwise, to disregard differing costs which form the basis for these different rate territories, and arbitrarily make from official territory, to all other territories rate which would be materially higher than would be charged shippers in these other territories for shipping the same or similar articles, the same or similar distances into West Virginia, to the serious disadvantage of, and discrimination against West Virginia; and

Whereas such a prejudice to West Virginia and preference of these other territories would not only seriously restrict the marketing and consequently the production of articles of commerce in West Virginia to the substantial and grave loss to its labor, agriculture, and industry, but, even more seriously, would induce substantial removal of manufacturing operations from West Virginia to these more favored localities to the disadvantage of all its citizens: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of delegates, That West Virginia Senators and Representatives in Congress be earnestly requested and urged to not only vote against these bills and any other similar bills or amendments to or provisions of bills which have the same purpose but to also use their effort to convince their colleagues in both Houses of Congress of the unfairness and impropriety of such legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the house of delegates is hereby directed to forward a certified copy of this resolution to each West Virginia Senator and Representative in Congress.

Mrs. CARAWAY presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 16

Whereas under the provisions of the Federal unemployment-compensation laws, taxes are collected from employers with which to create a fund from which unemployment compensation is to be paid to unemployed workmen in Arkansas; and

Whereas it is financially unsound not to invest said funds, or a substantial portion thereof, in safe interest-bearing securities as they accumulate from time to time; and

Whereas under the present laws of the United States, these Arkansas unemployment trust funds are invested and investable only in bonds of the United States; and

Whereas the general-obligation bonds of the State of Arkansas are secure and will be paid; and

Whereas in any event investment of said funds in Arkansas bonds would jeopardize the citizens of no other State; and

Whereas such investment would improve the market value of other Arkansas bonds and thus strengthen the credit of the State of Arkansas and move the State nearer to a condition under which long-hoped-for refunding of highway bonds could be accomplished: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Fifty-second General Assembly of the State of Arkansas (the house of representatives concurring herein), That the Senators from Arkansas in the Senate of the United States, and the Members of the Congress from Arkansas in the National House of Representatives be, and they hereby are, memorialized to procure the passage of legislation in the National Congress necessary to the accomplishment of this invaluable service to the State of Arkansas, her people and her general economy.

Mr. GREEN presented the following resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Resolution requesting the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to take all necessary steps to prevent any change in the home port of the frigate Constellation and preserve for the people of Rhode Island and New England this cherished shrine

Whereas at the January sessions of 1936 and 1937 of the Rhode Island General Assembly resolutions have been passed, namely, resolution No. 96, approved March 7, 1936, and resolution No. 11, approved February 2, 1937, urging the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in Congress to take all necessary steps to prevent any change in the home port of the historic frigate Constellation, the oldest fighting ship afloat; and

Whereas the people of this State are of the firm opinion that the frigate Constellation should be preserved and restored as a national museum and that Newport, R. I., should be made its permanent home since this renowned ship has for a long time now been an important part of the naval institutions and traditions in and about Newport: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this general assembly, adding the strength of its wishes to those of two previous Rhode Island Legislatures, does hereby respectfully protest to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of the Navy any change from the present home port of this ancient ship of war; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, and to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in Congress, urging them to take all necessary steps to prevent any change in the home port of the Constellation and preserve to the people of Rhode Island and New England the shrine which they have so proudly cherished for so many years.

Mr. SCHWARTZ presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint memorial memorializing the Congress of the United States to consider means of protecting the livestock industry, which is seriously threatened by the importation of meats and meat products

Whereas the production of livestock constitutes a major Wyoming industry; and

Whereas the industry is being seriously affected by importations of meats and meat products at prices below American production costs; and

Whereas this importation of meats and meat products is recognized as unfair and unjust competition and seriously threatens the industry at home: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twenty-fifth Legislature of the State of Wyoming (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby memorialized to consider means of protecting the livestock industry, which is seriously threatened by the importation of meats and meat products; be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to United States Senators JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY and HARRY H. SCHWARTZ, and to Representative FRANK O. HORTON.

Mr. MURRAY presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

House Joint Resolution 3

Resolution encouraging a more extensive use of copper

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Montana (the senate concurring):

Whereas all copper consumed in this country is mined, refined, and fabricated into wire and cable in the United States at a cost of $222.74 per ton—$96.50 paid directly in wages, $79.57 in supplies purchased from other industries, $8.29 in Federal taxes, $10.39 in State and local taxes, $27.99 in freight to railroads (estimated 44 percent of railroad income goes to labor); and

Whereas the consumption of copper declined in the first quarter of 1938 against the first quarter of 1937, 56,008 tons, a loss to labor of 1,663,438 man-days; and

Whereas aluminum has entered the field as a competitor of copper as a conductor of electricity on projects being executed by the T. V. A., R. E. A., etc., aluminum being manufactured from bauxite ores of which 54.8 percent in the year 1937 was imported from British Guiana and Surinam, countries in which coolie labor is employed at a few cents a day in their mines, thus causing an exploitation of cheap labor and a displacing of American workmen in the bauxite fields of Arkansas and Tennessee, to say nothing of the unfair competition with the American copper miner; and

Whereas low bids on T. V. A. and R. E. A. projects have invariably included the use of aluminum because of its lower price, due to the fact that it can be imported and fabricated into a finished conductor more cheaply than copper as a raw material can be produced in this country, based on our higher standard of living; and

Whereas from a true American standpoint and from what we believe is the real intent of the R. E. A., to use American material and labor: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Montana (the senate concurring), That domestic labor and industry should be receiving from the projects carried on by the T. V. A., R. E. A., etc., a larger proportion of the benefits to be derived from these projects, and that said benefits will be derived by a more extensive use of copper as a conductor, and that in all calls for bids wherein in executing the proposed contract either copper or aluminum might be used, the use of copper exclusively be one of the specifications thereof.

LXXXIV—120

Mr. MURRAY also presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Joint memorial to the Congress of the United States requesting the amendment by that body of the Social Security Act of Congress so as to provide for the payment by the Federal Government of one-half the money used in aid of dependent children

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Whereas the Social Security Act of Congress, known as Public, No. 271, Seventy-fourth Congress, H. R. 7260, approved August 14, 1935, provides in section 403 (a) for the payment by the Secretary of the United States Treasury to each State which has an approved plan for aid to dependent children, for each quarter beginning with the quarter commencing with July 1, 1935, an amount which shall be used exclusively for carrying out the State plan equal to one-third of the total of the sums expended during such quarter under such plan; and

Whereas by section 3 (a) of said act the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay to each State a sum equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended as old-age assistance under the State plan; and

Whereas the volume of necessary work and expenditure in connection with aid to dependent children is equal to or greater than that in the case of old-age dependents; and

Whereas the work of caring for dependent children, giving them an opportunity in life of which they have necessarily been deprived by the circumstances which bring them within the purview of the act, and making them useful and independent citizens to take the place of those who have passed their age of activity is greater than that involved in providing for aged dependents: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (both houses concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is hereby, respectfully urged to amend subdivisions (a) and (b) of said section 403 of said Social Security Act by changing the words "one-third," wherever the same appears therein, to the words "one-half"; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be mailed to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Montana.

Mr. MURRAY also presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Memorial requesting Congress of the United States to pass a bill granting certain public lands to the State of Montana for the use and benefit of the Northern Montana Agricultural and Manual Training School, also designated as the Northern Montana College

To the honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas the Honorable BURTON K. WHEELER, United States Senator from Montana, introduced in the Senate of the United States on January 4, 1939, a bill granting certain public lands to the State of Montana for the use and benefit of the Northern Montana Agricultural and Manual Training School, designated as S. 30, purporting to grant to the State of Montana 500,000 acres of land for the use and benefit of said Northern Montana Agricultural and Manual Training School, also designated as Northern Montana College;

Whereas the Federal Government previously has granted lands to aid in the establishment, support, and maintenance of all of the units of the Greater University of Montana except said Northern Montana College;

Whereas said land grants have been and are of great assistance to the said institutions benefiting thereby in furthering the progress of higher education in the State of Montana; and

Whereas the Northern Montana College is in need of such aid and will be able to offer greater advantages, particularly to the youth of northern Montana if such grant were made: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the senate and house concurring, hereby does request and petition the Congress of the United States to pass said bill introduced by the Honorable BURTON K. WHEELER entitled "A bill granting certain public lands to the State of Montana for the use and benefit of the Northern Montana Agricultural and Manual Training School," designated as S. 30; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Montana, and that they and each of them be, and hereby are, requested to use all means within their powers to bring about the passage of said bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a concurrent resolution adopted by the New Jersey Legislature, commending the House of Representatives for its recent action in continuing the work of the so-called Dies committee; a concurrent resolution adopted by the New Jersey Legislature, asking the Secretary of Labor to conduct a wage survey in the silk-dyeing industry; a resolution adopted by the Board of Commissioners of the City of Atlantic City, N. J., protesting against the construction with Federal funds of an auditorium in the District of Columbia; and a resolution adopted by the city commissioners of Camden, N. J., protesting against any reductions in the recommended appropriation for rivers and harbors.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions presented by the Senator from New Jersey will be received, appropriately referred, and printed in the RECORD.

To the Committee on the Judiciary:

Concurrent resolution commending the House of Representatives of the National Congress on their recent action in continuing the activities of the Dies committee to investigate un-American practices

Be it resolved by the house of assembly (the senate concurring):

Resolved, That the New Jersey Legislature, in regular session on this date, do hereby commend the House of Representatives of the National Congress on their recent action in continuing the activities of the Dies committee to investigate un-American practices, inasmuch as we feel that the work of this committee is vitally important in protecting and perpetuating the spirit of true American patriotism; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, signed by the speaker of the house of assembly and the president of the senate, be sent to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the National Congress and the Members of Congress from the State of New Jersey.

To the Committee on Education and Labor:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the United States Secretary of Labor to make a survey of wage levels in the silk-dyeing industry for the purpose of reestablishing wage levels in said industry under the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act

Whereas there exists serious competitive conditions in the silk-dyeing industry, with wages ranging from 25 cents per hour in certain sections of the South and elsewhere, to 54 cents per hour in northern New Jersey and the New York area; and

Whereas this differential requires immediate, drastic remedial action because of this condition; and

Whereas these sectional wage differentials have constituted a major cause of the economic chaos in the silk-dyeing industry; and

Whereas the economic welfare of northern New Jersey and especially the city of Paterson, Passaic County, and a large section of the contiguous community depends upon this industry; and

Whereas it is essential that reasonable competition be reestablished for the general welfare; and

Whereas the Honorable W. WARREN BARBOUR, United States Senator from New Jersey, has requested the United States Secretary of Labor, Frances L. Perkins, to make a survey and thus provide a basis on which the industry committee could reestablish, under the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act, comparable wage levels in this industry; and

Whereas the State of New Jersey recognizes the need for such survey: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Assembly of the State of New Jersey (the senate concurring therein):

1. That United States Secretary of Labor Frances L. Perkins be and is hereby respectfully memorialized to make a survey of the silk-dyeing industry in order to provide a basis upon which comparable wage levels may be established under the Fair Labor Standards Act, to the end that reasonable competition may exist between the various sections of the South and elsewhere and the State of New Jersey, and that a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the Administrator of the Fair Labor Standards Act, to the United States Secretary of Labor and to each Member of Congress elected from the State of New Jersey, and that the latter be requested to use their best endeavors to accomplish the purpose of this resolution.

To the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

City protests passage of bill for construction in Washington, D. C., with Federal money, of building for convention hall and exposition purposes

Whereas the city of Atlantic City has erected one of the largest convention halls in the world; and

Whereas the city of Atlantic City has an enormous investment in the said convention hall; and

Whereas the Board of Commissioners of the City of Atlantic City are advised that a bill has been introduced in the United States Senate for the construction in Washington, D. C., with Federal money, of a building that may be used for convention hall and exposition purposes; and

Whereas the board of commissioners have concluded that great damage and loss will ensue to the city of Atlantic City if such building is constructed in Washington, D. C., and used for convention hall or exposition purposes: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Board of Commissioners of the City of Atlantic City, That the city register its protest against the passage of such bill for the construction in Washington, D. C., with Federal money, of a building that may be used for convention hall and exposition purposes; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to Senators SMATHERS and BARBOUR and to Congressman JEFFRIES; and be it further

Resolved, That Senators SMATHERS and BARBOUR and Congressman JEFFRIES be, and they are hereby, requested to present Atlantic City's protest to the proper officials in Washington, D. C.

To the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas the Great Lakes River and Harbor Development Conference has warned all cities that are ports of entry that a severe curtailment in appropriations for development of our harbors and channels was imminent, revealing, in fact, that the recommendation of the War Department, through the United States Engineers, of $102,975,800 is cut in the Budget for the coming year to $30,000,000, an allotment that presents a new low, while other Federal expenditures have risen to unprecedented heights; and

Whereas that would certainly prove a serious set-back to economic life and commerce everywhere, affecting, especially, the great River Delaware and the ports of Camden and Philadelphia, depriving them of what is rightfully due since the great River Delaware, that forms their harbor, is admittedly one of the greatest revenue producers of our Nation, and to hinder or neglect would be disastrous to our commercial life. Channels leading into the great harbors of our Nation must be deepened, not merely maintained, inasmuch as marine transportation leans progressively more toward the greater bottoms; and

Whereas it would seem that national wisdom is only then true wisdom if we encourage the means that brings commerce to our rivers and their ports; and

Whereas properly sufficient Federal expenditures for the aforementioned purpose and reasons are truly worth while serving in twofold ways—bringing commerce and business to our shores—thus giving employment to many in commercial and constructive ways; and

Whereas the deepening and extension of waterways is furthermore all important in times other than peace, a fact that is recognized and pursued in other lands, quoting for instance the Mittelland Canal, just opened to transit, and which connects the Rhine, the Danube, the Oder, the Weser, the Main, and Elbe, thus making it possible for the Reich to convey either commerce or war material from and to every corner of that Nation, entirely intracoastal. Just why our own country should fail to take advantage of its many and wonderful natural advantages is barely understandable, since today no one may forecast what might confront us on tomorrow; and so, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the city commission, in true spirit of Americanism, protest the shortsightedness of whoever may be responsible in curtailing the recommendation of the United States engineers to almost a fourth—an allotment that will not even provide satisfactory maintenance; and further be it

Resolved, That a copy of this protesting resolution be sent to our Representatives of both Houses of Congress with the kindly request for their plea for adequate and fair allotment for rivers and harbors, feeling satisfied that the Board of Engineers have the real conception of the true needs in their recommendation of $102,975,800.

REVISION OF FREIGHT RATES

Mr. RADCLIFFE presented a letter from Charles R. Seal, director of the Baltimore (Md.) Association of Commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BALTIMORE ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE,
Baltimore, Md., February 16, 1939.

HON. GEORGE L. RADCLIFFE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR RADCLIFFE: Of concern to industrial and shipping interests in Maryland, and in other States in the area east of the Mississippi River and, roughly, north of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers, are a number of bills which have been introduced in both Houses of the present Congress having as their objective a general revision of the freight-rate structure of the entire country. Passage of any of these would be particularly harmful to industry in the northern territory which I have described, as well as to the railroads and probably other forms of transportation throughout the country. The several bills are: S. J. Res. 27, S. J. Res. 58, S. 126, S. 137, S. 158, H. J. Res. 152, H. R. 188, H. R. 3369, and H. R. 3749.

While some of these bills differ from others in their approach to the question, they all seem to have the same objective, namely, revision of the freight-rate structure to one level in lieu of the present rate zones of various levels, of which that within the above-described area, including Maryland, is the lowest. I invite your particular attention to S. 158 and H. R. 188, which are substantially identical and are similar also to bills introduced in the two previous Congresses. These would, briefly, require that interterritorial rates, such as between the South and the North, shall not exceed the level of rates within the destination territory. Since the rates within the North are lower than those within the South and interterritorially, the result of legislation of this kind would be to reduce the rates from the South into the North without, strictly speaking, requiring a reduction to the same level from the North into the South. Obviously, such an adjustment of the rate structure would not only severely discriminate against northern shippers but would greatly retard industrial development and expansion in the North and correspondingly encourage the development of industry in the South.

Aside from this threatened harm to business in the northern territory, the bills are objectionable on the ground that they provide for statutory rate making by specific rule of Congress, in lieu of the present discretionary authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix rate levels for the various recognized rate groups based upon the conditions affecting transportation within and between such groups. This view is, I am certain, universally held in the northern area by those who are interested in or familiar with transportation and rate questions. These interests view with considerable concern announcements which have come from Washington to the effect that there has been formed a coalition of southern, southwestern, and western Members of both Houses for the purpose of pressing for the passage of legislation to further the objective of these bills, in connection with the program of transportation legislation, and consideration is now being given by a number of northern commercial interests to an effort to bring about similar cooperative action by the Members of the Senate and House from the several Northern States.

It is our earnest hope that you will bear in mind these bills and their importance to the business and industry of this State, and lend your assistance in every possible way to prevent passage of any legislation of this character.

I am similarly addressing Senator TYDINGS and Members of the House from Maryland.

Sincerely yours,

CHAS. R. SEAL, Director.

RESOLUTIONS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF AMERICAN WATER WORKS ASSOCIATION

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Finance Committee a letter addressed to me by Mr. Elton D. Walker, professor of hydraulic and sanitary engineering, Pennsylvania State College, of February 24, 1939, together with two resolutions recently adopted by the board of directors of the American Water Works Association.

There being no objection, the letter and resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE COLLEGE, PA., February 24, 1939.

HON. JAMES J. DAVIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am enclosing herewith a copy of each of two resolutions recently adopted by the board of directors of the American Water Works Association, which I personally favor and which pertain to legislation that I believe is pending in Congress at this time. I hope that you may find it possible to support the views expressed in these resolutions.

The first of these is of more direct personal application to me than the second. It would be a considerable burden to have to go back over one's accounts for all the years since the income-tax law has been in force, and it also seems to me to be unfair in view of the various rulings of the courts and the board of appeals to have the matter reversed now and made retroactive in the reversal. Citizens have acted in good faith in accordance with the interpretations of the law in effect at the time that returns were made, and if a change of ruling later on is going to upset conditions it cannot help but result in a feeling of uncertainty on the part of individuals as to what their liabilities are.

The second resolution does not affect me personally, but I think that as a matter of equity the principle involved is correct. If the Federal Government is going to levy taxes on the employees of States and subdivisions of States, then the State should have an equal right to levy income tax on Federal employees residing within the State limits.

Very truly yours,

ELTON D. WALKER.

1. Whereas recent judicial decisions relative to the liability of employees of the States and their civil subdivisions for Federal taxation of their income have been interpreted to authorize the Internal Revenue Department to enforce a collection of such taxes not alone for the 1938 period but also retroactively for the entire period of years for which there may be legal liability under existing laws as now interpreted;

Whereas many of the members of the American Water Works Association, who are employees of States or their political subdivisions, have been led by the tenor of previous judicial decisions to consider themselves not liable for Federal income tax, and in good faith have so acted; and

Whereas it has been reported that in a very recent press conference the President of the United States has indicated that he would recommend that legislation be enacted to remove the possibility of retroactive taxation of such persons: Therefore be it

Resolved by the board of directors of the American Water Works Association in annual meeting assembled in New York on January 18, 1939, That it approve and heartily support the recommendation that the Congress enact such legislation as will relieve State and municipal employees from the possibility of retroactive Federal income taxation.

2. Whereas the Federal Department of Justice has advised the Treasury Department "that the principle of immunity protected the Federal Government against taxation by the States, but did not necessarily shield the States against the exercise of the delegated and supreme taxing power of the central government"; and

Whereas the enforcement of this opinion would affect the States and their political subdivisions by taxation of the interest paid on their bonds and other certificates of indebtedness; and

Whereas the financial situation of the water-supply systems that are under the control of municipalities or other political subdivisions of the State would be vitally affected by the Federal Government's taxing the interest upon the securities of such systems; and

Whereas it would manifestly be unfair to the present owners of municipal water bonds to be taxed on the income derived from such bonds, when the bonds were sold on the basis that such income was legally tax-exempt: Therefore be it

Resolved by the board of directors of the American Water Works Association at the annual meeting assembled in New York on January 18, 1939, That it oppose any Federal taxation of already issued water supply or other securities of the States, their subdivisions, and agencies; and that the right of the Federal Government to tax future issues of securities of the States, their subdivisions, and agencies should only be granted if the consent of the States is first secured through the adoption of a constitutional amendment that would guarantee the reciprocal right of each State to tax future issues of Federal securities as they may be held within the various States.

RESOLUTION OF GREAT AMERICAN PROSPECTORS ASSOCIATION

Mr. KING. I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys a resolution of the Great American Prospectors Association, together with a letter of transmittal thereof.

There being no objection, the resolution and letter were referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE GREAT AMERICAN PROSPECTORS ASSOCIATION,
Salt Lake City, Utah, February 22, 1939.

HON. WILLIAM H. KING,
United States Capitol, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR KING: I am enclosing herewith copy of a resolution which was adopted by the executive committee of The Great American Prospectors Association, asking that the moratorium on annual assessment work on unpatented mining claims be discontinued.

We contacted several hundred of our members, so that the executive committee would have something to work from. This moratorium on assessment work on unpatented mining claims is becoming an abuse, and by the wording and conditions under which the moratorium and its continuance from year to year has been passed it will nearly be impossible for the prospector to get anyone interested in his claim or claims as the cost of looking up title would be too great unless he had a phenomenal discovery. Therefore, the greater number of bona fide prospectors are against continuance of a moratorium on assessment work.

Trusting that you will see this matter as the committee does, and if so you will do what you can for the discontinuance of the moratorium. I have the honor, my dear Senator KING, to be

Your most obedient servant,

GEO. H. WATSON, Scribe.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
February 25, 1939.

MR. GEORGE H. WATSON,
Scribe, the Great American Prospectors' Association,
22½ East First South, Salt Lake City, Utah.

MY DEAR MR. WATSON: I am in receipt of your letter of February 22, enclosing a copy of a resolution adopted by your association asking that the moratorium on annual assessment work on unpatented mining claims be discontinued.

I am glad to receive your letter and shall bring it to the attention of the Senate and the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate.

With all good wishes, I am,
Cordially and sincerely yours,

W. H. KING.

Whereas the moratorium on annual labor on unpatented mining claims has been in force for several years and this exemption has been very helpful to the prospector during the depression and has saved his claims for him, for which he is very grateful to Congress; and

Whereas this association now feels that the depression is clearing to the extent that this moratorium is no longer necessary or advisable and should be discontinued: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Great American Prospectors' Association hereby urgently request all Members of the Senate and House of the Congress of the United States not to further extend the exemption of annual labor on unpatented mining claims.

COMMITTEE REPORTS FILED DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under the order of the 23d instant, the following reports of committees were filed on February 24, 1939, during adjournment of the Senate:

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 18) authorizing payment to the San Carlos Apache Indians for the lands ceded by them in the agreement of February 25, 1896, ratified by the act of June 10, 1896, and reopening such lands to mineral entry, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 109) thereon.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3790) relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 112) thereon.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on February 23, 1939, that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 1102) to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BORAH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 752) to amend section 78 of chapter 231, Thirty-sixth United States Statutes at Large (36 Stat. L., sec. 1109), relating to one judicial district to be known as the district of Idaho, and dividing it into four divisions, to be known as the northern, central, southern, and eastern divisions, defining the territory embraced in said divisions, fixing the terms of district court for said divisions, requiring the clerk of the court to maintain an office in charge of himself or deputy at Coeur d'Alene City, Idaho; Moscow, Idaho; Boise City, Idaho; and Pocatello, Idaho; and to authorize the United States District Court for the District of Idaho, by rule or order, to make such changes in the description or names to conform to such changes of description or names of counties in said divisions as the Legislature of Idaho may hereafter make, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 113) thereon.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 811) for the relief of George A. Rogers, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 114) thereon.

Mr. SMATHERS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 661) for the relief of Ida A. Deaver, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 115) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 59) authorizing the Bureau of Labor Statistics to collect information as to amount and value of all goods produced in State and Federal prisons, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 116) thereon.

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 1363) to amend subsection (4) of subsection (c) of section 101 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 117) thereon.

S. 1615. A bill to authorize the appointment of female dietitians and female physiotherapy and occupational therapy aides in the Medical Department of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLARK of Idaho:

S. 1616. A bill for the relief of Charles E. La Vatta; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HARRISON:

S. 1617. A bill for the relief of John Nicholas Chicouras; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. BROWN:

S. 1618. A bill granting an annuity to William F. Pack; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(Mr. ANDREWS introduced Senate Joint Resolution 79, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. MEAD:

S. J. Res. 80. Joint resolution to determine the nature and effect of economic conditions or statutory provisions tending to produce unfair or inequitable discrimination on the basis of age in obtaining and retaining employment in public service and private industry; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE—AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution for appropriate reference and ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Florida will be received, properly referred, and, without objection, printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 79) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to old-age assistance was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring thereto), That the Congress shall have power to levy taxes for old-age assistance.

SEC. 2. This section shall become a part of the Constitution of the United States upon its ratification by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that there seems to be some doubt as to Congress being authorized, even under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution, to enact a law for raising revenue by levying a tax to be kept in a separate fund and paid out only for old-age assistance, it has occurred to me to submit this proposed constitutional amendment, which provides in simple terms that "The Congress shall have power to levy taxes for old-age assistance." Under this authority Congress could provide a simple sales tax or transaction tax as easy to administer as the present Federal gasoline tax.

The present program of combining all appropriations of money for old-age assistance with that raised by a tax on pay rolls under the Social Security Act is held by our Supreme Court to be within the implied powers of the general-welfare clause of the Constitution and is no doubt helpful and a step in the right direction. However, such meager funds are not only indefinite but admittedly inadequate to provide the necessities of life even for the comparatively few needy persons who are fortunate enough to qualify for old-age assistance under it.

We are all receiving thousands of letters and petitions regarding the inadequacy of the present program for old-age assistance from all sections of our country, and since it is a matter of national interest bearing upon the welfare of not only our old people but of the younger people, who should be kept in school and under parental influence through youth's adolescent years, I feel that each State should have the opportunity to pass judgment upon it. I therefore submit this amendment for the consideration of Congress, with the hope that action will be taken at this session.

The amendment, if adopted and ratified, does not undertake to state the form nor the amount of the tax, leaving that to be provided in an enabling act of Congress. A little later I shall address the Senate explaining the necessity for this resolution.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 4278) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

THE PECAN INDUSTRY—DUTY ON CASHEW NUTS

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, the one industry which claims that the wage-hour law has injured it more than any other is the pecan industry. For the past 5 years the figures show that the importation of cashew nuts into this country has damaged all domestic nut industries, particularly the pecan industry.

In 1937 I offered an amendment to a tariff or revenue bill to raise the duty on cashew nuts from 2 cents a pound to 14 cents a pound. I now resubmit that amendment; and it is my intention to offer it, at the proper time, as an amendment to the revenue bill which is coming over from the House.

I ask that the amendment may be printed, printed in the RECORD, and lie on the table for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. LEE to the bill (H. R. —) to provide revenue, etc., viz: At the proper place, insert the following:

"That so much of paragraph 761 of Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, as reads 'Cashew nuts, shelled or unshelled, 2 cents per pound,' is hereby amended to read as follows: 'Cashew nuts, shelled or unshelled, 14 cents a pound.'"

REGULATION, CONTROL, OR PROTECTION OF FISHERIES—AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of California submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 240) to fix the definition and application of certain terms used in the navigation and steamboat inspection laws with reference to the fishing industries and the vessels employed therein, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

PURCHASE OF SUPPLIES AND MAKING OF CONTRACTS—AMENDMENT

Mr. WILEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1032) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States," and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed.

WATER POLLUTION CONTROL—AMENDMENTS

Mr. DANAHER submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 685) to create a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

IMPORT TAX ON CERTAIN FISH OILS—AMENDMENT

Mr. BAILEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3790) relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BAILEY also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 4492, the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, 1940, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place, under the heading "Office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General," to insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used for the purchase of twine which is not made of cotton, except in cases where such purchase is necessary in order to fulfill contractual obligations of the United States entered into prior to the date of enactment of this act."

EXPENDITURES FOR SURVEYS AND MAPPING

Mr. HAYDEN. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 87) was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretaries of War, Commerce, and the Interior are hereby requested to confer and jointly to submit to the Senate as soon as practicable a report outlining the necessity for additional surveys and mapping in the United States, and to advise the Senate as to what would be proper expenditures for that purpose.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. NEELY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 88), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized, during the Seventy-sixth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

DEFICIENCY JUDGMENTS IN CONNECTION WITH REAL-ESTATE LOANS

Mr. SHIPSTEAD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 89), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration is requested to make a full and complete report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date with respect to the deficiency judgments which have been obtained by the Federal land banks and the land bank commissioner in connection with loans made upon the security of real property. Such report shall include information with respect to (1) the number and total face amount of such judgments obtained by each of such banks and by the land bank commissioner, (2) the sums which have been collected upon such judgments, and (3) any other facts in connection with the obtaining or collection of such judgments which the Governor may deem to be of interest to the Senate. Such information shall be listed by States and by calendar years and shall cover each of the years in which any such judgments may have been obtained by such banks or by the land bank commissioner. For the purpose of this resolution any deficiency judgment which may have been obtained by the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation shall be deemed to have been obtained by the land bank commissioner.

PRINTING OF TREATISE ON IRRIGATION AND RECLAMATION

Mr. HAYDEN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 90), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That certain correspondence and papers exchanged between the Bureau of Reclamation and Senator CARL HAYDEN, consisting of a treatise on What Federal Reclamation Means to the United States and a discussion on the national irrigation policy, its development and its significance, be printed as a Senate document, with illustrations.

THE STABILIZATION FUND

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD correspondence between the Secretary of the Treasury and myself, in which he regrettably indicates his further unwillingness to inform the Congress and the American people as to the stabilization fund and as to how the $12,000,000 profit was effected.

There being no objection, the correspondence was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 17, 1939.

HON. HENRY MORGENTHAU, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: On my return from Boston I find your letter of February 8 regarding my query to you of February 2.

I would respectfully call your attention to the fact that in my letter I asked you to tell me how the $12,000,000 profit was effected. Yours of February 8 does not give me this information.

If a profit has been made, what harm can there be in giving to the people a post audit of the fund?

I hope you will answer this question, which, I think, is of great importance to the American people.

Very sincerely yours,

H. C. LODGE, Jr.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, February 23, 1939.

HON. HENRY CABOT LODGE, Jr.,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 17, 1939, asking for further information with respect to the stabilization fund.

On February 8, 1939, I furnished you certain information relating to the stabilization fund in reply to your letter of February 2. Senator VANDENBERG, having read the exchange of letters between us, wrote me on February 14, 1939, asking additional questions with respect to the stabilization fund.

As you know, the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, of which you are a member, has before it for consideration a bill to extend the powers under the stabilization fund. I assume that that committee will hold hearings on the bill in the near future. The President has advised the Senate, and I have advised the Banking and Currency Committee, that the Secretary of the Treasury and other representatives of the Treasury Department will be available to discuss with that committee the problems relating to such legislation. Although I am always glad to discuss in correspondence with Members of Congress matters affecting Treasury policy, it seems to me that the appropriate time and place to consider questions you may have with respect to the stabilization fund is at the committee hearings.

Sincerely yours,

H. MORGENTHAU, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

HON. HENRY MORGENTHAU, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have your letter of February 23 regarding my question to you as to how the $12,000,000 profit in the stabilization fund was effected.

I note that you do not answer this question in your letter on the ground that I am a member of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency and that therefore I should ask you those questions in committee.

May I tell you that you are in error? I am not a member of the Banking and Currency Committee. I, therefore, once again request you to answer this simple question which is of interest, not only to me, but to the American people.

Sincerely yours,

H. C. LODGE, Jr.

FEBRUARY 25, 1939.

HON. ROBERT F. WAGNER,

Chairman, Committee on Banking and Currency,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 24, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury relative to my bill requiring a report on the operations of the stabilization fund.

The Secretary bases his refusal to make public the facts about this fund on his belief that I am a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency and can therefore ask him these questions when he appears before the committee.

Inasmuch as I am not a member of the Banking and Currency Committee his argument rests on an error, there therefore is no longer any reason why my resolution should not be promptly reported.

With assurance of my personal esteem, I am,

Sincerely yours,

H. C. LODGE, Jr.
